Subject: "Our Departed Still With Us."

TEXT: "And when he saw the wagons which Joseph had sent to carry him, the spirit of Jacob their father revived. And Israel said: 'It is enough; Joseph, my son, is yet alive.'"—Genesis xlv., 27-28.

The Egyptian capital was the focus of the world's wealth. In ships and barges there had been brought to it from India frankincense, cinnamon, and ivory, and diamonds; from the North, marble and iron; from Syria, purple and silk; from Greece some of the finest horses of the world, and some of the most brilliant chariots; and from all the earth that which could best please the eye, and charm the ear, and gratify the taste. There were temples aflame with red sandstone, entered by gateways that were guarded by pillars bewildering with hieroglyphics, and wound with brazen serpents, and adorned with winged creatures—their eyes, and beaks, and pinions glittering with precious stones. There were marble columns blooming into white flower buds; there were pillars, at the top burning into the shape of the lotus when in full bloom. Along the avenues, lined with sphinx and fane and obelisk, there were princes who came in gorgeously upholstered palanquins, carried by servants in scarlet, or elsewhere drawn by vehicles, the snow-white horses golden bitted, and six abreast dashing at full run. There were fountains from stone-wreathed vases climbing the ladders of the light. You would hear a bolt shove, and a door would swing open like a flash of the sun. The surrounding gardens were saturated with odors that mounted the terrace, and dripped from the arbors, and burned their incense in the Egyptian noon. On floors of mosaic the glories of Pharaoh were spelled out in letters of porphyry, and beryl, and flame. There were ornaments twisted from the wood of the tamarisk, embossed with [illegible] into form. There were footstools made out of a single precious stone. There were beds fashioned out of a crouching lion in bronze. There were chairs spotted with the sleek hide of leopards. There were sofas footed with the claws of wild beasts, and armed with the beaks of birds. As you stand on the level beach of the sea on a summer day, and look either way, and there are miles of breakers, white with [illegible] foam, dashing shoreward, so it seemed as if the sea of the world's pomp and wealth in the Egyptian capital for miles and miles flung itself up into white breakers of marble temple, mausoleum, and obelisk.

This was the place where Joseph, the shepherd boy, was called to stand next to Pharaoh in power. What a contrast between this scene and his humble starting, and the pit into which his brothers threw him. Yet he was not forgetful of his early home; he was not ashamed of where he came from. The Bishop of Mentz, descended from a wheelwright, covered his house with spokes, and hammers, and wheels, and the King of Sicily, in honor of his father, who was a potter, refused to drink out of anything but an earthen vessel. So Joseph was not ashamed of his early surroundings, or of his old-time father, or of his brothers. When they came up from the famine-stricken land to get corn from the King's corn crib, Joseph, instead of chiding them for the way they had maltreated and abused him, sent them back with wagons, which Pharaoh furnished, laden with corn; and old Jacob, the father, in the very same wagons, was brought back, that Joseph, the son, might see him, and give him a comfortable home all the rest of his days.

Well, I hear the wagons, the King's wagons, rumbling down in front of the palace. On the outside of the palace, to see the wagons go off, stands Pharaoh in royal robes; and beside him Prime Minister Joseph, with a chain of gold around his neck, and on his hand a ring given by Pharaoh to him, so that any time he wanted to stamp the royal seal upon a document he could do so. Wagon after wagon rolls on down from the palace, laden with corn and meat, and changes of raiment, and everything that could help a famine-struck people. One day I see aged Jacob seated in front of his house. He is possibly thinking of his absent boys (sons, however old they get, are never to a father any more than boys), and while he is seated there, he sees dust arising, and he hears wagons rumbling, and he wonders what is coming now, for the whole land had been smitten with the famine, and was in silence. But after a while the wagons have come near enough, and he sees his sons on the wagons, and before they come quite up, they shout: "Joseph is yet alive!" The old man faints dead away. I do not wonder at it. The boys tell the story how that the boy, the long-absent Joseph, has got to be the first man in the Egyptian palace. While they unload the wagons, the wan and wasted creatures in the neighborhood come up and ask for a handful of corn, and they are satisfied.

One day the wagons are brought up, for Jacob, the old father, is about to go to see Joseph in the Egyptian palace. You know it is not a very easy thing to transplant an old tree, and Jacob has hard work to get away from the place where he has lived so long. He bids good-bye to the old place, and leaves his blessing with the neighbors, and then his sons steady him, while he, determined to help himself, gets into the wagon, stiff, old and decrepit. Yonder they go, Jacob and his sons, and their wives, and their children, eighty-two in all, followed by herds and flocks, which the herdsmen drive along. They are going out from famine to luxuriance; they are going from a plain country home to the finest palace under the sun. Joseph, the Prime Minister, gets in his chariot, and drives down to meet the old man. Joseph's charioteer holds up the horses on one side—the dust-covered wagons of the emigrants stop on the other. Joseph, instead of waiting for his father to come, leaps out of the chariot and jumps into the emigrants' wagon, throws his arms around the old man, and weeps aloud for past memories and present joy. The father, Jacob, can hardly think it is his boy. Why, the smooth brow of childhood has become a wrinkled brow, wrinkled with the cares of state, and the garb of the shepherd-boy has become a robe royally bedizened! But as the old man finds out it is actually Joseph, I see the thin lip quiver against the toothless gum as he cries out: "Now let me die, since I have seen thy face; behold Joseph is yet alive!" The wagons roll up in front of the palace. Help out the grandchildren, and take them in out of the hot Egyptian sun. Help old Jacob out of the wagon. Send word to Pharaoh that the old shepherd has come. In the royal apartment Pharaoh and Jacob meet—dignity and rusticity—the gracefulness of the court and the plain manners of the field. The King, wanting to make the old countryman at ease, and seeing how white his beard is, and how feeble his step, looks familiarly into his face, and says to the aged man: "How old art thou?" Give the old man a seat. Unload the wagons; drive out the cattle toward the pastures of Goshen. Let the slaves in scarlet kneel and wash the feet of the newly-arrived, wiping them on the finest linen of the palace. From vases of perfume let the newly-arrived be sprinkled and refreshed; let minstrels come in with sandals of crimson, and thrum the harps, and clap the cymbals, and jingle the tambourines, while we sit down, at this great distance of time and space, and learn the lesson of the King's wagons.

My friends, we are in a world by sin famine-struck; but the King is in constant communication with us, his wagons coming and going perpetually; and in the rest of my discourse I will show you what the wagons bring and what they take back.

In the first place, like those that came from the Egyptian palace, the King's wagons now bring us corn and meat, and many changes of raiment. We are apt to think of the fields and the orchards as feeding us; but who makes the flax grow for the linen, and the wheat for the bread, and the wool on the sheep's back? Oh, I wish we could see through every grain field, by every sheep fold, under the trees of every orchard, the King's wagons. They drive up three times a day—morning, noon, and night. They bring furs from the Arctic, they bring fruits from the tropic, they bring bread from the temperate zone. The King looks out, and he says: "There are twelve hundred millions of people to be fed and clothed. So many pounds of meat, so many barrels of flour, so many yards of cloth, and linen and flannel, so many hats, so many socks, so many shoes;" enough for all, save that we who are greedy get more shoes than belong to us, and others go barefooted. None but a God could feed and clothe the world. None but a King's corn-crib could appease the world's famine. None but a King could tell how many wagons to send, and how heavily to load them, and when they are to start. They are coming over the frozen ground to-day. Do you not hear their rumbling? They will stop at noon at your table. Oh, if for a little while they should cease, hunger would come into the nations, as to Utica when Hamilcar besieged it, and as in Jerusalem when Vespasian surrounded it; and the nations would be hollow-eyed, and fall upon each other in universal cannibalism; and skeleton would drop upon skeleton; and there would be no one to bury the dead; and the earth would be a field of bleached skeletons; and the birds of prey would fall dead, flock after flock, without any carcasses to devour; and the earth in silence would wheel around, one great black hearse! All life stopped because the King's wagons are stopped. Oh, thank God for bread—for bread!

I remark again, that like those that came from the Egyptian palace, the King's wagons bring us good news. Jacob had not heard from his boy for a great many years. He never thought of him but with a heart-ache. There was in Jacob's heart a room where lay the corpse of his unburied Joseph; and when the wagons came, the King's wagons, and told him that Joseph was yet alive, he faints dead away. Good news for Jacob! Good news for us! The King's wagons come down and tell us that our Joseph-Jesus is yet alive; that He has forgiven us because we threw Him into the pit of suffering and the dungeon of shame. He has risen from thence to stand in a palace. The Bethlehem shepherds were awakened at midnight by the rattling of the wagons that brought the tidings. Our Joseph-Jesus sends us a message of pardon, of life, of heaven; corn for our hunger, raiment for our nakedness. Joseph-Jesus is yet alive!

I go to hunt up Jesus. I go to the village of Bethany, and say: "Where does Mary live?" They say: "Yonder Mary lives." I go in. I see where she sat in the sitting-room. I go out where Martha worked in the kitchen, but I find no Jesus. I go into Pilate's court-room, and I find the judges and the police and the prisoner's box, but no Jesus. I go into the Arimathean cemetery; but the door is gone, and the shroud is gone, and Jesus is gone. By faith I look up to the King's palace; and behold I have found him! Joseph-Jesus is still alive! Glorious religion, a religion made not out of death's heads, and cross-bones, and undertaker's screw-driver, but one bounding with life, and sympathy and gladness. Joseph is yet alive!

"I know that my Redeemer lives,
What comfort this sweet sentence gives!
He lives, He lives, who once was dead,
He lives, my ever-living Head!

"He lives to grant me daily breath,
He lives, and I shall conquer death,
He lives my mansion to prepare,
He lives to bring me safely there.

"He lives, all glory to His name;
He lives, my Jesus, still the same,
Oh, the sweet joy this sentence gives,
I know that my Redeemer lives!"

The King's wagons will after a while unload, and they will turn around, and they will go back to the palace, and I really think that you and I will go with them. The King will not leave us in this famine-stricken world. The King has ordered that we be lifted into the wagons, and that we go over into Goshen where there shall be pasturage for our largest flock of joy, and then we will drive up to the palace, where there are glories awaiting us which will melt all the snow of Egyptian marble into forgetfulness.

I think that the King's wagons will take us up to see our lost friends. Jacob's chief anticipation was not seeing the Nile, nor of seeing the long colonnades of architectural beauty, nor of seeing the throne-room. There was a focus to all his journeyings, to all his anticipations; and that was Joseph. Well, my friends, I do not think heaven would be worth much if our brother Jesus was not there. If there were two heavens, the one with all the pomp and paraphernalia of an eternal monarchy, but no Christ, and the other were a plain heaven, humbly thatched, with a few daisies in the yard, and Christ were there I would say: "Let the King's wagons take me up to the old farm-house."

If Jesus were not in heaven, there would be no music there; there would be but few people there; they would be off looking for the lost Christ, crying through the universe: "Where is Jesus! where is Jesus?" and after they had found him, with loving violence they would take him and bear him through the gates; and it would be the greatest day known in heaven within the memory of the oldest inhabitant. Jesus never went off from heaven but once, and He was so badly treated on that excursion they will never let Him go again.

Oh, the joy of meeting our brother, Joseph-Jesus! After we have talked about Him for ten, or fifty, or seventy years, to talk with Him, and to clasp hands with the hero of the ages; not crouching as underlings in His presence, but, as Jacob and Joseph, hug each other. We will want some new term by which to address Him. On earth we call Him Saviour, or Redeemer, or friend; but when we throw our arms around Him in everlasting embrace, we will want some new name of endearment. I can think of what we shall do through the long ages of eternity; but what we shall do the first minute I cannot guess. In the first flash of His countenance, in the first rush of our emotions, what we shall do I cannot imagine. Oh, the overwhelming glory of the first sixty seconds in heaven! Methinks we will just stand, and look, and look, and look.

The King's wagons took Jacob up to see his lost boy, and so I really think that the King's wagons will take us up to see our lost kindred. How long is it since Joseph went out of your household? How many years is it now last Christmas, or the fourteenth of next month? It was a dark night when he died, and a stormy day it was at the burial; and the clouds wept with you, and the winds sighed for the dead. The bell at Greenwood's gate rang only a few moments, but your heart has been tolling, tolling, ever since. You have been under a delusion, like Jacob of old. You have thought that Joseph was dead. You put his name first in the birth-record of the family Bible, and then you put it in the death-record of the family Bible, and you have been deceived. Joseph is yet alive. He is more alive than you are. Of all the sixteen thousand millions of children that statisticians say have gone into the future world, there is not one of them dead, and the King's wagons will take you up to see them. You often think how glad you will be to see them. Have you never thought, my brother, my sister, how glad they will be to see you? Jacob was no more glad to see Joseph than Joseph was to see Jacob. Every time the door in Heaven opens, they look to see if it is you coming in. Joseph, once standing in the palace, burst out crying when he thought of Jacob—afar off. And the heaven of your little ones will not be fairly begun until you get there. All the kindnesses shown them by immortals will not make them forget you. There they are, the raidiant throngs that went out from your homes! I throw a kiss to the sweet darlings. They are all well now in the palace. The crippled child has a sound foot now. A little lame child says: "Ma, will I be lame in heaven?" "No, my darling, you won't be lame in heaven." A little sick child says: "Ma, will I be sick in heaven." "No, my dear, you won't be sick in heaven?" A little blind child says: "Ma, will I be blind in heaven?" "No, my dear, you won't be blind in heaven." They are all well there.

In my boyhood, for some time we lived three miles from church, and on stormy days the children staid at home, but father and mother always went to church; that was a habit they had. On those stormy Sabbaths when we staid at home, the absence of our parents seemed very much protracted, for the roads were very bad, and they could not get on very fast. So we would go to the window at twelve o'clock to see if they were coming, and then we would go at half-past twelve to see if they were coming, and at quarter to one, and then at one o'clock. After a while, Mary, or David, or DeWitt would shout: "The wagon's coming!" and then we would see it winding out of the woods, and over the brook, and through the lane, and up in front of the old farm-house; and then we would rush out, leaving the doors wide open, with many things to tell them, asking them many questions. Well, my dear brethren, I think we are many of us in the King's wagons, and we are on the way home. The road is very bad, and we get on slowly; but after a while we will come winding out of the woods, and through the brook of death, and up in front of the old heavenly homestead; and our departed kindred, who have been waiting and watching for us, will rush out through the doors and over the lawn, crying: "The wagons are coming! the King's wagons are coming!" Hark! the bell of the City Hall strikes twelve. Twelve o'clock on earth, and likewise it is high noon in heaven.

Does not the subject of to-day take the gloom out of the thoughts that would otherwise be struck through with midnight? We used to think that when we died we would have to go afoot, sagging down in the mire, and the hounds of terror might get after us, and if we got through into Heaven at all, we would come in torn, and wounded, and bleeding. I remember when my teeth chattered and my knees knocked together when I heard anybody talk about death; but I have come to think that the grave will be the softest bed I ever slept in, and the bottom of my feet will not be wet with the passage of the Jordan. "Them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him."

I was reading of Robert Southey, who said he wished he could die far away from his friends—like a dog, crawling into a corner and dying unobserved. These were his words. Be it ours to die on a couch surrounded by loved ones, so that they with us may hear the glad, sweet, jubilant announcement: "The King's wagons are coming." Hark! I hear them now. Are they coming for you or me?

A WESTERN mining superintendent says that in 1852 he put up the first tail flume in California at French Corral and after taking out a few hundred dollars worth of ore "salted" the mine and sold it for $[illegible]. The tenderfeet, of whose innocence he had taken advantage, were able, however, to clean up $100,000 out of it [illegible].

The Tongue.

"The boneless tongue, so small and weak,
Can crush and kill," declared the Greek.

"The tongue destroys a greater horde,"
The Turk asserts, "than does the sword."

The Persian proverb wisely saith,
"A lengthy tongue—an early death."

Or sometimes takes this form instead,
"Don't let your tongue cut off your head."

"The tongue can speak a word whose speed,"
Says the Chinese, "outstrips the steed."

While Arab sages this impart,
"The tongue's great store-house is the heart."

From Hebrew wit the maxim sprung,
"Though feet should slip, ne'er let the tongue."

The sacred writer crowns the whole,
"Who keeps his tongue doth keep his soul."

"CHUNK."

That's what everybody called her—"Chunk."

And a "chunk" she was.

Being so plump and round and pretty when she was a child was why Mary Elizabeth was discarded for the more appropriate and descriptive "Chunk." Few people knew her real name. She didn't know it until she married Tom Hubbard, when she heard the minister call it.

But that didn't matter. Any name suited her when Tom called her by it. Tom thought there was not another woman in all the world like Chunk, and he was not far wrong, for she was a queer one. Anyway, she loved Tom and wouldn't give the flip of your finger for any one else. She had never seen many people in her whole life, having always lived hid away in the pine mountains on the Chattahoochee river, but she had seen Tom and loved and married him, and was happy in her seclusion.

It is a queer life they led. A small field of corn supplied their bread and a few patches about the house afforded vegetables for table use. They had traps in the river, too, and caught lots of fish which they carried to the store out on the State road several miles distant and traded for articles of need and luxury. Wild geese and ducks also were to be had at times, and disposed of in the same manner, for you must know these fowls following the instinct of nature flee the chilling frosts of the northern winter to bask in the southern sun. A light row boat served both to visit the traps and to ferry pedestrians across the river, from which service a dime was sometimes realized.

Thus, "by hook and by crook," as the term goes, they made a scant living, but a happy one.

Chunk, for the most part, attended to the traps, conveyed passengers across the river and handled the gun with all the cleverness of an expert. As for her being afraid, Tom told the men at the store that she was not afraid of "old Nick himself," and her actions fully verified the statement.

When Tom was tending the little farm or was gone to the store Chunk took the gun in the boat and went to the traps, often returning with the bottom of the boat covered with fish. Failing in this, she took a circuitous route from the landing to the house, going through the heavily timbered forest, tripping noiselessly along, all the while on the lookout for squirrels.

"What luck terday, Chunk?" asked Tom one night in early spring, when he had returned from the store.

"Only toler'ble. Got er right smart chance er fish, two geese an' some squirl's."

"I'll hatter go back ter ther sto' ergin in ther mornin', I reckon."

"Not er bliseter. I put ther fish in ther box in ther river, an' they'll keep. Yer ken salt down ther geese an' ther squirl's, an' they won't spile. I 'spec's them's ther last geese we'll git this season, for ther weather's turnin' warm, an' they're most all gone. Yer kin wait till day after termorrow fer go ter ther sto' ef ye'd ruther."

"Yes, that's so. Who was that er [illegible] uv his hogs down ter ther landin' this evenin' jes' as I got home?"

[illegible] to cross." Then after a while: "Tom he says they's er place 'bout twenty miles down ther river whar ther houses is thick es them trees on Bluff hill, an' they's mo' people lives in 'em than they is fish on ther river. An' he says that's whar they made cloth an' ever thing we use. An' he says they have great big things ter haul on, longer'n f'um here to ther river."

"He's er lie. Whut's gwineter pull that big wagin? Couldn't git ernough hosses in er ten-acre fiel' ter pull it."

"He says they don't nothin' pull it. It jes' runs itself. An' says ef we wus thar we could wear fine sto' bought clo'se an' not do nothin' but whut we wanted to."

Tom was incredulous, but Chunk was firm in her conviction that there was something of it. After some further discussion the subject was dropped, and Chunk remained silent and thoughtful. Her mind wandered away from the weird scenes of her past life, and she dreamed of cities, factories and railroads, and the gay, fashionable life of civilization. She saw herself clad in fine dresses, and Tom's look of admiration. And she saw Tom—her own dear Tom—wearing with becoming dignity the gaudiest apparel money could buy.

All this had been told her and she believed it.

The hours dragged wearily by, and when, by appointment, two days later, the "sto' bought" man returned to cross, he found Chunk at the landing waiting for him.

* * * * *

"Eh! Chunk mus' be atter some mo' geese," said Tom, when he had prepared dinner. "Reckon some er ther traps is outer fix an' Chunk ain' gointer leave 'em till she gits 'em right. She's er mighty hard un ter turn down when she sets her head an' her head is mighty nigh always sot. Sometimes when we go ter ther traps tergether an' finds 'em to up, and works at 'em till 'bout dinner time, I says: 'Chunk dad blame it all, I'm hongry, less quit.' An' she'll say: 'Wal, you ken quit ef yer wants ter, but I'm gwineter fix the fetched thing 'fo' I stop.' When she say that, hits 'Katy bar ther do', then, fer she's gwineter do it."

With this satisfactory solution of the non-appearance of his wife, Tom spread a quilt upon the floor between the two doors of his cabin where he could catch the cool river breezes and gave himself to sleep.

When he awoke his companion had not returned, and closing the cabin door behind him he walked down to the boat landing. The boat was gone and Chunk was nowhere to be seen.

He went up the river and down the river, vainly straining his eyes across the broad expanse of water to catch a glimpse of his companion, but the only moving objects visible were the waves.

Evening came. He quickened his pace hurrying here and yonder with uneasy footsteps, now and then sending a loud whoop across the roaring waters.

But no response.

Night set in and he became frantic. Rushing wildly through the swamps or dashing blindly from crag to crag along the steep mountain side, he sent pleading cries on the night air, only to be echoed by a neighboring hill or lost in the recesses of the mountain. All night he spent thus, and in the morning when the merry waves rippling in the bright sun seemed laughing at his grief, he fell down on his face exhausted and heart-broken.

Many long days had passed, and the poor husband had wandered the river and mountains over, but nothing had been seen or heard of the dear wife of his bosom. Then he returned home.

Home? The place that had been home, for it was home no more. The place had no charms for him now since the object that made home happy was fled. He took no more pleasure in hunting, fishing, or tending the farm. The traps were never visited and the boat had disappeared with Chunk on that memorable day; the gun lay rusting in the rack and [illegible]

He spent the day still wandering up and down the river and waiting at the landing for the boat to bring back its precious cargo, returning to the house to get his meals and pass the nights in restless dreams.

One night as he bent over the fire, preparing his lonely supper, a woman's form glided noiselessly in and stood behind him. It was Chunk pale and nervous.

He turned around.

"Chunk!"

"Tom!"

That was all they said as they embraced each other, but the long pent up tears flowed down the weather-beaten cheeks of the man, while the woman cried like a penitent child.

There is a new boat at the landing now, and the old gun, after being well oiled, is doing good service in the hands of its old mistress.

Chunk had seen the busy city of Columbus, with its railroads and factories, but the Chattahoochee river and the pine mountains of Harris county and Tom could not be forgotten.—[Atlanta Constitution.

Why Rocks Appear to Grow.

The belief that rocks and stones, especially the loose bowlders found in the drift, have grown and are growing in their present situation is not uncommon among ignorant people, says the New York Telegram. At certain points on the coast of Maine the fishermen are unanimous in their belief that the rocks in the harbors are growing, as they find less water over them than in former years. This is probably true in one sense, as there can be but little doubt that the land is slowly rising. The early settlers of New England, in ploughing up their land for the first time and finding it filled with rounded rocks of every size, from the tiny pebble to the massive bowlder, and knowing nothing of the great ice age and the geological discoveries of more modern times, might well have thought that the stones had grown in situ by some concretionary process; but we now know that they are rather diminishing than increasing in size, and that they have all been transported from the parent ledge by the irrisistible power of moving ice, in many cases hundreds of miles.

Nicotine-Flavored Butter.

An interesting instance is reported by the Agricultural college at Guelph. There were two brothers, both extensive butter makers and exporters; one was a habitual smoker, while the other did not use tobacco in any shape or form. They both sold their butter through an agent on a foreign market, and the one who did not smoke always received a higher price for his butter than the other. Not being able in any other way to find out why this distinction should be made, they at last resolved to change and reverse the labels on the packages as an experiment. In due time a letter was received from the agent stating the strange fact of a very disagreeable taste or flavor in the butter belonging to the one brother which had never been known before; while the other, always with a bad taste before, was now pure and sweet, and worth 2 1-2 cents more per pound in market. The brothers are now convinced that it was the odor of the tobacco which had invaded the butter and injured its flavor.—[Courier-Journal.

Two Hundred Years Ago.

More than two hundred years ago it was customary to place upon drawing-room tables books with sketched portraits of friends and noted people of any century, as at the present time albums and photographic collections are arranged for inspection.

At the same period miniatures upon ivory and richly set were worn as bracelets and lockets, and were held in highest esteem when they were pledges of friendship, acts of homage, or [illegible] as tender keepsakes. [illegible]

PEARLS OF THOUGHT.

Salmon and sermon have their season.

We long most for the things we have missed.

Silks and satins put out the fire in the kitchen.

Nothing costs so much as what is given us.

The taste of the kitchen is better than the smell.

Many weaknesses of human nature are distorted virtues.

Better to go to bed supperless than to get up in debt.

Contentment does not demand conditions, it makes them.

Now is always the very best time if we will only make it so.

The wisest fellows, we think, are those who agree with us.

Whistling doesn't make the locomotive go, it is the silent steam.

Knowledge, like money, increases our responsibility in proportion to the amount obtained.

He must expect to be wretched who pays to beauty, riches or politeness that regard which only virtue and piety can claim.

He that would reckon up all the accidents preferments depend upon, may as well undertake to count the sands or sum up infinity.

Marriage is the strictest tie of perpetual friendship, and there can be no friendship without confidence, and no confidence without integrity.

Emergency Bread of Turnips.

There was a dearth of wheat in England in 1629, 1630 and 1693, and in those years bread was made of turnips. They were boiled until they were soft enough to mash, when the greater part of the water was pressed out of them. An equal weight of wheat meal was then mixed with the pulp, and the dough was made in the usual manner with yeast. The dough rose well in the trough, and after being kneaded was formed into loaves and put in the oven. Bread prepared in this manner had a peculiar sweetish taste, which is said to be not disagreeable; it is as light and white as wheaten bread, and should be kept about twelve hours before being cut, when the smell and taste of the turnip will scarcely be perceptible.—[Good Housekeeping.

The Largest Woman in the World.

It is claimed that the largest woman in the world lives in Springfield, Ky., where she was raised in the family of Mr. J. W. Schader. She is colored, and is but 19 years old and is yet growing very perceptibly. Her name is Sallie McCallister. She is 5 feet 2 inches high, measures 7 feet 3 inches around the waist, and 3 feet 6 1-4 inches around the arm above the elbow. She weighs 632 pounds. Minnie Johnson, who recently died in Baltimore, weighed 738 pounds, when she was on exhibition in this city and was the acknowledged largest person on earth. The McCallister woman makes her living at the wash-tub and enjoys excellent health. She can walk but very little. It is predicted that she will soon weigh more than Minnie Johnson ever did.

Horse-Shoe Superstitions.

The American Notes and Queries has a long paper which discusses the superstition of the horse-shoe. It says: The belief in the horse-shoe attained its greatest diffusion at the end of the last century and the beginning of this. Aubrey, in his "Miscellanies" tells us that in his time most houses in the west end of London had a horse-shoe nailed over the threshold. In 1813 Sir Henry Ellis counted 17 horseshoes in Monmouth street, but in 1841 only five or six remained. Lord Nelson nailed a horseshoe to the mast of the Victory and "Lucky Dr. James" [illegible]

A rumor that a secret plot was being formed for the purpose of assassinating Mr. Harrison was given no credence by himself.

Capt. W. L. Bragg, of Montgomery has been re-appointed a member of the inter-State Railroad Commission. His present appointment is for six years.

Mr. W. E. W. Yerbey editor of the Greensboro Watchman was married to Miss Mabel Taylor on the 20th ult. We extend congratulations to our talented confrere.

Sixty knives, fifteen or twenty razors, one revolver and three ropes were found during a search of the cells of the Tennessee penitentiary a few days ago.

It is said that Mr. Morton entertains no very fraternal feeling for Mr. Blaine, therefore the gentleman from Maine may expect no very warm advocacy at the hands of Mr. Morton.

It is said that Gen. Lew Wallace is to have the honor of representing Indiana in the new Cabinent. Gen. Wallace is the author of "Ben Hur," the only novel that Benj. Harrison ever admired.

The Eutaw Whig gives this valuable suggestion that all might consider as they start off with the glad New Year:

"The way to make times good is for everybody to pay up."

A man by the name of Wylv has been arrested and jailed in Birmingham charged with complicity in the Hawes murder. Wyly left Birmingham immediately after the crime was committed and has not been heard of until a detective captured him in Atlanta.

Misses Mary and Lillie Janney, of the Capital city, after spending the holidays with their friends, have returned home. Their departure has made many hearts sad especially among the young men. One young man, who was trying to improve every moment, unconscious of how time was flying was taken off with them on the train.

The New York Sun says: If but a tithe of swams of immigrants that land at this port every month could be induced to turn their eyes southward, but a few years would be needed for the attainment of the ends sought by the Montgomery convention. There is not in the wide world a more inviting field for labor than the Southern States of our Union.

The New Year and Some Dozing Reflections.

While cogitating upon things good, bad and indifferent, we naturally drifted into the "land of nod," and there we had a dream. Painful to say it was a dream of damnation: Our "think-tank" overflowed at the remarkable fact that we had been permitted by the graciousness of a kind Providence to go through such a year as 1888 damned by some because we did, and damned by some others because we didn't, and yet be able to keep out of debt, and have a dime to give to the poor. And if our better two-thirds had glanced at our skeleton-like visage just at that moment she might have been witness to a horrible smile as the aforesaid "think-tank" developed the thought that it was a rare and glorious privilege known only to a poor devil of a country editor to have a lovely swarm of "kickers" of high and low degree to praise and puff, to please and pacify, and at the same time hustle around and make a living out of wind and war without blood-shed. We recalled that it was a little difficult at first, but after noting the utter impossibility of pleasing everybody, and becoming accustomed to the much easier task of pleasing nobody, the novelty of hearing one fellow growl at one thing, and another growl at the opposite thing, grows less inspiring. Such were our reflections, while unconscious that we were thinking of anything dreadful.

When we awoke 1889 had rolled in on us and we were thankful that we were still able to keep out of the rain, and felt that the other fellows ought to be thankful that the Almighty would continue to send his sunshine upon bad as well as good.

With proper effort the new year promises to be one of prosperity to us all. Let us work and hope for the best, and the best will come.

The VIEW returns grateful thanks to those friends and patrons who have assisted it in reaching the success attained, and wishes them one and all a happy and prosperous year.

The Spirit of Improvement.

During the past week we have had opportunity to visit several important points in the county along the L. & N. R. R.

The first place visited was Verbena, where we found things cheerful and business brisk in spite of very bad weather. There is always a bright appearance to this ambitious town, and for beauty of location and surroundings it is unsurpassed by any village on the L. & N. road between Cincinnati and New Orleans, and we have taken pains to notice them all. Near the town is located the famous Pratt Saw Mill, which is the chief lumber industry of the county, and it is pleasant to note that its prosperity and business is on the increase. Verbena has some good business men, and with their united efforts the place will continue on rising ground.

At Jemison things were bright and brisk in keeping with the weather at the time we were there. This place has grown very much within the past few years and has more new residences than any point in the county. A large hotel is now building. Here we found the largest school in in the county under Prof. J. L. Ruffin, a distinguished graduate of the Nashville Normal College. About 90 pupils are in attendance, and Prof. Ruffin is to be congratulated upon the success with which he is meeting. A good hotel is run by that excellent gentleman Mr. E. W. Chapman, and it has a fine run of transient custom. Among the business houses that of I. N. Langston seemed to be driving the largest trade. Mr. Langston is also doing a brisk business with a grist mill. He deserves the success with which he is meeting. Our handsome friend Joe Hill is head-clerk and book-keeper, and seems to grow fatter and better looking the harder he works. Mr. J. J. Honeycutt at the Alliance store is doing a good trade, and his success in managing a co-operative store, proves that he is the man for the place. The Jemison Lumber Co. have a large store and do a good business. They also have a fine lumber mill in active operation near the depot. Jemison is the only point in the county with three church buildings, and they are all neat edifices. Dr. Givhan has a well conducted drug store and Harris & McCrary have a first-class family grocery store and are doing a good business. Dr. H. T. Caffey is a most worthy citizen of the community and has established an extensive practice during his residence there.

At Strasburg we found our always cheerful friend, Mr. J. F. Maull, geting under headway again, and though set back somewhat by the recent burning of his fine saw mill, he has since rebuilt and is "again in the ring." Mr. J. R. Swinford and Mr. B. T. Rasberry are doing a mercantile business at this place, and Mr. Maull has a good business in this line in connection with his saw mill.

In spite of hard times we found improvement at all points.

Jemison Locals.

Dr. F. H. Dunklin has removed to Tennessee, to engage in the practice of his profession. While we regret exceedingly to give up the doctor and his excellent wife, we wish them much success and happiness in their new home, and predict for him a bright and successful career in his profession.

Rev. J. L. Wyatt has moved from Bessemer to Jemison and taken charge of the Presbyterian church for the ensuing year. We welcome him and his wife as neighbors.

The three Sunday schools of our town united in a Christmas tree and celebration, consisting of recitations, selected songs, &c., at the Baptist Church on Xmas eve. The presents distributed to the young folks were numerous and appropriate.

Miss Kate Sherrill, of Autauga, has returned to Jemison, much to the delight of her many friends, and taken her old place as assistant teacher in Jemison High School. This excellent young lady is fitted to adorn any position in life, and we consider her quite an acquisition to our town.

Mr. C. C. Gentry leaves to-morrow to try his fortune in the "Lone Star State." We regret to give him up as he is one of our best farmers.

Prof. Ruffin has returned after a pleasant Xmas visit to his old home, and opened his school with an increased patronage.

Mrs. Anderson, of Birmingham, is visiting her daughter, Mrs. J. M. Harris.

Miss Battie Anderson, of Oxmoor, visited our town during the holidays.

Prof. T. G. Caffey, of Furman, visited Jemison last week.

Misses Laura and Mollie Honeycutt spent the holidays at Deatsville.

The Messrs. Wells, Howard cadets, visited Mrs. Mollie Allen Xmas.

Mr. A. J. Garner and family have removed from Strasburg to Jemison. We welcome all such citizens.

Mr. and Mrs. Crumbie Palmer will take charge of and open the new hotel in Jemison in a few days. We can promise all who stop there something good to eat.

Mr. Johnnie Brantley has moved to Jemison, and acts as assistant at the Alliance store. We are glad to have him as a citizen of our town.

Through the dim vista of the not distant future, we hear the prospective chime of wedding bells. Let the good work go on. We say amen, and amen!

She Flew Away.

San Francisco Wasp.]

"Ma!"

"Well, Mabel?"

"Do angels have wings?"

"I suppose so, child."

"Don't it make them uncomfortable to wear corsets and dresses over them?"

"Why child what are you talking about?"

"Oh, nothing. Only I thought if there were angels here on earth they must fold their wings pretty tight."

"What nonsense!"

"Ma!"

"Well?"

"May I sleep with Cousin Edith to-night?"

"Why?"

"Because I want to see her wings. I heard pa tell her last night she was an angel."

"She won't be here to-night, Mabel, I guess."

"Why, is she going away?"

"Yes, dear. If your father told her she is angel, I'm very much afraid she will fly away before night."

After dinner—"How much mamma knows," said Mabel. "She said Edith would fly away before night, and there is her trunk already packed in the hall for the evening express. I'm going to try and keep awake to see the flying racket."

The body of an unknown dead man was found near Birmingham. He was evidently murdered.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Mrs. T. G. Holt has been visiting Montgomery.

Jack Gullahorn is on a trip to Texas with a view of locating.

Read mortgage sale notice by J. J. Honeycutt, agent and mortgagee.

Prof. R. E. R. Hicks was in town last week, and went to Montgomery.

John C. Lawrence, of Tuskaloosa, visited relatives in Clanton this week.

A negro was jailed last week for hunting a wild hog without permission.

Charley Bivings, of Dunham, visited his parents in Clanton the past week.

Mrs. M. A. Butler has moved her stock of goods into Dr. Johnson's drug store.

Mrs. J. M. Ponder spent the holidays with relatives in her old home, Tuskegee, Ala.

Mrs. E. Chilton and her daughter Miss Jennie, are visiting relatives in Montgomery.

Misses Cora Tarver and Mollie Pettis, of Morgansville, have been visiting friends in Clanton.

Mrs. J. B. Boykin, and Mrs. Wallace Glover, of Verbena, spent several days in Clanton last week

The Mises Janney, of Montgomery, are spending the holidays in Clanton, with Miss Mollie Hanon.

Miss Alice Ross, who has a very good private school in Clanton, is spending the holidays in Opelika with relatives.

Shoes.

I have just replenished my stock of shoes and boots, and have now in stock some of the best shoes I have ever had and a good assortment of sizes. Come and examine my stock before you buy your shoes for the winter.

W. L. SAMPEY.

The "devil" has had is holiday and high carnival and is at work again.

Mrs. A. H. Watts and her sweet little daughter, of Montgomery county, are visiting relatives in Clanton.

Mr. Sam Strock, who is studying for the ministry at Howard college spent the holidays with his parents at Verbena.

Go to Bloom the tailor at No. 7 court street, Montgomery, for anything you may want in the way of fine tailoring

Mr. S. H. Cater, of Montgomery, made a short visit to this place during the holidays, much to the delight of his friends. Come again.

The distressing illness of Mr. McRee tempered the christmas festivities in our town, and the holidays passed away sadly to many.

The finest calendar for 1889 which the VIEW has received is from the old reliable printing house of Roberts & Son, Birmingham.

The VIEW is indebted to State Treasurer Cobbs for a copy of his official report showing the condition of the Treasury on his advent into office.

Mr. W. H. Phillips one of our best citizens, has moved to Montgomery to live. We are sorry to lose Mr. and Mrs. Phillips, but wish them success in their new home.

It is pleasing to witness the thrifty activity at Duke's mill. The business stir which the place presents is a source of encouragement to the generous proprietor.

That clever gentleman, Mr. Adam Courtney, of Verbena, is the father of a nine pound boy, which arrived Christmas eve. May the young man grow to be as good a citizen as his worthy "pa."

Clean the Cemetery.

We are requested to ask that every one who can do so meet at the Clanton cemetery on next Saturday for the purpose of cleaning it of rubbish and weeds.

Read the new double column advertisement of J. Blach & Son of Birmingham. This is a reliable house and can furnish you clothing at astonishingly low figures.

Among the removals are the following which we have heard of: Mrs. Chilton will move into the W. H. Phillips residence. Mr. L. Holt will occupy Mr. John Garner's residence and Mr. Garner will move to his farm across the creek just east of town.

The enterprising drug firm Bains & Porter, of Birmingham never forget to send their christmas presents out and the VIEW was one of the lucky number in Clanton to acknowledge the receipt of a bottle of fine "Milldale firewater."

Died, in this place, on Thursday, the 27th ult., of brain fever, Mr. M. C. McRee, aged about 42 years. Mr. McRee, was a good and useful citizen and his loss will be deeply felt by many sorrowing friend and relatives.

Dol Hill and a man by the name of Lakey became involved in a difficulty at Strasburg on Christmas eve. Hill was cut slightly on the side of the neck and his coat was badly cut behind. Lakey escaped unhurt and is still at large, though a warrant is out for his arrest we understand.

For Sale.

A very desirable residence situated half a mile from town on the Verbena road. The property is new and in excellent order. Terms easy. Apply to or address, R. P. Woolley or Minor Woolley, Clanton, Ala.

A man who has practiced medicine for 40 years ought to know salt from sugar; read what he says:

TOLEDO, O., Jan. 10, 1887.

Messrs. F. J. Cheney & Co.—Gentlemen:—I have been in the general practice of medicine for forty years, and would say that in all my practice and experience, I have never seen a preparation that I could prescribe with as much confidence of success as I can Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by you. Have prescribed it a great many times and its effect is wonderful, and would say in conclusion that I have yet to find a case of Catarrh that it would not cure, if they would take it according to directions.

Yours Truly,
L. L. GORSUCH, M. D.,
Office 215 Summit St.

We will give $100 for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Taken internally.

A PHYSICIAN'S WARNING!

Of all the terrible, soul affrightening curses that afflict all classes of humanity, nothing in all ages has ever approached comparison to the ravages of BLOOD POISON that slow, insatiate destroyer of flesh and life. Alas! How often just such an affliction loves to affect a noble life with its poisonous taint. It strikes with destructive aim the most notable, sparing neither SCROFULA king nor statesmen. Even unto the third generation are the sins of the father made manifest. What a fearful heritage to bequeath an innocent child! Ah! the horrible ravages of this affliction! To its activity is due sore throat SORES sore liver, sore kidneys, sore lungs, sore skin, great ulcers, internal, external and eternal unless proper treatment is applied. The best remedy is a prescription used extensively in private practice by an old Atlanta physician. It is now prepared a thousand gallons at a time, and PIMPLES is sold in large bottles at only one dollar per bottle. It is called B. B. B. or Botanic Blood Balm. Under its peculiar influence the blood poison first becomes passive, then divided, and lastly is exuded through the liver, through the kidneys, and through the pores of the skin.

It is clearly the duty of every one who suspects the least trace of syphilitic or scrofulous poison in their blood, whether recently from contagion or from inheritance, to get it out of their system thoroughly PAIN by the use of this great remedy so that pimples, sores, aches, pains, weak kidneys and other symptoms will not be transmitted to innocent posterity.

Demand it of your druggist and take no substitute. Testimonials from those who have used it may be found in the illustrated "Book of Wonders" sent free to any address by the Blood Balm Co., Atlanta, Ga. (3)

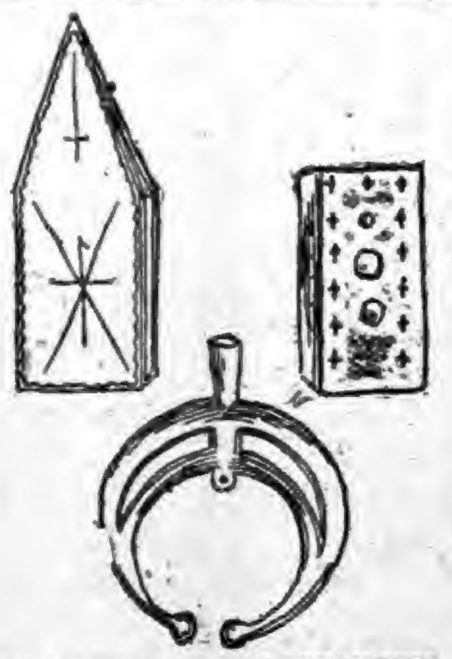
INDIAN JEWELRY.

SILVER ORNAMENTS OF THE PUEBLOS AND NAVAJOES.

Remarkably Effective Results from Very Primitive Implements by the Aboriginal Races of New Mexico.

Despite the vast proportions of the jewelry trade in the United States, there is only one small and little known section of the country which produces what may be called distinctively American jewelry. Of the ancient owners of the soil, the personal adornments were too rude to fairly deserve the name of jewelry; and what little remains of their handiwork is to be seen only in the cabinets of museums and private collections. But in the quaint Territory of New Mexico there still flourish two aboriginal races, wholesale wearers of jewelry, whose silversmiths turn out work unique and characteristic in design, and of remarkable neatness when we consider their rude appliances. These are the Pueblos and Navajoes.

The Pueblos are commonly classed as Indians, but Indians they are not. Pure blooded descendants of the ancient Aztecs or Toltecs—there be ethnologists who pretend to tell which, but their grounds are ludicrously shadowy—(the Pueblos) dwell in neat, substantial adobe houses, till the soil, build irrigating works, weave their blankets and tend their flocks as they did centuries before the first European foot trod the new continent. They are the oldest civilized race in the western hemisphere and the most interesting. Of the countless Pueblo villages whose ruins mark nearly every township of New Mexico, only nineteen are now inhabited. Of the 350,000 Pueblos whom the Spanish conquistadores found, only 9000 remain, but the little remnant is at present holding its own very fairly. This is the simple race whose ancestors made old Mexico and filled it with its wonderful monuments.

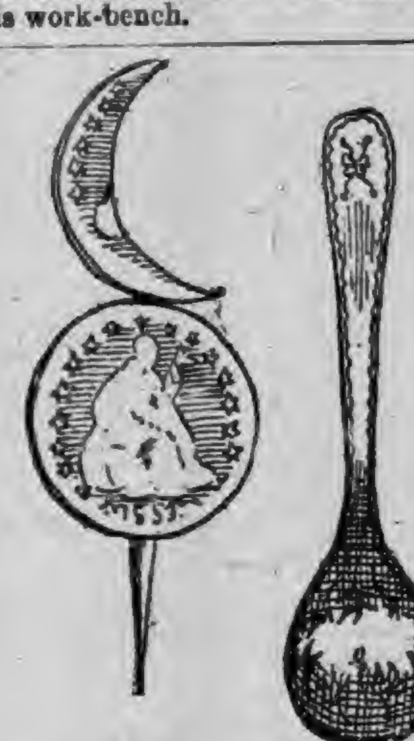


NAVAJO SILVER BRIDLE ORNAMENTS.

The Navajoes, on the other hand, are straight Indians—nomads, warriors and hunters—who never till the soil nor inhabit a house, and whose rude hogans are tenanted no longer than suits their roving disposition. Their only industries are stock-raising, weaving the most beautiful and the most durable blankets known to the world, and thumping out a semi-barbaric, but always graceful, jewelry. The tribe numbers 18,000 souls, supposed to occupy a reservation lying half in New Mexico and half in Arizona, but generally well scattered over the whole circumambient country. The tribe has about $100,000 worth of silver jewelery and ornaments.

Silver is the only metal used by either Pueblo or Navajo for purposes of ornamentation. For gold they have no use whatever. Silver, however, is in universal demand with them, and it is astonishing what store they have of it. Their supply is now drawn almost exclusively from the cart-wheel dollars of the Yankee and Mexican daddies.

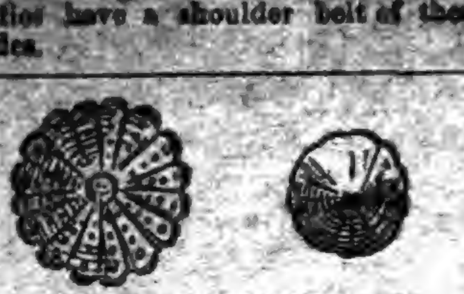
The silversmith among either Pueblos or Navajoes is a person of mighty influence. Upon his inventive and mechanical skill, each aborigine depends for the wherewithal to cut an imposing figure at the feast-day dance or the bet-staggering horse-race. His tools are simple, not to say crude. A hammer or two, a three-cornered file, a rude iron punch or two, and a primitive arrangement for soldering comprise his outfit. If he is a Pueblo, one of the little rooms in his house, equipped with a bench, serves him for workshop; if a Navajo, his smithy is under the alleged shelter of his hogan—an open-faced hovel of cedar branches and earth—and a smooth stone in his work-bench.



PUEBLO DRESSPIN AND NAVAJO SUGAR SPOON.

The simplest form of silver ornament is the button, a decoration of which both races are immensely fond. Neither of them uses the button in its legitimate role of constrained intimacy with a button hole. Some of them wear American vests with American buttons; but the home made silver button is reserved solely for purposes of decoration and not of repression. It serves to set of moccasin, legging, belt, pistol belt, gun scabbard, saddle and bridle, and also the little leathern pouch which goes in lieu of pockets. The commonest button is made from a silver dime, strongly arched, polished smooth, and with a tiny eyelet soldered down in the concavity of the under side, far beyond the reach of a needle, and therefore fastenable only by a wee thong of buckskin. These dime buttons are largely used in decorating the edges of a broad strap or similar article. Buttons made of a 25-cent piece and those from a half dollar are more worn as single ornaments, at knees or throat. I have seen a venerable Navajo with twenty buttons fastened to the welt seam of each legging; each button made of a quarter, and with the die perfect on each, despite the rounded form. From plain buttons to ornamented ones is but a step. The simplest design is made by filling a number of concentric rays upon a button; from this up to really elaborate work there are designs of all sorts.

Akin to the buttons are the striking belt disks, which glisten on every well-to-do Pueblo and Navajo on festal occasions. These are always circular, slightly arched, average four inches in diameter, are handsomely made, and average $3 in weight. From four to a dozen of these are worn, strung upon a narrow thong, as a belt. Some ultra-dandies have a shoulder belt of them besides.



NAVAJO BUTTONS.

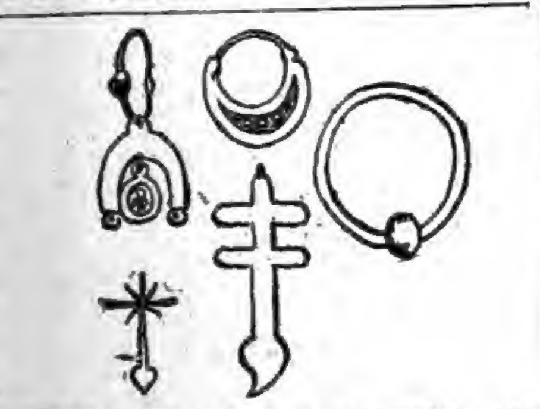
In horse-trappings the well-to-do Navajo is particularly gorgeous. Besides a large weight of sundry silver ornaments on his saddle his "Sunday" bridle is one mass of silver and but an infinitessimal fraction of the leather substratum is visible. It is nothing uncommon to see $40 to $60 weight in silver on one bridle. The straps are covered with silver sheaths, and more or less heavy pendants dangle upon the foretop and from the bits.

The Pueblos occasionally thus besilver their bridles, but are not as daft on the subject as are the Navajoes.

The most popular form of jewelry with both races is the bracelet. In early days it had its useful as well as ornamental adaptation. To protect the wrists from the vicious sting of the bowstring the men very commonly wore a broad wristlet of leather, tied at one side with a buckskin thong. Those who were able to afford it put a silver disk on the upper side of this, making a very striking bracelet.

Ordinarily, however, with both races the bracelet is merely ornamental, and is worn equally by men and women. From one to a dozen may be seen on a single wrist, but the average number is about three. The simplest bracelets—commonest with the Navajoes—are simply round circlets, generally tapering a little to the ends, and marked with little file-cut lines. A silver dollar is usually entirely used up in hammering one of them out.

A step higher are the flat bands, now more in vogue. The Pueblos tend to light ones, and the Navajoes to heavy. Some of these band bracelets are still ornamented with a file, but the prettiest are figured by countless punchings with a little die. The Pueblo silversmiths have invented two designs peculiar to themselves; and sometimes solder a very chaste relief design upon the smooth band, and sometimes tip the ends with little balls. Neither of these fashions has been followed by their cruder neighbors on the west. Indeed, the average of Pueblo workmanship in silver is far above that of the Navajoes, and some of it is really beautiful.



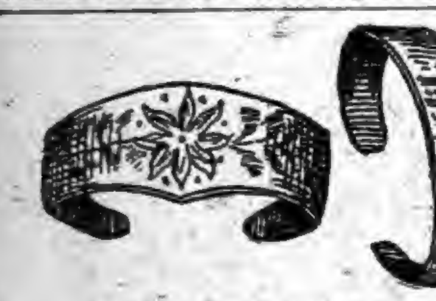
PUEBLO AND NAVAJO EARRINGS AND ACOMA NECKLACE CROSSES.

Next to the bracelet in importance, and also worn by both sexes, is the earring. It does not hurt aboriginal ears to suffer, and one general characteristic of New Mexican native ear gear is its generous weight. The commonest design is a simple, file-marked silver wire, bent to a circle, and with one end filed smaller than the other. The wearers take off their earrings but rarely and the ends of the stiff wire are brought together in the ear with a few hammer taps. A favorite earring is a smooth wire circle with a sliding silver ball on it. Others are made flat. This about covers the Navajo line of ingenuity, but the Pueblo craftsmen devise some decidedly clever designs. A Zuni smith made a very complicated affair, with two native emerald knobs on the lower extremities, and a pair of Acoma earrings and graceful crescents, with an attempt at filigree filling. Both are shown in one of the cuts.

Both these rather uncommon specimens fasten with a hinged catch.

Beads of some sort are indispensable to the happiness of either Pueblo or Navajo, and only three varieties are used—coral, silver and shell. The coral necklaces are of the very best—it is impossible to fool these fellows on coral—are long enough to go from two to six times around the neck in a loose loop, and sometimes cost as high as $100. Trinkets of any sort are very seldom hung to a coral necklace. These are bought, of course, from the American traders. Shell necklaces are the most common, and are highly prized. The most valuable are of unknown antiquity and of an unknown shell, thin, pinkish, and cut into little discs about one-fourth of an inch in diameter. The commoner ones are made from a heavier and pinker shell. Where these shells come from no one knows. There is a fortune awaiting the white man who can find out.

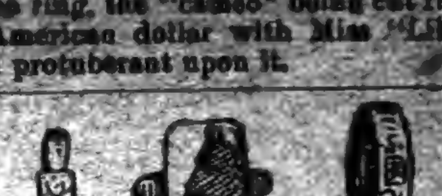
In Zuni is a rude lathe of native make which turns out these beads admirably. On shell necklaces it is common to hang turquoise pendants every two or three inches. These turquoise beads are oblong or flat—pear-shaped—about half an inch to an inch in length, and are sometimes valued at several horses apiece. All the aboriginal tribes of the Southwest put an enormous value on turquoise. The only turquoise mine on the continent is situated twenty-two miles south of Santa Fe, and has been worked for centuries by the Pueblos. Most of it is too green to be valuable in the Eastern market, but specimens have been taken out as fine as the costliest Persian stones. It is used by the native tribes in ornaments of nearly every sort.



NAVAJO BRACELETS.

The prettiest necklaces are of silver. They contain from thirty to 100 round hollow beads, from one-fourth to three-fourths of an inch in diameter. The best specimens have a three or four-inch cross pendant in front, and a wee cross strung after every second or third bead. The beads average ten cents in price and the crosses fifteen cents. How the native workmen, with their rude tools, make hollow beads so perfectly is a marvel.

Finger rings are a little less numerous than the articles aforesaid, but are still common enough, and remarkable skill is often displayed in their workmanship. Plain round rings of the American matrimonial pattern are almost unknown here, the fashion being in chased bands and sets. The Navajoes set native garnets or turquoise in rude box settings; and the Acoma smith sometimes makes a curious stagger at a crown setting. One of the most unique native rings I have ever found here is of the nature of a cameo ring, the "cameo" being cut from an American dollar with Miss "Lib's" head protuberant upon it.



NAVAJO AND PUEBLO SILVER RINGS.

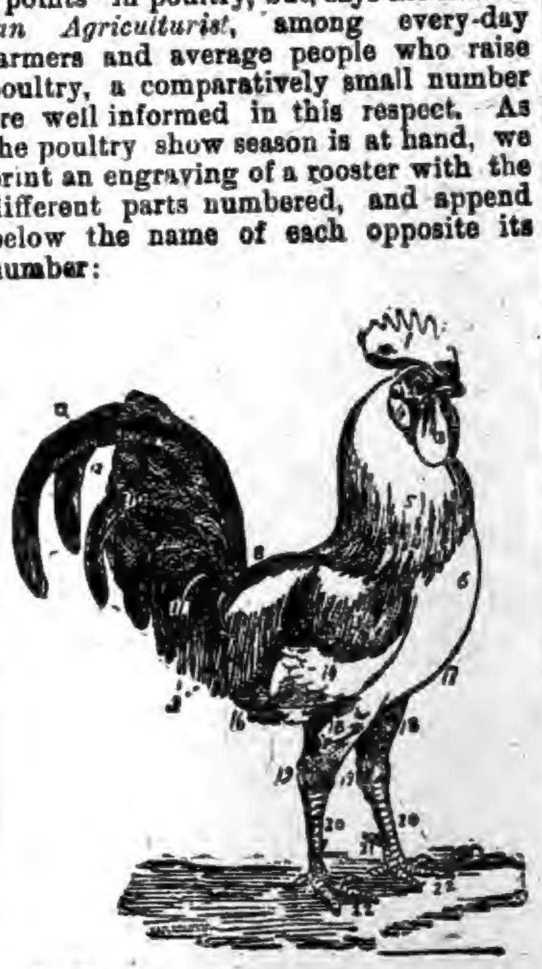
A silver ornament peculiar to the Pueblos is the dress-pin worn by the women. Their dresses are something like blankets, worn over one shoulder and under the other, reaching just below the knees, and fastened down the right side with huge pins. These are sometimes brass, but generally of silver, made by soldering two or three twenty-five or fifty-cent pieces upon a pin. Sometimes the coins are left intact, sometimes polished and chased.

The results of a mixture of native workmanship with American ideas are sometimes curious. Chit-Chi, who is a brother of the famous old ex-chief of the Navajoes, Manuelito, is a very clever fellow, and has done some very fair work for a few American patrons. Some years ago he made me a sugar-spoon, being given the general plans and specifications. I annex a picture of the result.

The universal rule with the Pueblo and Navajo smiths is to charge as much for the work as for the silver. For instance, if you give them a silver dollar as the material for a bracelet, you will have to give another silver dollar for their labor, and so on up. Neither Navajo nor Pueblo will trade his jewelry away, but will sell for hard coin when hard up. Under such circumstances I have bought a handful of buttons, each made from a silver dime, at five cents apiece. This poor political economy, however, is not common.—San Francisco Chronicle.

The Points of Poultry.

Expert breeders, of course, know the "points" in poultry, but, says the American Agriculturist, among every-day farmers and average people who raise poultry, a comparatively small number are well informed in this respect. As the poultry show season is at hand, we print an engraving of a rooster with the different parts numbered, and append below the name of each opposite its number:



1. Comb.
2. Face.
3. Wattle.
4. Deaf-ears, or ear-lobe.
5. Hackle.
6. Breast.
7. Back.
8. Saddle.
9. Saddle-hackles, or feathers.
10. Sickles.
11. Tail-coverts.
12. True Tail-feathers.
13. Wing-bow.
14. Wing-coverts forming the "bar."
15. Secondaries, lower end, forming the wing or lower butts.
16. Primaries, or flight feathers, not seen when the wing is clipped up.
17. Point of breast-bone.
18. Thighs.
19. Hocks.
20. Legs, or Shanks.
21. Spur.
22. Toes, or Claws.

A MEXICAN Judge at Aguas Calientes has just given a decision in one of those cases where a railroad train killed or injured a Mexican, and which formerly always led to the arrest and lengthy imprisonment of the whole train force. The Judge dismissed the complaint against the Mexican Central Road, and said to the prosecuting Mexicans: "Those ties over there were intended to have rails on, and the rails were intended to carry trains. If you will agree to keep away from the track, I will see to it that the train don't chase you about the fields."

The voices of American-bred canaries become harsher in each generation. German birds must be constantly imported to preserve a mellow note.

The Electric Review prophesies that the day will come when a lightning-rod on a house will be regarded in the same light as a horseshoe over a man's door.

A German professor says that natural gas is created by the presence of a mass of rock on a bed of peat, and that hydraulic pressure would create the same vapor if sunflowers were used to feed it.

An English invention is the "center-cycle," having four wheels a foot in diameter and a large wheel in the center. With it the rider is enabled to go up-hill as easily as to go forward on level ground.

A curious substance similar to the sponge is known as loofah. It is not only valuable as an adjunct of the bath, but is found useful for making inside soles for shoes, and is being applied to the under sides of saddles to keep the horse's back cool.

An Englishman has invented an electric gun. There is a small storage-battery fixed in the stock, from which a current strong enough to explode the cartridge is communicated. It is said that one charging of the shell will explode five thousand cartridges.

Cyanide of potassium will remove all indelible inks whose base is nitrate of silver. But, as the cyanide is a deadly poison, it must be used with great care. A small lump of the size of a bean, dissolved in a half gill of water, will make a solution strong enough to destroy the ink.

A new submarine torpedo boat has been tried by both France and Russia, and it is said to be successful. It is driven by an Edison dynamo, provided with compressed oxygen for use under water, and a large pair of scissors projecting from the prow, in order to cut torpedo wires.

It was Dr. Quinlan, of Dublin, who claimed to have discovered the curative properties of mullein leaves in consumption. Some of our physicians have experimented with the leaves of this plant in the pretubercular stages of pulmonary consumption, but it is not known with what results.

Soapstone incorporated with oil, after the manner of a paint, is said to be superior to any kind of paint as a preservative. Soapstone is to be had in exceedingly fine powder, mixes readily with prepared oils for paint use, covers well surfaces of iron, steel, or stone, and is an effectual remedy against rust. It has been known to protect some stonework, such as obelisks, in China, for ages past.

The microbe causing dysentery has been discovered by German investigators. The lymph-glands, spleen and intestines are the chosen resort of this troublesome invader. Its appetite is not dainty, as it gormandizes on anything, even a picked up-dinner; and its capacity of doubling itself at a rapid rate is simply immense. It does not thrive in acid, so people who have cause to fear an attack had better confine their potations to lemonade with little sugar.

Some physicians have warmly indosed the suggestion that "massage" as an employment, is particularly suited to the capabilities of the blind, in whom the tactile sense is strongly developed. Indeed, in Japan massage has, for a long period of time, been practiced by blind men, who go about the streets with a flageolet, drawing attention to themselves and their occupation. It is thought that superintendents of blind asylums will find this a possible avenue to employment for their pupils.

Professor Morse, of Salem, Mass., has devised a simple stove for warming rooms by means of solar heat. It consists of a shallow box having a bottom of corrugated iron and a glass top. This device is placed outside the building, so that the sun can shine directly into it. The rays pass through the glass and are absorbed by the metal, heating it to a high temperature and warming the air of the box. The air, which on sunny days rises to a temperature of 90 degrees Fahrenheit, is conveyed into the room which is to be heated.

The Battle of the Bees.

A gentleman writing to the London News from Carlton, Worksop, Notts, sends the following interesting account of a fight between bees: "Those of your readers who are bee-keepers will naturally understand and appreciate the many incidents of surpassing interest appertaining to bees and bee-keeping. But doubtless there are many thousands of your ordinary readers who would be keenly interested in watching the progress of a real bee-battle—an attack by some, or all, the bees of one hive on the occupants of another hive, with the wicked intention of pilfering the honey which the industry of the hive attacked has gathered. Such an attack actually took place yesterday in my garden, and for the space of quite an hour I had an opportunity of observing the savageness and determination with which these intensely interesting creatures fight. The first intimation I had of the disturbance was a very loud buzzing and humming in the neighborhood of my smallest and weakest hive. On going near the hive I at once saw what was the real state of affairs. A detachment of bees from a neighbor's hive were storming my own with very great determination. Some were fighting in the air, and others were endeavoring to effect an entrance into the hive itself, but, so far as I could judge, were being gallantly repulsed. Meanwhile, I had thought of a plan to render the position of the defenders more secure. At the entrance to the hive I placed a piece of perforated zinc with holes sufficiently to admit of only one bee at a time to pass through. This doubtless relieved them, and those that had effected an entrance would have the warmest possible time of it. But reinforcements were continually arriving for the attacking army, and the position of my bees outside the hive was becoming more and more desperate. Eventually they were all killed or driven away, but very many were dead or dying on the ground. Many of the enemy of course were among the number, and the remainder took to their wings and disappeared. On going to the hive this morning I counted twenty-four dead bees carried out by the survivors. These were either my own bees who had died of their wounds, or, which is very probable, they were those of the enemy who had gained an entrance. Some time must elapse before they will settle down to work again, for they are greatly excited, and do not leave the immediate vicinity of the hive. Doubtless these splendid creatures are apprehensive of another attack on their storehouse, and act accordingly."

Ladies in South American Theaters.

Marcus A. Mayer, the well-known theatrical agent, who managed Patti while she was on her last trip to South America, in a letter to a friend in New York from Montevideo, says:

"The girls here are the loveliest I ever saw. There is one part of the house where they only allow ladies. That is the 'Casuela.' It is the circle just below the gallery, or 'Paraiso,' and one of the male sex is not allowed there, and ladies are not allowed to wear bonnets in the Casuela. The front row is reserved, and we charge $6 for these seats. The back rows are for the admission tickets to the Casuela, and for these we get $1.50. At about five o'clock the young ladies commence congregating at the door, and there they stand until 7 o'clock and keep up such a clatter and row that the police often compel us to open the doors and let them in at 6:30. You should see the scramble! They are worse than men or boys. They take the seats back of the front row, and those who are lucky get a seat, while the unfortunate damsels are compelled to stand up. This place will hold about 800 women, and it is a beautiful sight to look up at them in all the colors of the rainbow—beautiful brunettes, all bedecked in diamonds. At the close of the performance a platoon of soldiers—fifty men—forms on each side of the door at the exit to the streets and keeps the crowd back, so that the young ladies can depart in peace, and as they go they are met by their brothers or fathers or some escort to see them home.

The School Question.

One of the liveliest discussions that the Georgia Senate has ever had, took place over the public school bill. The bill provided for the use of text books throughout the state, with an amendment to the effect that, all things being equal, the preference should first be given Georgia's authors, and then to Southern authors. Senator Gibbs wanted to strike out the clause "all things being equal," and leave it compulsory with the State school commission to use nothing but text books by Southern authors without regard to the difference in price and merit of such books and those offered by Northern authors. He said in the course of his speech that there was not a book published north of Mason and Dixon's line that was not full of sectionalism. After considerable discussion, Senator Harris offered a substitute providing that a preference should be given Southern books, and that, if it was found necessary to purchase any Northern books, the school commission shall see to it that they contain nothing of a sectional nature. The amendment prevailed.

Corralled by Sharks.

A dinghy with grass from Dwarka foundered not very far from Bate, a port on the Cutch coast, while she was on her way to Karachi, when the crew, consisting of seven, took to the mast, which had unshipped. At the time she foundered the vessel was very close to the shore, and the crew were gradually working their way toward the beach, when one of their number was heard to shriek, and immediately disappeared, and the others, to their horror, realized that they were surrounded by sharks, with no means of escaping, as the mast not only gave with their weight, but could not be kept steady on account of the rough state of the sea. The men were in a state of anxiety and fear, not knowing whose turn would come next. One by one the men suddenly disappeared until only one remained, and by this time the storm having subsided, he managed to balance himself steadily on the mast, which drifted toward the beach on the following day. He was thus tossed about on the sea, expecting every moment to be his last, for two days and a night.—Sind Times.

At last we are treated to a novelty in the way of almanac-making. Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., the Lowell chemists, send us their Almanac for 1889, in the shape of a good-sized book, embracing editions in English, calculated for various sections of the United States, the Dominion of Canada, India, South Africa, and Australia; also, editions in nine other languages. The volume contains also specimen pages of pamphlets issued by the company in eleven languages not represented by the almanacs—twenty-one languages in all. From the preface we learn that no fewer than fourteen millions of these almanacs are printed yearly, thus placing the work as far ahead of any other of the kind in circulation and value as Ayer's Sarsaparilla is ahead of all others in merit and popularity. Be sure to secure a copy of this favorite almanac at your druggist's. It is a species of "yellow-covered literature" which no family should be without.—Good Fellowship.

Your Friend Committed Suicide.

You never suspected it, none of his friends dreamed of it, he did not know it himself, but it is exactly what he did, nevertheless. Do you remember his sallow complexion? Do you recollect how he used to complain of headaches and constipation? "I'm getting quite bilious," he said to you one day, "but I guess it'll pass off. I haven't done anything for it, because I don't believe in 'dosing.'" Soon after that you heard of his death. It was very sudden, and every one was greatly surprised. If he had taken Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets he would be alive and well to-day. Don't follow his example. The "Pellets" are easy to take, mild in their action, and always sure.

Catarrh

Is a complaint which affects nearly everybody more or less. It originates in a cold, or succession of colds, combined with impure blood. Disagreeable flow from the nose, tickling in the throat, offensive breath, pain over and between the eyes, ringing and buzzing noises in the ears, are the more common symptoms. Catarrh is cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which strikes directly at the cause by removing all impurities from the blood, building up the diseased tissues and giving healthy tone to the whole system.

Texas.

The occupation taxes of Texas are among the curiosities of state taxation. The repeal of the drummers' tax law, which will necessarily follow the recent decision of the Supreme Court, has suggested the wisdom of revising the whole list. No less than sixty-two occupations are especially taxed, and the revenue from some of these, it is said, will not repay the state for the printing and the work done in reporting collections. According to the last report of the controller, the clairvoyants paid $45 into the state treasury, the bill-posters contributed $12, the pool-sellers $20; there was received on the licenses of ship merchants $7, and among the other sources of revenue were taxes on cock fights, gas companies, hacks, telephones and wagon yards.

Edwin Forrest's Secret.

The great tragedian, Forrest, had a secret which everybody ought to learn and profit by. Said he: "I owe all my success to the fact that everything I have undertaken I have done thoroughly. I never neglected trifles." That's the point—don't neglect trifles. Don't neglect that hacking cough, those night-sweats, that feeble and capricious appetite, and the other symptoms, trifling in themselves, but awful in their significance. They herald the approach of consumption. You are in danger, but you can be saved. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will restore you to health and vigor, as it has thousands of others. For all scrofulous diseases, and consumption is one of them, it is a sovereign remedy.

Caheen Declares and Pledges himself to sell Dry Goods and Millinery cheaper than other houses can buy them. Our business has been a grand success, and we truly appreciate the large patronage bestowed upon us. We shall always endeavor to merit a continuance of popular favor by offering such inducements and unexcelled bargains to the people of Birmingham and vicinity, that the crowds of buyers will seek our double store (filled with desirable Dry Goods) in preference to any other. We are not selfish in our dealings, for when our New York buyer ships us our car loads of Dry Goods, bought direct from manufacturers, at the lowest cash prices, we do not ask our customers a double profit, but at once divide the jobbers' profit with our patrons. A practice at Caheen's: QUICK SALES AND SMALL PROFITS.

GLADSTONE.

DAILY LIFE OF THE "GRAND OLD MAN" AT HAWARDEN.

The Great Gift of Sleep That He Possesses—His Occasional High Spirits and How He Sometimes Amuses Himself.

There is a great deal of entertaining information about the daily life of ex-Premier William E. Gladstone, the "Grand Old Man," in a recent issue of the Pall Mall Gazette. Mr. Gladstone lives a very regular life at his home we are told. He breakfasts lightly about 7 o'clock in the morning, and shortly before 8 walks to the Hawarden Church for prayers. Upon his return he retires to his study, where he peruses and answers his enormous mass of daily correspondence. Luncheon at the Castle is conducted in a homely manner. The "lunch is on the hob" at Hawarden Castle for an hour or two during the day, and is partaken of by those at home at various times. In the afternoon Mr. Gladstone takes a walk in the grounds and dines at 8 o'clock. He retires early, and shortly after 10 o'clock his day's labors are over. He drinks bitter beer with his luncheon. A glass or two of claret at dinner, and sometimes a glass of port, satisfy his requirements for stimulant.

Like General Ignatieff, he has never smoked. When speaking his fillip is a compound of sherry and egg, which is carefully prepared by Mrs. Gladstone, who attends to its manufacture with as much anxiety as if it were the elixir of life.

MR. GLADSTONE IN HIS LIBRARY.

Mr. Gladstone usually has three books in reading at the same time, and changes from one to another when his mind has reached the limit of absorption. This is a necessary corrective to the tendency to think only of one thing at one time, which sometimes in politics leads him to neglect that all-round survey of the situation which is indispensable to a Prime Minister. During the beginning of the Irish question in 1880 he was so absorbed in the question of the coercion of Turkey that he could hardly be induced to spare a thought for Ireland; now it is just as difficult to get him to think of any political question but that of Ireland.

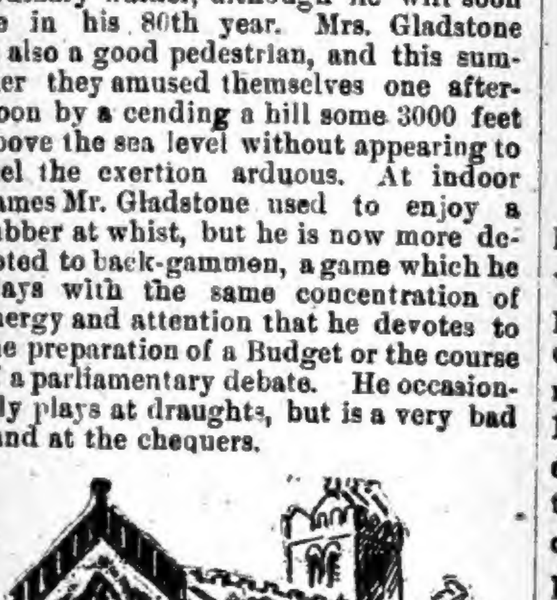
He complains sometimes that his memory is no longer quite as good as it used to be, but, although that may be true, it is still twice as good as anybody else's, for Mr. Gladstone has an extraordinary faculty of not only remembering those things he ought to remember but for forgetting those things it is useless for him to remember.

He possesses the enormous gift of being able to sleep. All his life long he has been a sound sleeper. It used to be said that he had a faculty which was possessed by Napoleon Bonaparte of commanding sleep at will, and, what is perhaps still rarer, of waking up instantly in full possession of every faculty. Some people can go to sleep soon, but they take some time to awake. Mr. Gladstone, it used to be said, was capable of sitting down in a chair, covering his face with a handkerchief, and going to sleep in thirty seconds, and after sleeping for thirty minutes or an hour, as the case may be, waking up as bright as ever, all drowsiness disappearing the moment he opened his eyes. During all Mr. Gladstone's career he has never lost his sleep, except once, and that was during the troubles that arose about Egypt and General Gordon. Then he slept badly, and for the first time it was feared that he would not be able to maintain the burden of office. He has, however, got over the effect of that period of stress and strain and he is still able to count confidently upon at least five consecutive hours of sound and refreshing sleep every night. But for that he would long ago have broken down.

Although Mr. Gladstone is pre-eminently a talker in society, yet he does not disdain the other arts by which people who dine out contrive to spend the time. In his younger days he used to be quite noted for singing either solos or part-songs, and even down to the present time the musical bass of his voice is often heard to great advantage in family worship at Hawarden on Sunday nights.

HAWARDEN CASTLE—THE LIBRARY FRONT

His high spirits break out at every moment, and he used to rejoice to play a comedy part on his own or his son's lawn. It would be incorrect to say that on the occasion of popular celebrations, of local fancy fairs and cottage gardening shows, Mr. Gladstone plays down to the level of his audience. On the contrary, he exhibits just sufficient sympathy to raise them to enthusiasm, and no more. Mr. Gladstone, as might be expected, is most catholic in his tastes, but, except for wood-cutting and pedestrianism, he can hardly be said to be much of an athlete. He has played cricket and other games, but he has never thrown himself into them with that passion which is necessary for success, although one could imagine Mr. Gladstone being the champion cricketer of England, if he gave his mind to it, even now. But in out-of-door sports he prefers Shank's pony to any other means, excepting the cutting down of trees, of amusing himself. He is a great pedestrian, and is able to distance any ordinary walker, although he will soon be in his 80th year. Mrs. Gladstone is also a good pedestrian, and this summer they amused themselves one afternoon by ascending a hill some 3000 feet above the sea level without appearing to feel the exertion arduous. At indoor games Mr. Gladstone used to enjoy a rubber at whist, but he is now more devoted to back-gammon, a game which he plays with the same concentration of energy and attention that he devotes to the preparation of a Budget or the course of a parliamentary debate. He occasionally plays at draughts, but is a very bad hand at the chequers.



HAWARDEN CHURCH.

Mr. Gladstone's society has always been an immense addition to the company to which he was invited. No one could be more humble and more simple, or more ready to "take a back seat," but he never takes airs upon himself, and falls in harmoniously with anything that is going on. The account published some time ago of Mr. Gladstone as a conversationalist is singularly incorrect in representing him as monopolizing all the conversation. Mr. Gladstone no doubt takes his fair share, which is a very large one, but no one is less given to monopolizing talk than he. He can talk about anything, and pours out to flood of information, of anecdote and of illustration upon any theme that may be started in a fashion which makes the ordinary visitor feel that the best service he can render is to listen, merely throwing in, from time to time, a remark necessary to start Mr. Gladstone along on a fresh track, or to force him to draw still more deeply from the immense reservoir of hoarded knowledge which he has under his command.

Not that Mr. Gladstone is a man whom you can lightly contradict, or one before whom you would care to hazard any observation which you had not carefully considered. The pomptitude with which he comes down upon any unhappy wretch who may have happened to hazard an observation which Mr. Gladstone does not believe to have been founded on fact is like the swoop of an eagle on its prey. The eye flashes and the unfortunate interlocutor is compelled to "stand and deliver" his facts, his references, and his "justificatory pieces" in a fashion which once experienced is never forgotten. The peculiar flash in Mr. Gladstone's eye as he turns upon anyone whose remarks or acts have slightly ruffled the equanimity of his soul was very marked ten years ago. Of late he requires more rousing than he used to do, but even still there are times when those who know him can well understand the remarks of the West-countryman who once wrote to Mr. Gladstone saying: "You do not know me, and have forgotten that we ever met. I have not forgotten you, nor can I ever forget the flash of your eagle eye on Frome platform, which went through me."

Tired.

I am so tired today;
I long to lay
My head, for rest, upon the pillow green
Of some still churchyard grave, and shut me in
From all the cares, the worries, and the strife
Of all this anxious, restless mother-life,
And sleep, please God, for aye.

Ah! Little children, with your dancing feet
And glances sweet!
I have so weary of my burdens grown,
I fain would loose your fingers from my own,
And leave to other hands the dear delight
Of guiding baby footsteps up the height,
And thus my task complete.

But, weary mothers, would I have it so?
Would I? Ah! no.
I could not sleep within my grassy bed,
For hearing pattering footsteps overhead.
This mother-heart, though turned to dust, would throb
Responsive to the baby's lonely sob,
However faint and low.

And so I could not rest me after all;
The grasses tall
And snowy daisies could not bring me peace;
The aching mother-love would never cease.
Oh! Christ, who gave this love with motherhood,
On mothers tired bestow this greater good,
Patience—whate'er befall!

"GREASY BILL."

BY LUM DUKE.

There were two Bill Smiths in the little town, each worthless in his own way, and to distinguish them the people called one "Lyin' Bill" and the other "Greasy Bill." The former moved to parts unknown, but Greasy Bill it was said, didn't have energy enough to move outside the incorporation, and so remained bearing with careless indifference his peculiar appellation.

Greasy Bill didn't have much education nor much of anything else except time; he had plenty of that, and love for bright-eyed Mamie Hudson, the mayor's daughter. He was generally looked on as a shiftless sort of fellow, with no ambition and no energy.

The mayor soon saw an attachment growing between his lovely daughter and Greasy Bill, and viewed it with no little alarm. He forbid Greasy Bill entering his house, and made other precautions to prevent the two young lovers meeting; but between the stores up town and the mayor's front yard fence down town they managed to see each other two or three times every week.

"Is that you, Bill?"

It was a clear, starlight night, and Mamie had been waiting in the front yard for Greasy Bill to pass that way going home.

"Why are you so late? I've been waiting a long, long time, and had begun to fear that you had gone some other way to avoid me."

"Now, Mamie, whut makes yer talk that er way? Yer know I'd er come by here, even ef I'd er knowed I wouldn't er got ter see nothin' uv yer but ther house yer live in."

"I know it, Bill, but I can't keep such notions out of my head sometimes, especially since papa has gone to hounding after you like you were an escaped convict."

"Wal, I don't blame 'im. He's got er right ter, 'cause I ain' no 'count."

"That's what he says. But I know you are. You are good and noble and true, and—I love you. I know you haven't got piles of money and don't wear fine clothes, but you wouldn't stoop to low tricks as some do that are more thought of than you. I overheard papa talking to mamma about you the other night, and—"

"You didn't hear nothin' good er 'bout me?"

"Yes. Papa said that he was sorry to have to treat you as he does about coming here. He said that the people all thought you worthless, and that he was forced to do as he did. He said that there was something truly magnanimous about you but that you hadn't spirit enough to force it to the front. But you will show the people some day, won't you Bill?"

"There's nothin' ter show."

"Hush now, I know there is. If there wasn't I wouldn't love you. But I must go in. Good bye."

She raised her lips towards his for a kiss.

"No," said Greasy Bill, "I can't stain them sweet lips—"

She put her arms around his neck and kissed him thrice, then stole silently among the flowers to her room.

Greasy Bill had not gone far when he heard a pistol shot up in the business square. He stopped to listen. Another and then another followed in quick succession.

"Some feller's er havin' a picnic," he mused, "fer I hear ther music. I reckon ther marshal will be er swingin' corners with 'im 'fore it's over with. B'l'eve I'll go up an' see ther fun."

He turned, quickened his pace and made his way to the business part of the town. A tall, bony-faced man flourished a pistol, shooting at random, and no one dared to arrest him. A large posse of citizens had collected and were held at bay by the daring offender.

"Come right along, gentlemen!" the desperado shouted. "Don't be backward! This is a free excursion! Through tickets to perdition on demand! No stops on the way! No extra charge for sleepers! Hot lead and powder served for refreshments! No change of cars! Quickest route! Come right along! All aboard!"

No one seemed inclined to accept the invitation.

"Where's the marshal?" asked one.

"Go for the marshal!" shouted another.

"Bring the marshal, quick!"

"Have the feller arrested!"

"Lock him up!"

"Shoot the fool!"

"Somebody go for the marshal."

Several did go for the marshal, but he could not be found. Hearing the disturbance, and knowing the reputation of the man with whom he would have to deal, he had slunk away into some secluded corner out of danger.

"Here is the best pistol that ever emptied a cartridge," said a man, "but I wouldn't take it and attempt to arrest that man for all the wealth in this town."

"Give it ter me then," said Greasy Bill. He took it and forged his way through the crowd.

"Eh! Ole Greasy Bill's goin' ter try him," sneered one.

"Wake, snakes! Greasy Bill's er comin'," shouted another.

Greasy Bill advanced.

"You had better come back, Bill," said a member of the council.

"Stop right there, young man," warned the desperate offender, as he levelled his pistol on Greasy Bill. "If you come another step I'll blow your light out!"

"Blow!" said Greasy Bill, looking him steadily in the eye, and still advancing. "You dare not shoot a man!"

The crowd was breathless. The eyes of the two men pierced each other like daggers. Neither showed fear. The offender lowered his pistol and held out his hand.

"Put it their, young man," said he. "I never saw the man that I feared; but this hand will never be stained with the blood of as brave a man as you. I'm your prisoner; do with me what you please."

Late in the evening of the next day, Mayor Hudson overtook Greasy Bill as they were both going to supper.

"Good evening, Bill," said he. "I have been looking for you. I have some important and, I think, joyful news to communicate. First, however, let me congratulate you on the successful manner in which you arrested the lawlessness on the streets last night. The town is loud in your praise for doing so gallant an act."

"I didn't do nothin' more'n I oughter done," said he.

"Well, the council had a meeting this evening," said the mayor, "and accepted the resignation of the marshal that was, and unanimously elected you to fill the vacancy with the salary increased to one thousand dollars. What do you say to that?"

"Say I can't fill it."

"Good heavens, man! What's the reason."

"'Cause I ain't fitten."

"Ain't fitten? Don't you suppose the council knows your capabilities? Why, you're the very man for the place. There's not a man in the state that would suit so well."

"But I can't write nor figger."

"Oh, well you must have a secretary for that. Come in and we'll talk it over."

They had reached the mayor's house. Mamie was playing the piano.

"Yes," said he musingly, "you must have a secretary. But that can be easily arranged, I think. I know a person who would be only too glad to do your writing and figuring for you, and," as they stood in the parlor door, "I don't think you would have to go further than the piano to find her."

"Look er here," said Greasy Bill, yer don't mean it?"

"Bill, you are the first young fellow that I ever saw stand and jower with the cook when there was pie in the cupboard."

A few seconds later Greasy Bill had found pie.—[Atlanta Constitution.

A Clever Swindle.

An ingenious stroke of business has been done by a swindler who is now being sought for by the Moscow police. A young man of respectable appearance recently entered a jeweller's shop, selected 4000 roubles' worth of trinkets, paid down a sum of 500 roubles on account, took the jewelry and explained that if an assistant would accompany him to the neighboring office of a well-known wholesale baker, the balance of the sum due would be at once handed over. The baker in question was in the habit of contracting for supplying large establishments with bread; and as he was notoriously a wealthy man, an assistant was allowed to accompany the adventurer to his house. Of course, the swindler had already visited the baker and made him an innocent accomplice. On entering the office the adventurer said to the baker in an off-hand way: "This man will take the 3500 that you have arranged to let me have. He has had 500 roubles from me. Please take his receipt and oblige me by attending to him quickly. I must be off. Good day!' The baker's reply was a respectful "Certainly, sir; good day." He told the assistant to sit down and wait for a few minutes, and in the meantime the swindler vanished. When at last the baker, after listening at various tubes and making his replies, announced, "The bread is ready for you now. How many carts have you to carry it in?" for the first time it dawned upon the victim that in certain circumstances "three thousand five hundred" might allude not to roubles but to loaves. The swindler had, in fact, pretended to be the director of an orphanage, and had intimated that, twice a week until further notice, he should require 3500 loaves, and that the man who would periodically call for them would also pay for them in ready money.—[St. James Gazette.

A Natural Pipe of Peace.

Postmaster Martin recently picked from the side of Missionary Ridge a beautiful specimen of the Indian pipe flower. It is a perfect pipe of peace, and every detail is carried out in perfection. The bowl contains the stamen which appear very much like tobacco, and the stem is entwined with a feathery ribbon, just like the typical pipe of peace. It is snow white, of a wax-like appearance, about twelve inches in length and a more perfect pipe could not be constructed. The plant is found in moist woods on the side of Missionary Ridge. It is parasitic and flourishes chiefly on roots or decaying vegetable matter.—[Chattanooga (Tenn.) Times.

Cold-Water Fishes.

It will be a surprising fact to many readers to learn that cold waters abound more in life than do warm waters. The schools of herrings about the coasts of Japan greatly exceed those of England, though the Japanese waters are the colder by at least 20 degrees. An idea of their numbers may be had from Capt. H. C. St. John's "Notes and Sketches."

In May and June this fish appears in incredible numbers. The straits, bays and creeks are alive with herrings. They are in such numbers that those nearest the beach are pushed out of the water, and the shore for miles is thus kept constantly replenished with fresh fish; countless numbers of sea-gulls, eagles, crows, besides foxes, wolves and bears find an ever ready meal, and the way the sea-gulls just picked the tidbit from the back of the neck, and left the remainder of the fish, showed how well they knew the supply was constant.

The Japanese simply run a net straight out from the shore, 150 or 200 yards along a line of stakes. At the end of the net is a bag, into which the fish, on striking the net and working along it, soon find their way. When required, the fishermen only have to go off, haul the bag up, and opening the end let the fish fall into their boat.

This species of herring is both larger and coarser than our own. The temperature of the water in which they appear to flourish to such an extraordinary extent averages 36 degrees, whereas that in which our own fish is found averages 54 degrees to 58 degrees.

A Maker of Kid Gloves.

An interesting spectacle can be witnessed on Broadway every pleasant evening. In the window of a kid glove store a man wearing a soiled blouse entertains quite a crowd by the skilful manner in which he dresses kid skins for the glovemakers. His knife might be called a three-inch broad chisel, of razor-like keeness, which he pushes delicately but swiftly over the uneven surface of the rough leather smoothing it down most beautifully. Every instant he is obliged to whet the blade with what appears to be an ordinary piece of smooth steel. Occasionally the artisan cuts the skin, but he pays no attention to the slip. As soon as the skin is dressed it is wrapped in a damp cloth with a number of others.

When he has finished a number of choice, highly colored skins, the operator takes one of them and cuts out a piece which is to be used for the back of the glove, the section being frequently eighteen inches in length. From the same piece he cuts out the palm and the scraps he traces for the insertion pieces for the fingers.

Ordinarily he uses no guide for the pieces, but when a lady "leaves her measure" he has to exercise as much care in cutting out the pattern as a tailor does in preparing a suit pattern.—[New York Sun.

Monster Mississippi Bridge.

Work on the great bridge which is to span the Mississippi river at Memphis, Tenn., has been commenced. The bridge proper is on the cantilever plan, and will consist of a channel span 770 feet in length. This is said to be the longest single span of the kind in the world, and its construction is a difficult piece of engineering. The bridge will also have two spans, each 620 feet in length. The bridge will be 34 feet in width, and while only one railroad track will be used at present, the strength of the bridge will be such that two tracks can be laid. The plans already contemplate a wagon road for vehicles. The bridge will be approached from the west over an iron trestle 5200 feet in length and an embankment of 1600 feet in length. It will be approached from the east over an iron trestle 1000 feet long and over an embankment. The bridge will be 75 feet above high-water mark. The estimated cost is $3,300,000.—[Times-Democrat.

PEARLS OF THOUGHT.

Laughter is the daylight of the soul.

Three things to do—Think, live and act.

The most effective coquetry is innocence.

The world itself is too small for the covetous.

Whenever the speech is corrupted so is the mind.

Laziness travels so slow that poverty soon overtakes him.

Three things to hate—Cruelty, arrogance and ingratitude.

Knowledge of our duties is the most useful part of philosophy.

Fear is far more painful to cowardice than death to true courage.

Life appears to me too short to be nursing animosity or registering wrongs.

The most delicate, the most sensible of all pleasures consists in promoting the pleasures of others.

Popularity like a warm south wind is very pleasant, but like the wind, when it changes may bring a storm.

Powerful organizations crush out opponents often, by stifling their virtues and appropriating their failings.

When two persons are too modest to speak of their own greatness, it may be accomplished by flattering each other.

The reason a man is surprised at the success of another is because he cannot comprehend beyond his own standpoint.

He who is positive without real convictions is a tyrant, he who has real convictions without being positive is a craven.

Indian Hop-Pickers.

In one respect, at least, hop culture on the Pacific coast differs widely from that in the Eastern States—in the character of the labor employed in picking. In California, pickers are almost exclusively Chinese. In Oregon, Chinese, whites and Indians are employed. The scholars of the Indian training school, at Chemawa, near Salem, earn a large sum annually in this way. In Washington Territory the pickers are almost exclusively Indians, men, women and children engaging in the work. In the Puyallup Valley, where the greatest number of fields are located, the scene is a busy, picturesque and interesting one during the picking season. As the time approaches for the picking to begin, Indians flock into the valley from all directions, on foot, in wagons, on horseback, and by far the greater number in canoes, some of them from hundreds of miles up the coast, even from British Columbia and Alaska. The tribes at a distance come in their large canoes, made from the immense cedars that grow along the northern coast, following that romantic and picturesque channel lying between the coast and its outlying fringe of islands which is the admiration of every tourist to Alaska. These canoes are large and stanch, manned by twenty men or more, who often venture to sea in them during the sealing season. They make their journey leisurely, sometimes taking a month for the trip, fishing and hunting along the route, and camping wherever night overtakes them. Thus they come from far and near, to the number of about three thousand to the Puyallup Valley alone, there being considerable competition among the growers to secure a complete and reliable force of pickers. They camp along the river, hauling their canoes well up upon the bank, and are soon ready for work. They are steady and industrious, going to the fields as soon as it is light in the morning, carrying their dinners with them, and remaining until dark. It is popularly supposed that an Indian will not work, but that they do work on Puget Sound and the northern coast, in the hop fields, on the farms, in the saw mills, canneries and fisheries, is a fact; and if they did not some of these industries would not thrive as well as they do. The hops of Yakima valley are picked by Indians from the large Yakima reservation close by.—[American Agriculturist.

James B. Head, Esq., has been appointed Judge of the new ninth circuit composed of the counties of Jefferson, Walker and Winston. Sterling A. Wood, Esq., was an applicant for the position and received a flattering and well deserved endorsement for the place from the bar of Birmingham.

We are inclined to think that our bright though caustic contemporary the Montgomery Dispatch has proposed the best, most practicable and most expedient plan of settling the negro question, by its proposition of an amendment to the constitution prescribing an educational qualification for voters.

The Shelby Sentinel pays a well merited compliment to Col. W. S. Thorington, of Montgomery—by publishing his picture and biographical sketch. Col. Thorington is a gentleman whose extreme modesty alone has kept him from rising to place of high distinction. He is yet young, and may yet reap the reward of true merit.

The Commercial Fire Insurance Company, of Montgomery, has sent out to its agents as a tasty and attractive new year souvenir a photograph of each of the officers and office employees of the company together with a beautiful New Year card. The safest and most reliable fire insurance company in the State.

Little Florence, up in North Alabama is fairly "moving" herself. The Wave says that "There are now under contract for construction more than 200 houses for residence purposes and the rapidity of their completion depends only upon the contractor's ability to obtain men and material." Watch out Decatur! Look to your laurels, Sheffield!—Dispatch.

The New York Sun passes this judgment on the old year:

Taking it as a whole, commercially it has been fairly good.

Politically it has been extremely bad.

Morally, it has been an improvement upon its predecessors, in obedience to the universal law of progress.

We hope that it has been the foundation for something better still.

Texas Siftings: A widower married a second time and his choice was a wealthy lady about 50 years of age. When the bride and bridegroom returned home from the wedding the husband introducing the wife to the children said: "My dear children, kiss this lady's hand. She is the new mother I promised to bring to you." After taking a square look at the new mother little Charlie said: "Pa you have been fooled. She ain't new at all!"

If Mr. Harrison intends to put a man from the South in his cabinet, he cannot find a more consistent Republican than ex-Gov. W. H. Smith, of Alabama. He has been a member of that party ever since the close of the war. He has never been a favorite with the carpet-bag element, because he was for more lenient measures than they desired. One of his first acts as Governor was to recommend the repeal of the test oaths and disfranchising clause, in the constitution adopted by the reconstruction convention in 1867, and put into operation in 1868.

When a woman is appointed to a postoffice, ought she to be called postmaster or postmistress? The question is important because the records of the postoffice department show now that there are 3,000 women in the United States holding ing such commissions. The tendency of the better usage now is to ignore distinctions of sex in such designation. There seems to be a growing preference for "author" rather than "authoress," "sculptor" is easier and more natural that "sculptress," and some go even so far as to prefer "actor," even when applied to women. It is of interest to know that the complaints against the women postmasters are comparatively few, and that in the fourth-class offices their records are better than those of the men, because they seem more conscientious and pay closer attention to their duties.

An Alliance Man Talks.

An Advertiser reporter had the pleasure of meeting and talking with a member of the Farmers' Alliance one of the most intelligent and successful farmers of the State. Talking about the Alliance he said:

"So you want to know all about the Farmers' Alliance. Well young man, that is most too much for you to learn in one day. Guess you had better take it in broken doses."

"All right, then. Give me something about the plans and purposes of the organization for the first dose."

"I can tell you that in a pair minutes. A short horse, you know is soon curried. The plan is co-operation and the purpose is to help the farmers and protect their interests. For years and years a majority of the farmers have been bowed down under burdens of debt. The Alliance does not propose to pay a man's debts, or furnish him supplies, or lend him money without interest. But it will help him to get himself out. In the first place we don't propose to submit to the enormous rates of interest charged by most of the advancing merchants. If a merchant wants to sell goods to Alliance men he must put his figures down to the limit of reason, to the live and let live policy. In some of the towns the merchants have been given the privilege of bidding for the Alliance trade, and of course the merchants who offered to sell goods on the most favorable terms got the business. The Alliance men do not ask any special favors of merchants or any body else, but they do ask fair play. In fact they demand that much, and are going to have it from the jump."

Good Results.

United effort and organization among the farmers is already having good effect and is bearing good fruit in Alabama. Mortgages are being paid off, and cancelled, debts are being paid off, and the farmer is not only growing independent, but is learning to be economical and stingy. The Alliances have done much to bring about this improvement, and while its benefits may not have been direct its teachings have been felt, and its spirit is most wholesome. The farmers are dividing their lands into smaller parcels selling off the overplus to pay off the mortgage, and holding only what can be well and thoroughly cultivated and the resolution has not only been made to practice economy, but it is being strictly carried out, and the merchants are actually complaining that their trade is falling off on account of the farmer's penuriousness.

This is all a good sign and the country is not likely to suffer, no matter how well founded such reports may be. If the farmers will stand to their determination by united effort to get out of debt by not spending what they can possibly save, and once being out of debt keep out and pay as they go, it may affect the merchant's trade, but it is the only safe policy for farmers, and in the end will be better for all.

No more mortgages, no more credit system, no crop liens, won't it be a happy day for Alabama when the farmers adopt and strictly adhere to that policy? The farmers are uniting all over the State. They are organizing Alliances in every county, and before the year just beginning ends, the very best results may be expected from their determined and united purpose to improve their condition.—Advertiser.

A "conference of leading colored men of the state" is called to meet in Montgomery, Jan. 8. The purposes of the conference are set forth as in the circular:

1. How we may secure a free ballot and a fair count of our votes?
2. How we may bring about a better feeling between white and colored citizens?
3. How we may aid in making the public schools more effective in their operation?
4. How we may secure a state university?
5. To put ourselves on record with regard to the Blair educational bill.
6. How to reduce the frequency of mob violence?
7. How we may secure first-class travel upon railroads operated in the state.
8. The advisability of organizing a state daily paper.
8. And to consider such other subjects as may claim our attention.

This goes to prove the Age-Herald's position, that the more advanced the negro becomes the sharper will the race conflict prove.—Birmingham Age-Herald.

A Georgia Courtship.

A traveller through the pine woods of Georgia heard as he neared a mill several persons talking in excited tones. He rode up to the mill. There were standing about an old man, a young fellow an old woman and a fat girl.

"What's the matter here" the traveler demanded.

"A good deal," the man replied.

"Yes," snapped the old woman "a mighty heap, I tell you."

"So much the matter," said the girl, "that somebody's goin' ter git hurt unless ever'thing's made all right."

"I'll tell you what's the matter," the young man declared; "I came along here some time ago and took that position as head sawyer of this mill, and now the old man and woman having taken such a liking to me, want me to marry their daughter, that fat thing standing there."

"You made love to me!" the girl exclaimed.

"I did not."

"Yes you did. You siddled up clost to me last Sunday, when pap an' mur had gone to church an' lowed that I had a putty hand an' then I told you that you mout have it if you wanted it, an' you sorter snickered and 'lowed that it was wuth the havin.' Ef that ain't makin' love ter a body, I don't know what is."

"It's almost a marriage contrack," the old man declared"—Arkansas Traveler.

India rubber has made its entry into the commercial world as an excellent article for the construction of bridges and pavements. We hail the discovery with extreme satisfaction and commend it to the attention of politicians. For platforms, it will prove a specialty—it is so elastic.

The world owes every man a living. Yes, but every man must collect the debt for himself. The world doesn't peddle the money 'round.—Ex.

Organs For Sale.

The VIEW has two excellent organs for sale. One is Beatty manufacture worth $100. Will be sold for $50. The other is an Alleger organ worth $85 and will be sold for $45. We have good testimonials from parties to whom we have sold organs.

The VIEW job office has just received a lot of new type and new stationery and asks to be remembered when you want job work done.

Answer this Question.

Why do so many people we see around us seem to prefer to suffer and be made miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of Appetite, Coming up of the Food, Yellow Skin, when for 75 cents, we will sell them Shiloh's System Vitalizer, guaranteed to cure them. Sold by A. E. Bivings, Clanton.

Notice to Non-Resident.

The State of Alabama, Chilton County.

Mary A. Butler, pro ami, vs. James C. Butler, respondent. In Chancery at Clanton, seventh district, Northeastern Chancery Division.

In this cause, it is made to appear to the Register, by the affidavit of Mary A. Butler that the defendant James C. Butler "is a non-resident of the State of Alabama, and the place of residence of the Respondent is unknown to affiant, nor has she been able to ascertain the place of said residence, although she has made dilligent inquiry," and further, that, in the belief of said affiant, the defendant is over the age of twenty-one years. It is therefore ordered by the Register, that publication be made in the CHILTON VIEW, a newspaper published in the town of Clanton, once a week for four consecutive weeks, requiring him, the said James C. Butler to plead, answer or demur to the bill of complaint in this cause by the 9th day of February, 1889, or, in thirty days thereafter, a decree pro confesso may be taken against him. Done at office in Clanton this 9th day of January 1889.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Mr. G. R. Evans visited relatives in Clanton last week

Prof. J. L. Ruffin and Mr. Allen, of Jemison spent Saturday in Clanton.

Mr. B. H. Chestnut went to Birmingham on a business trip Monday.

Order rubber stamp goods from Osce Roberts 1918 First Avenue Birmingham, Ala.

We regret to lose the family of Mr. Harry Herbert. They will remove to Pine Hill near Jemison this week.

Miss Belle Smith, of Dixie, and Mrs. A. A. Green, of Verbena, have been visiting relatives in our town.

Mr. Chestnut's wagon repair shop is about completed. It is located where it will probably catch a good patronage.

Mrs. M. A. Butler requests us to ask parties not to block the front of her store with their vehicles. She invites them to hitch their stock in the lot adjoining her store.

In another column will be found the professional card of Col. R. M. Williamson, attorney at law. Col. Williamson has removed to our county to practice his profession. He is a good lawyer of established reputation.

Rev. J. P. Sanders, our new Methodist pastor, delivered excellent sermons at the M. E. Church Sunday morning and evening. He made a most favorable impression upon the christian community ierespective of denomination. It is hoped that he will take up his residence in our town.

Farmers, See Here.

I have what you want for use on your farms at this season of the year and will sell you your goods cheap for the cash. I need the cash and you need the goods, so come to see me and you soon can be relieved of your cash, and not be robbed either.

Your friend,
W. L. SAMPEY.

Early gardeners are at work in this locality.

Ninety-five pupils at Clanton High School.

Mrs. O. A. Duke has returned from a pleasant visit to relatives in her old home, Nashville, Tenn.

Mrs. L. W. McCants, of Birmingham, is visiting her sister, Mrs. Dr. A. E. Bivings.

Just as we go to press, we learn that the residence of Mr. J. F. Maull, at Strasburg, was destroyed by fire on Wednesday.

The Montgomery Advertiser and the VIEW one year for $2.00, or both papers for a little more than the price of one. Now is the time to subscribe.

Mr. Lane, a brother of Hon. A. O. Lane, of Birmingham, has removed to Clanton and purchased a farm just east of town. We are glad to welcome him and all other such good citizens to our town and county.

We agree with the Shelby Sentinal that when Republicans are to fill the Federal offices in this State we want to see just such upright and responsible men as Thos. J. Scott, of Montgomery, "draw the plums.".

We regret to lean that Mr. Thos. M. Ternan, of Blue Creek, formerly of Clanton, died Tuesday morning at his home near Verbena. His remains were brought to Clanton and interred Wednesday morning.

A petition will be sent to Governor Seay from this place for the pardon of Frank Baker, the negro who killed Solomon Love near town some years since. The petition sets forth the good character of Baker and the well known desperate character of Love. Baker is now serving a sentence in the penitentiary.

The people of Clanton are in hopes of getting Rev. J. P. Sanders, the Methodist pastor, to reside here. There is a plan on foot to build a parsonage. We need a preacher here and should go to work and build a nice home for our pastor. We must have a parsonage, then we will have our preacher with us.

The members of the Methodist Ladies Aid Society desire to return thanks to Mrs. Herbert, their pleasant and competent President for her past services. They are exceedingly sorry to lose such a good Christian worker as Mrs. Herbert and sincerely hope it will not be long before she can be with them again. Mrs. W. H. Lawrence was elected to succeed Mrs. Herbert.

Tax Assessor Rollins filled his appointment for assessing taxes at Clanton on Saturday. He is now making his first round of the county, and has instructions from the auditor to assess taxes at a true value, the low rate of taxation making it absolutely necessary that all property holders should give in true and correct returns of their property in order that the State may be able to meet fiscal expenses.

The Mule.

(A little boy's first composition.)

The mule is a mighty bad thing to kick but the girls are a heep worse they can kick you higher and run too (not the girls the mule.) Some of them are white, and some black and brown, and their tails are made to match. Men trim their tails off to keep them from growing out long like a horses tail. Mules is a good thing to tote men but a horse is better because they won't buck with you like a mule except a Texas horse.

Shiloh's Consumption Cure.

This is beyond question the most successful Cough Medicine we have ever sold, a few doses invariably cure the worst cases of Cough, Croup and Bronchitis, while its wonderful success in the cure of consumption is without a parallel in the history of medicine. Since its first discovery it has been sold on a guarantee, a test which no other medicine can stand. If you have a cough, we earnestly ask you to try it. Price 10 cents, 50 cents, and $1.00. If your Lungs are sore, Chest or back lame, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by A. E. Bivings, Clanton. jan 10

Read This All!

I have purchased the drug business of W. H. Phillips in Clanton, and will continue the business at the same stand.

I shall also keep a stock of extra quality family groceries. I shall handle none but the very best articles, and my customers can rely upon getting pure, fresh goods.

sep. 20. A. E. BIVINGS.

All kinds of blank deeds and waive notes for sale at this office.

The Babies Cry For It

And the old folks laugh when they find that the pleasant California liquid fruit remedy, Syrup of Figs, is more easily taken and more beneficial in its action than bitter nauseous medicines. It strengthens the stomach and bowels. For sale in fifty cents and $1 bottles. aug 23

A man who has practiced medicine for 40 years ought to know salt from sugar; read what he says:

TOLEDO, O., Jan. 10, 1887.

Messrs. F. J. Cheney & Co.—Gentlemen:—I have been in the general practice of medicine for forty years, and would say that in all my practice and experience, I have never seen a preparation that I could prescribe with as much confidence of success as I can Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by you. Have prescribed it a great many times and its effect is wonderful, and would say in conclusion that I have yet to find a case of Catarrh that it would not cure, if they would take it according to directions.

Yours Truly,
L. L. GORSUCH, M. D.,
Office 215 Summit St.

We will give $100 for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Taken internally.

Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy.

Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy, a marvelous cure for Catarrh, Diptheria, Canker Mouth, and Head-Ache. With each bottle there is an ingenious Nasal Injector for the more successful treatment of these complaints without extra charge. Price 50 cents. Sold by A. E. Bivings, Clanton.

BLOOD AND BRAIN.

Pure blood is what oils the machinery of life, eases every movement of the body, removes stiffness of the joints, drives out pain from the nerves, stimulates the brain, protects the liver and kidneys from irritation, enables physical exertion without fatigue, prolongs life, and makes men and women perfect in health and feature. Good blood and good brain are inseparable. Aim to keep the blood pure by using the only true blood remedy, B. B. B. (Botanic Blood Balm.)

Miss S. Tomlinson, Atlanta, Ga., says:

"For many years I have been afflicted with rheumatism combined with severe kidney troubles, indigestion and nervous prostration.

Rheumatism Several physicians were employed and numerous patent medicines resorted to without benefit. At last I began the use of B. B. B., and its effect was like magic. Rheumatic pains ceased, my kidneys were relieved, and my constitution improved at once."

Z. T. Hallerton, Macon, Ga., writes:

"Three years ago I contracted a blood poison. I applied to a physician at once, and his treatment came near killing me. I employed an old physician and then went to Kentucky. I Hot Springs then went to Hot Springs and remained two months, but nothing seemed to cure me permanently, although temporary relief was given me. I returned home a ruined man physically, with but little prospect of ever getting well. I was persuaded to try B. B. B., and to my utter astonishment it quickly healed every ulcer."

W. C. McGaughey, Webb City, Ark., writes:

"I owe the comfort of my life to a use of B. B. B. I was troubled with blood poison Bad Blood for five or six years, and found no relief equal to that given by this valuable remedy."

Mrs. Emma Griffiths, Unitia, Tenn., writes:

"The doctors said my boy twelve years old had scrofula. His knees were drawn up and joints were stiff, and for three years he had been Scrofula unable to walk. One bottle of B. B. B. has done him so much good he can now walk, and his pain has ceased. Its action on my boy has been pronounced most wonderful." (5)

REV. DR. TALMAGE.

THE BROOKLYN DIVINE'S SUNDAY SERMON.

Subject: "A Bad Boil Cured."

TEXT: "I have heard thy prayer; behold, I will heal thee. And they took and laid it on the boil and he recovered."—II Kings, xx., 5, 7.

Luxurious living is not healthy. The second generation of Kings, and Queens, and Lords, and Princes is apt to be brainless and invalid. The second crop of grass is almost always short. Royal blood is generally scrofulous. You will not be surprised, then, to hear that King Hezekiah had disorders which broke out in a carbuncle, virulent and deathful. The Lord told him he must die; he did not want to die. He turned his face to the wall, so that his prayer would not be interrupted, and cried to God for his life. God heard the prayer and answered it, saying: "Behold, I will heal thee." But there was human instrumentality to be employed. This carbuncle needed a "cataplasm." That is a tough word we use to show how much we know. If in the pulpit we always used words the people understood, we never should have any reputation for learning. Well, this carbuncle needed a "cataplasm," which is a poultice. Your old mother, who doctored her own children in the time when physicians were not so plenty as they are now, will tell you that the very best poultice is a fig, and that was what she used upon the carbuncle of King Hezekiah. The power of God, accompanied by this human instrumentality, cured the King.

If sickness comes to your household, it will depend entirely upon ventilation, good diet, and the skill of the doctors, as to whether your child gets well. The father might pray all day, and the mother might pray all night—it would not have any effect upon the case. If squills, belladonna, paregoric and gruel do the work, your child will get well; if not, not. There is a cast iron God seated at the head of the universe, holding in the cold grasp of his metal fingers a band of law from which nothing can break away.

Men and women of God, at this point the great battle of Christianity is to be fought. The great foe of Christianity to-day is rationalism, that comes out from our schools, and universities, and magazines and newspapers, to scoff at Bible truth and caricature the old religion of Jesus. It says Jesus is not God, for it is impossible to explain how He can be divine and human at the same time. The Bible is not inspired, for there are things in it that they don't like. Regeneration is a farce; there is good enough in us, and the only thing is to bring it out. Development is the word—development. The Garden of Eden is a fairy story and no more to be believed than the "Arabian Nights," or "Gulliver's Travels," or "Robinson Crusoe." We all started as baboons, and are blood relations to that monkey squirming about on the top of that hand organ. Lazarus was not dead when Christ pretended to raise him; he was only playing dead. The water was not changed into wine at the wedding, but Christ brought in some wine that He had found elsewhere to make up the deficiency. Christ did not walk on the sea, but on the shore, so near that it seemed as if He really were on the water.

What is still more alarming is, that Christian men dare not meet this ridicule. There is not one Christian man in five that can, unblanched, stand in the presence of all this raillery, saying: "I believe in the whole Bible, and in every single statement that it makes." Christian men try to soften the Bible down to suit the skeptics. The skeptics sneer at the dividing of the Red Sea; and the Christian goes to explaining that the wind blew a hurricane from one direction a good while, until all the water piled up; and besides, that it was low water anyhow, and so the Israelites went through without any trouble. Why not be frank and say: "I believe the Lord God Almighty came to the brink of the Red Sea, and with His right arm swung back the billows on the right side, and with His left arm swung back the billows on the left side, and the abashed water stood up hundreds of feet high, while through their glassy wall the sea monsters gazed with affrighted eyes on the passing Israelites." The rationalist comes to you saying: "How about Jonah and the whale? Do you really believe that fish story?" There never were so many Nantucket fishermen after one whale as there have been rationalists flinging harpoons at the Mediterranean sea monster, and from that one whale they have got oil enough to light ten thousand souls to perdition. A skeptic tells you that Jonah would have been killed in the process of swallowing, and that he could not, anyhow, have lived three days in such close quarters, but would have been smothered by the poor ventilation. How the good Christians immediately go to work, and try to explain the whole thing by natural laws, so as to please the rationalists, and say that a whale is an air breathing fish; that every little while it comes to the surface, and that the whale that swallowed Jonah did the same thing, and thus got a supply for itself and for the prophet. Why not rather say that God can do anything; and He could take Jonah through the whale's throat, although the throat would not have been half large enough ordinarily to let him pass, and could have kept him alive in the whale five years without any air, if He had chosen to? Who made the whale? God. Who made Jonah? God. Then He could do anything He pleased with either of them.

The moment you begin to explain away the miraculous and supernatural you surrender the Bible. Take the supernatural out of the Bible, and you make it a collection of lies and humbugs, in preference to which I choose "Æsop's Fables." They are what they pretend to be—fables. But if, after all that the Bible declares, Jesus is not God, and Lazarus was not raised from the dead, and the water was not turned into wine, and the Red Sea was not divided, and in answer to prayer Hezekiah's boil did not get well, then the Bible is the worst fraud ever perpetrated in God's universe.

Ah! my friends, have we been mistaken? Does God hear and answer prayer, or does He not? Hezekiah was sick unto death; he prayed for his life; God heard him, and added fifteen years to that lifetime. The prayer saved him—the lump of figs applied being merely the God-appointed human instrumentality.

"But," says some one, "I don't believe the Bible." Ah! then we will have to part company for four or five minutes, for it is useless to try to argue with any man with whom you cannot stand upon common ground. In any argument, if you would be successful, there must be some common data to start from. It is foolish to try to prove to a man that twice three are six, provided he does not admit the multiplication tables, or that two and two are four, if he does not admit the addition table.

My first address, therefore, is to those who do believe in the Bible. I want to tell you that prayer is the mightiest of all remedies, and that the allopathic and homeopathic and the electric schools will yet acknowledge it. Here are two cases of sickness precisely alike; the same kind of medicine is given to both of them, and in the same quantities. The one patient recovers, and the other does not. Why? God blesses the one remedy, and does not bless the other. Prayer has helped many a blundering doctor through with a case that would have otherwise become completely unmanageable. There is such a thing as Gospel hygiene, as Christian pharmacy, as divine materia medica. That is a foolish man who, in case of sickness, goes only to human resources, when we have these instances of the Lord's help in the sick room. Before you call the doctor while he is there and after he goes away look up to Him who cured Hezekiah. Let the apothecary send the poultice, but God makes it draw. Oh! I am glad to have a doctor who knows how to pray. God send salvation to all the doctors! Sickness would be oftener baulked, death would be oftener hurled back from the door sill if medical men came into the sick room like Isaiah of the text, with a prescription in their hands and the word of the Lord in their mouths.

John Abercrombie, the most celebrated physician of Scotland, prayed when he went into the sick room, and he wrote no more ably about "diseases of the brain" than about "the philosophy of the moral feelings." I don't know how much of the medical success of Sydenham, and Cooper, and Harvey, and Rush depended upon the fact that they knew how to pray as well as to prescribe. I don't want a physician who sees no God in human anatomy to doctor my broken bones. If God made us (and I think He did), and if the Bible is true (and I am rather disposed to think it is), then it is not strange that prayer does traverse natural cause; ay, that it introduces a new cause. When God made the law, He did not make it so strong He could not break it. If God made our bodies, when they are broken He is the one to mend them; and it is reasonable that we should call Him in to do it. If my furnace in the cellar breaks down, there is no one so competent to repair it as the manufacturer. If my watch stops, there is no one so competent to set it going as the one who made it. If the body is disordered, call in the Maker of it. Is it not all, as these physicists tell us, a matter of ventilation or poisoned air, of cleanliness or dirt, of nutritious diet or poor fare? I have known people to get well in rooms where the windows had been six weeks down, tight shut, and I have known them to die right under patent ventilators. I have known children sickly who every day had their bath, and I have known children robust, the washing of whose faces would make their features unrecognizable.

I would have you also see—for it is another lesson of the subject—that our prayer must also be accompanied by means. It is an outrage to ask God to do a thing while we sit indolent. The prayer, to be acceptable, must come not only from the heart, but from the hands. We must work while we pray, devotion and work going together. Luther came to Melancthon's bedside and prayed for his recovery, and insisted, at the same time, that he should take some warm soup, the soup being just as important as the prayer. In the time of the great plague that came to York, of England, the priests prayed all night and all day for the removal of the plague, but did not think of clearing out the dead dogs and cats that lay in the gutters, causing the sickness. We must use means as well as supplications. If a man has "evening prayers," asking for health, and then sits down to a full supper of indigestibles at 11 o'clock at night, his prayer is a mockery. A farmer has no right to pray for the safety of his family when he knows there is no cover on the cistern. The Christian man, reckless about his health, ought not to expect the same answer to his prayer as the Christian man expects who retires regularly at ten o'clock at night, and takes his morning bath with the appendix of a Turkish towel.

That God answers prayers offered in the right spirit, seconded by our own effort, is the first and the last lesson of this text, and it is a lesson that this age needs to learn. If all communication between earth and heaven is cut off, let us know it. If all the Christian prayers that are going up toward God never reach Him, then, I say, let silence smite the lips of the afflicted world, and the nations smother their groans and die quietly. God does answer prayer. The text shows it. You say: "I don't believe the Bible; I think that those things were merely coincidences, which are often brought as answers to prayer." Do you say that? Was it mere happen so that Elijah prayed for rain just as the rain was going to come anyhow? Did Daniel pray in the wild beasts' den just at the time when all the lions happened to have lockjaw? Did Jesus pray at the grave of Lazarus just at the time when Lazarus was going to dress himself and come out anyhow? Did Jesus lose His place in His sermon, and make a mistake, when He said: "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you?" And, lest some were so stupid they could not understand it, He goes on: "For every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened."

To prove that God does hear prayer, I put on the witness stand Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Ezekiel, Jeremiah, Micah, John, Paul, Peter and King Hezekiah. Tell me, ye ancient battle fields, ye Oriental threshing floors, ye Judean corn fields, ye Galilean fishing smacks, is God deaf and dumb and blind before all human petition? That God answers prayer, I bring the ten millions facts of Christendom to prove. There has never paper enough come out of the paper mills to write the story. Has not many a mother prayed back her bad boy from the ends of the earth—from Canton, from Madras, from Constantinople—until he knelt beside her in the old homestead? Have there not been desperadoes and renegades who have looked into the door of a prayer meeting to laugh and scoff at it, who have been drawn by the power of prayer, until they ran to the altar crying out for mercy? Did not the blacksmith in Lyons, N. Y., pray to God until there came a great awakening that shook the community?

I have had in my own experience, and I have had in the history of my own family, the evidence that God answers prayer. My mother, with three Christian women, assembled week after week and prayed for their children; they kept up that prayer meeting of four persons year after year. The world knew nothing of it. God answered all those prayers. All the group came in; the eleven sons and daughters of my mother came in, myself the last.

Sickness came to my household—hopeless sickness, as it seemed to many. At 3 o'clock on Saturday afternoon the invalid was carried to the steamer for Savannah. At 11 o'clock the next day, being Sunday, standing in this very place, a man of God prayed for the recovery of the sick one. At that time, 11 o'clock, she who had been prostrated three weeks, with some help walked up on deck. The occurrence was as near to being miraculous as I can imagine. That she was hopelessly sick, people who sat up with her night after night, and are here, can testify. That the prayer for her recovery was offered in this pulpit, thousands of people could testify. That at 11 o'clock on that Sunday morning she walked up on deck, as by a miraculous recovery, I call the passengers on the San Jacinto, commanded by Captain Atkins, December 16, to testify. This is no second-hand story.

Prayer impotent! If I dared to think there was no force in prayer, methinks God, after all He has done for me and mine would strike me dead. Prayer impotent! Why it is the mightiest force in the universe. Lightning has no speed, the Alpine avalanche has no power, compared with it.

And now, in conclusion, I have to present you some checks, blank checks, on the bank of heaven, written in blood, and signed by the hand wounded on the cross. It is not safe for you to give a blank check with your name to it. You do not know what might be written above. But here is a blank check which God says I can give you; it is signed by the hand writing of the Lord Jesus Christ, and you can fill it up with anything you want to. "Ask, and it shall be given to you; seek, and ye shall find." I do not say that your prayer will be answered in just the way you expect, but I do say it will be answered in the best way. Oh! will you trust Him? This is the outcome of all this subject.

If I should ask the men and women in this audience who have found God a prayer-answering God to rise up, you would nearly all rise up. In time of darkness and trouble, as in time of light and prosperity, He answered you. I commend you to that God to whom your parents dedicated you in infancy. They believed so much in prayer that their last word was a supplication for you. Having heard you in days of prosperity, He will not reject your last petition, when in the darkened room, after they have wiped the dew of death from your brow, and the whole group of loved ones have kissed you good-by, you have only strength enough left to pray: "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit!"

Poisonous Tin-Plates.

One of the dire consequences of the abnormal rise in the price of tin is the adulteration with lead, because of the greater cheapness of the latter metal. Attention is directed to this fact, by Mr. Jacob Reese, of New York, who points out the importance of the subject to the American people. The Americans are a nation of fruit eaters; indeed, so universally is this true, that it may be said that an American home that did not use canned fruits would be a wonder in the land. The tin cans that hold the fruit are made from tin-plate. Now, it is a well-known fact that tin-plate is made of sheet iron coated with tin. The tin is used because it keeps the iron from rusting, and because it is not affected by the acids present in the fruit. So that, when the iron is coated with pure tin, the fruit will come out of the cans as fresh and as sweet as though bottled in glass vessels. It is not generally known, but it is nevertheless true, that when tin goes up in price, tin-plate manufacturers mix lead with tin, and use amalgam of tin and lead for coating tin plates, because the lead is cheaper. There is now great danger of the tin-plate-makers using lead, which, when coming in contact with the acids of the fruits in canned goods, will produce a deadly poison, which, owing to the extent of the use of canned fruit in the United States, might prove more disastrous to the people than yellow fever or cholera.—Housewife.

MRS. JOHN A. MARTIN, of Fond du Lac, Wis., who has not spoken above a whisper in twelve years, went out shopping last Monday, and, while examining some goods, was surprised to find that her voice had returned in full volume. Nothing like a bargain counter to make a woman talk.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Quantity of Salt for Stock.

It is stated that the proper daily allowance of salt is, for a sheep, one-half to three-fourths of an ounce; for a horse, one ounce; for a fattening hog, one to one and one-half ounce; for a milch cow or work ox, two ounces; for a fattening stall-fed ox, two and one-half to four and one-half ounces. Salt is said to increase the saliva. It certainly seems to make foods more palatable to animals.

Hints About Butchering.

If the hogs to be slaughtered are fed within twelve hours of their killing, the food is wasted, the meat will be more disposed to sour, and it will be more difficult to remove the distended intestines and take from them the lard. Nor is it well to allow the swine to drink on the morning of the day they are killed. Hogs cannot be killed too quickly. The more rapidly they are killed, and the blood got out of them, the better. A well directed blow on the head, between and just in front of the ears, will make the animal unconscious; but the chances for a mis-stroke are so many, and as the stroke makes unfit for use considerable meat, this method of killing cannot be recommended. The use of the shot-gun is no better. The rifle is the weapon to use—a ball on a line from the base of the ear to the opposite eye produces instant death and does not cause the waste of any meat.—American Agriculturist.

Keeping Cabbages for Spring Use.

Cabbages can be kept through the winter out of doors better than they can in the cellar, if the work is properly done. Select a position in the lee of a tight board fence or building, and dig down about two feet. From the bottom of this pit lay a drain that will carry off any water that may come into it, unless the soil is gravelly enough to drain itself. Then lay down some old boards or rails as a floor, and put on that a covering of straw or poor hay. Trim off nearly all the loose outer leaves of the cabbage, just leaving two or three of the innermost ones. Pack them carefully upon the straw, stem end uppermost. The roots may be left on or cut off as may seem most convenient. They seem to keep quite as well when the root is taken off, and they make much better stowage. They cannot be packed too closely, but it is not well to put them more than three or four tiers deep. Cover them now with straw, and upon that put an inch or two of earth. The pile should be highest in the centre, and some of the straw should be allowed to come above the soil at the highest point, that it may act as a ventilator to allow the escape of the warm air in the pit. As the weather grows colder, cover with more earth until it is from one to two feet deep. The object of the covering is not to prevent freezing, but to make the freezing and thawing process as gradual as it can be made. If the heap is a large one, there should be a ventilator of projecting straws to every ten feet square, and these should be so arranged that but little water will go down them. A little will not do any harm. Packed in this way they can be kept until spring, or they can be taken out for market at any time during the winter. If there comes a long thaw in January or February, it will be well to open the heap enough to examine the cabbages to see how they are keeping; but usually if, from the work not having been well done, or from any cause, they begin to decay, it can be detected by the odor which will come from the ventilators at evening after a warm day.—American Cultivator.

Co-operative Dairying.

Mr. John Boyd, well known in dairy circles in the West, believes in co-operative dairying. He has made many speeches in behalf of this plan, showing by facts and figures the profits accruing therefrom. In a communication to the Prairie Farmer he states the case as follows:

The co-operative plan has proved to be the best system of managing creameries. The farmers form a corporation or association, subscribe the necessary capital, and elect officers annually, to attend to the business. A factory is built and equipped, and an experienced butter-maker employed. The cream is brought to the factory, manufactured, the products sold, and the proceeds, after deducting expenses (including 6 per cent on the capital, and usually a small reserve fund), are divided monthly among the patrons, according to the amount of milk or cream each has furnished. In this way, the farmers do the business themselves, at the smallest possible expense, and get all there is to be made out of it. They are independent of contractors, or of private creamery managers. The patrons get their pay regularly, and know whom they are dealing with. By all means, therefore, a creamery should be a farmers' co-operative institution.

One great advantage of the cream-gathering system is that the patron living near the creamery possesses no advantage over the patron living at a distance—the gatherer collects the cream of each, and the expense is borne equally by all. The patrons don't have to spend valuable time delivering their cream to the factory—it is all taken at their own doors. The expense of this method is reduced to a minimum, because of the decreased bulk of cream compared with milk. Those who know the bother of delivering milk at factories or railroad stations twice daily during the busy season will appreciate this point.

Among the other advantages of cream over milk-gathering is the very important fact that the skim milk is left on the farm. If not sold, the skim milk is fed out on the farm, increasing the amount of stock, manure, crops, and thus the whole income of the farm. Nor is there any material shrinkage of cream in handling, owing to its smaller bulk, compared with the loss of a large quantity of milk. The skim milk, being kept clean and sweet, commands a high price in market.

The element of injustice is reduced to the minimum. Milk varies enormously in the quantity of butter it will produce; in cream, this variation is comparatively slight. The same quantity of Jersey milk will produce more spaces of cream than an equal quantity of native cow's milk. Thus the owners of Jerseys or good cows get the benefit of their superior product, instead of having to put it on equality with poor milk. There is, therefore, every inducement to improve one's stock, and breed cows that will give the greatest amount of cream. The result is seen in the better stock in the vicinity of cream-gathering creameries.

The milk of each patron being set in a Cooly creamer, is raised under essentially the same conditions—fully as much so as is milk set in a milk-gathering factory. The injury to the cream by being carried to the creamery is certainly no greater than the injury to the milk by similar transportation, for the cream-transportation cans have an interior floating device to prevent all churning. The last prop of the milk system is thus knocked away.

Scoring Squashes.

Farmers who have a supply of good squashes—such as the Hubbard, for example—should store enough of them for winter use, when they will prove a luxury. Squashes should be kept in a warm, dry place, where they can be frequently looked over to remove the speckled ones. The best temperature is from forty to sixty degrees, and those who have a cellar in which is a furnace for heating the house will find this a good place for storing their supply of squashes. They should be placed on shelves near the furnace, and ought to be looked over often. The best varieties for keeping are the hard-shelled Turban and Hubbard.—New York Witness.

Good Method of Oiling Harness.

To oil harness well, take the harness apart, wherever it can be unbuckled; give each strap a good wash, using lukewarm water with a little washing soda in it. Scrub well with a scrubbing brush, and be sure that you get all the grease and dirt off. Work well in the hands until soft and pliant, for it is no use to apply oil on dry, horny leather, it will never become soft. After this has been done, hang in a room where they will not dry too rapidly, until about three parts dry. Then apply plentifully on both sides pure cod oil—this has more body and lasting quality than any other grease for leather tanned with bark. Besides, if you use neatsfoot oil, rats and mice will eat your harness, while that greased with cod oil they will not touch. After giving a good coat of this oil, hang up until dry. Then I would go over them again with the oil, giving them but a slight coat of it this time. After that dries in, wipe off with a dry, coarse cloth. For common work harness nothing more is needed, but for carriage harness go over with a sponge and castile soap, and wipe with a dry chamois skin, and you may depend upon it there will be no black to rub off your hands.—Courier Journal.

Farm and Garden Notes.

Save the dry leaves for covering tender plants and bedding animals.

It is better to teach the cows gentleness than to saw off their horns.

A calf born in the fall or winter is worth two born in the spring, for profit.

White oak firkins are recommended as best in which to make cucumber pickles, and next to that stoneware.

It is better to have a heifer calf grow lank and pot-bellied but thrifty than one that keeps as "fat as a seal."

Farm machines and tools no longer needed should be put in good repair and safely sheltered for the winter.

Close up all cracks, repair broken windows and make stables and poultry-houses warm and weather-proof.

The planting of the hyacinth, crocus, narcissus and similar hardy bulbs, is in order until the ground freezes up.

"One egg a week will pay for the support of a hen," is the way one authority computes it. The rest is pure profit.

The gentle yet hardy little Kerry cows, so valued by the Irish cottagers, are claimed to be unequaled for family dairy purposes.

Waldo F. Brown tells in Ohio Farmer that he has experimented with salt as a fertilizer and has seen no effect whatever from its use.

"If you want a cow to do her best give her just as good quarters and as good care as you do your favorite horse," advises a Pennsylvania farmer.

Pasturing meadows in the fall not only lessens the fertility of the soil, but leaves the roots unprotected, and causes the ground to heave more easily in winter.

It is better to buy grain for cows, and feed pretty liberally of the growing corn crop, rather than turn stock on young clover, though the present copious rains may make the present autumn an exception in some sections.

Small potatoes, pumpkins, sugar beets, mangels and turnips thoroughly cooked and mixed with a mixture of equal parts ground oats, corn and mill feed form a food recommended by Baltimore American for fattening fall pigs.

Cork dust, in which Malaga grapes are shipped to dealers all over the country, and which can often be had from local merchants for the asking, is suggested by Orchard and Garden as excellent material in which the home consumer may keep grapes.

Experiments at the Iowa Agricultural College Station seem to prove that when infested land is ploughed up in order to bury the chinch bug, the furrow, to be effective, must be cut six inches deep, and when the land is not too hard, an inch or two deeper is advisable.

As soon as the foraging season is over, says the Fanciers' Review, market the fowls, as the expense of feeding will then be greatly increased. The earlier one can get the poultry to market the greater the profit. It costs more to keep a chicken from the middle of October to Thanksgiving Day than during the three preceding months.

Cutting dry corn fodder into one-half inch lengths does not add anything to its nutritive elements, but Professor Henry has found by actual test that it will cause it to produce from ten to forty per cent. more butter. All that is here done is by mechanical means, putting the fodder in better shape for digestion. Digestion costs force, and force costs fodder.

Do not mass your fowls. If you have but one acre of land to devote to poultry, divide it into eighths, and put not more than twenty-five to a flock, which will make room for two hundred fowls. The same area will not keep fifty if allowed to run together as well as the larger number separated. In fact two hundred fowls will hardly flourish on five acres if kept en masse. Let your motto be, small flocks and complete separation.

A Burglar's Imperturbability.

The remarkable coolness of a Pittsburg burglar assisted him to escape. He broke into a laundry; and while sorting the garments into a large clothes basket was surprised by two officers, who appeared at a window opening into the yard. The fellow worked so systematically and quietly that the officials thought that perhaps he was an employe of the establishment, and they, therefore asked him why he worked at so late an hour. He replied: "I am getting the things ready for the girls, who will be up soon to do the ironing. I get $40 a month, and have to work awful hard to keep my place." He then went to the window and putting his arms on the sill said: "My, but this is a disagreeable night to be out in. I would not like to be in the place of either of you gentlemen. Won't you come inside and take a drink? I will open the wine cellar for you." The officers started for the kitchen door in the rear part of the yard, and the thief thereupon made for the front door and escaped, carrying with him many of the garments.—Times-Democrat.

It has been discovered that wash leather is almost as good a ground as velvet for painting. Made into hankerchief or glove boxes it may be decorated very prettily, and any one who understands painting on velvet can paint on the leather without trouble.

A lady of Glenn Falls, N. Y., it is said, has a poplin gown, still handsome and serviceable, that has been in wearing thirty-eight years, and various and sundry silks whose age is about twenty each. Needless to add, she is more than comfortably rich, as only in that event would she be able to give her garments the care needed to preserve them.

Brakeman's Slang.

The brakeman gives the prevailing tone to the "society" of despatchers' lobbies and other lounging places which he frequents. He originates whatever slang may be deemed necessary to give spice to the talk of the caboose and roundhouse. He calls a gravel train a "dust express," and refers to the pump for compressing air for the power-brakes as a "wind-jammer." The fireman's prosaic labors are lightened by being poetically mentioned as the handling of black diamonds, and the mortification of being called into the Superintendent's office to explain some dereliction of duty is disguised by referring to the episode as "dancing on the carpet."

Will Have a Monument.

Rhode Island people are raising money for a monument to Thos. W. Dorr, hero of the Dorr war, and leader in the movement to substitute a constitution for the King Charles charter. Dorr was elected governor of Rhode Island in 1841 by the opponents to the old charter, and, although defeated and imprisoned by Governor King and his party, his ideas finally prevailed. The extension of suffrage by the Bourn Act has started the idea of a monument to the leader of constitutional liberty.

S. S. S. FOR THE BLOOD.

Swift's Specific has cured me of a malignant breaking out on my leg, which caused intolerable pain. It was called Eczema by the doctors—four of whom treated me with no relief. I candidly confess that I owe my present good health to S. S. S., which in my estimation is invaluable as a blood remedy.

Caheen Declares and Pledges himself to sell Dry Goods and Millinery cheaper than other houses can buy them. Our business has been a grand success, and we truly appreciate the large patronage bestowed upon us. We shall always endeavor to merit a continuance of popular favor by offering such inducements and unexcelled bargains to the people of Birmingham and vicinity, that the crowds of buyers will seek our double store (filled with desirable Dry Goods) in preference to any other. We are not selfish in our dealings, for when our New York buyer ships us our car loads of Dry Goods, bought direct from manufacturers, at the lowest cash prices, we do not ask our customers a double profit, but at once divide the jobbers' profit with our patrons. A practice at Caheen's: QUICK SALES AND SMALL PROFITS.

THE BROOKLYN DIVINE'S SUNDAY SERMON.

Subject: "Barnlike Birthplaces."

TEXT: "Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger. And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host."—Luke ii., 12-13.

At midnight from one of the galleries of the sky a chant broke. To an ordinary observer there was no reason for such a celestial demonstration. A poor man and wife—travelers, Joseph and Mary by name—had lodged in an outhouse of an unimportant village. The supreme hour of solemnity had passed, and upon the pallid forehead and cheek of Mary God had set the dignity, the grandeur, the tenderness, the everlasting and divine significance of motherhood.

But such scenes had often occurred in Bethlehem, yet never before had a star been unfixed, or had a baton of light marshaled over the hills a winged orchestra. If there had been such brilliant and mighty recognition at an advent in the house of Pharaoh, or at an advent in the house of Cæsar, or the house of Hapsburg, or the house of Stuart, we would not so much have wondered; but a barn seems too poor a center for such delicate and archangelic circumference. The stage seems too small for so great an act, the music too grand for such unappreciative auditors, the window of the stable too rude to be serenaded by other worlds.

No, sir. No, madam. It is my joy this morning to tell you what was born that night in the village barn; and, as I want to make my discourse accumulative and climacteric, I begin, in the first place, by telling you that, that night, in the Bethlehem manger, was born (I.) encouragement for all the poorly started. He had only two friends—they His parents. No satin lined cradle, no delicate attentions, but straw, and the cattle, and the coarse joke and banter of the camel drivers. No wonder the mediæval painters represent the oxen as kneeling before the infant Jesus, for there were no men there at that time to worship. From the depths of what poverty He rose, until to-day He is honored in all Christendom, and sits on the Imperial throne in Heaven.

What name is mightiest to-day in Christendom? Jesus. Who has more friends on earth than any other being? Jesus. Before whom do the most thousands kneel in chapel and church and cathedral this hour? Jesus. For whom could one hundred million souls be marshaled, ready to fight or die? Jesus. From what depths of poverty to what height of renown! And so let all those who are poorly started remember that they cannot be more poorly born, or more disadvantageously than this Christ. Let them look up to His example while they have time and eternity to imitate it.

Do you know that the vast majority of the world's deliverers had barnlike birthplaces? Luther, the emancipator of religion, born among the mines. Shakespeare, the emancipator of literature, born in a humble home at Stratford-on-Avon. Columbus, the discoverer of a world, born in poverty at Genoa. Hogarth, the discoverer of how to make art accumulative and administrative of virtue, born in a humble home at Westmoreland. Kitto and Prideaux, whose keys unlocked new apartments in the Holy Scriptures which had never been entered, born in want. Yea, I have to tell you that nine out of ten of the world's deliverers, nine out of ten of the world's messiahs—the messiahs of science, the messiahs of law, the messiahs of medicine, the messiahs of poverty, the messiahs of grand benevolence—were born in want.

I suppose that when Herschel, the great astronomer, was born in the home of a poor musician, not only one star, but all the stars he afterward discovered, pointed down to his manger. I suppose when Haydn, the German composer, was born in the humble home of a poor wheelwright that all the angels of music chanted over the manger. Oh, what encouragement for those who are poorly started. Ye who think yourselves far down aspire to go high up!

I stir your holy ambitions to-day, and I want to tell you, although the whole world may be opposed to you, and inside and outside of your occupations or professions there may be those who would hinder your ascent, on your side and enlisted in your behalf are the sympathetic heart and the almighty arm of One who, one Christmas night about eighteen hundred and eighty-eight years ago, was wrapped in swaddling clothes and laid in a manger. Oh, what magnificent encouragement for the poorly started!

II. Again, I have to tell you that in that village barn that night was born good will to men, whether you call it kindness, or forbearance, or forgiveness, or geniality, or affection, or love. It was no sport of high heaven to send its favorite to that humiliation. It was a sacrifice for a rebellious world. After the calamity in Paradise, not only did the ox begin to gore, and the adder to sting, and the elephant to smite with his tusk, and the lion to put to bad use tooth and paw, but under the very tree from which the forbidden fruit was plucked were batched out war and revenge, and malice and envy and jealousy, and the whole brood of cockatrices.

But against that scene I set the Bethlehem manger, which says: "Bless rather than curse, endure rather than assault," and that Christmas night puts out vindictiveness. It says: "Sheathe your sword, dismount your guns, dismantle your batteries, turn the war ship Constellation, that carried shot and shell, into a grain ship to take food to famished Ireland, hook your cavalry horses to the plow, use your deadly gunpowder in blasting rocks and in patriotic celebration, stop your lawsuits, quit writing anonymous letters, extract the sting from your sarcasm, let your wit coruscate but never burn, drop all the harsh words from your vocabulary—'Good will to men.'"

"Oh!" you say, "I can't exercise it; I won't exercise it until they apologize; I won't forgive them until they ask me to forgive them." You are no Christian then—I say you are no Christian, or you are a very inconsistent Christian. If you forgive not men their trespasses, how can you expect your Heavenly Father to forgive you? Forgive them if they ask your forgiveness, and forgive them anyhow. Shake hands all around. "Good will to men."

Oh, my Lord Jesus, drop that spirit into our hearts this Christmas hour. I tell you what the world wants more than anything else—more helping hands, more sympathetic [illegible] kind words that never [illegible] disposition to give other people a ride, and to carry the heavy end of the load and give other people the light end, and to ascribe good motives instead of bad, and to find our happiness in making others happy.

Out of that Bethlehem crib let the bear and the lion eat straw like an ox. "Good will to men." That principle will yet settle all controversies, and under it the world will keep on improving until there will be only two antagonists in all the earth, and they will side by side take the jubilant sleigh ride intimated by the prophet when he said: "Holiness shall be on the bells of the horses."

III. Again, I remark that born that Christmas night in the village barn was sympathetic union with other worlds. The only skepticism I have ever had about Christianity was an astronomical skepticism which said: "Why would God out of the heavens and amid the Jupiters and Saturns of the universe have chosen our little bit of a world for the achievements of His only begotten Son when He might have had a vaster scale and vaster worlds?" But my skepticism is all gone as I come to the manger and watch its surroundings. Now I see all the worlds are sisters, and that when one weeps they all weep and when one sings they all sing.

From that supernatural grouping in the cloud banks over Bethlehem, and from the especial trains that ran down to the scene, I find that our world is beautifully and gloriously and magnificently surrounded. The meteors are with us, for one of them ran to point down to the birthplace. The heavens are with us, because at the thought of our redemption they roll hosannas out of the midnight sky.

Oh! yes; I do not know but our world may be better surrounded than we have sometimes imagined; and when a child is born angels fetch it, and when it dies angels take it, and when an old man bends under the weight of years angels uphold him, and when a heart breaks angels soothe it. Angels in the hospital to take care of the sick. Angels in the cemetery to watch our dead. Angels in church ready to fly heavenward with the news of repentant souls. Angels above the world. Angels under the world. Angels all around the world.

Rub the dust of human imperfection out of your eyes, and look into the heavens and see angels of pity, angels of mercy, angels of pardon, angels of help, angels crowned, angels charioted. The world defended by angels, girdled by angels, cohorted by angels—clouds of angels. Hear David cry out: "The chariots of God are twenty thousand. Even thousands of angels." But the mightiest angel stood not that night in the clouds over Bethlehem; the mightiest angel that night lay among the cattle—the Angel of the new covenant.

As the clean, white linen sent in by some motherly villager was being wrapped around the little form of that Child Emperor not a cherub, not a seraph, not an angel, not a world but wept and thrilled and shouted. Oh! yes, our world is only a silver rung of a great ladder, at the top of which is our Fathers's house. No more stellar solitariness for our world, not a friendless planet spun out into space to freeze, but a world in the bosom of divine maternity. A star harnessed to a manger.

IV. Again, I remark that that night born in that village barn was the offender's hope. Some sermonizers may say I ought to have projected this thought at the beginning of the sermon. Oh, no. I wanted you to rise toward it. I wanted you to examine the cornelians and the jaspers and the emeralds and the chrysalis before I showed you the Kohinoor—the crown jewel of the ages.

Oh! That jewel had a very poor setting. The cub of bear is born amid the grand old pillars of the forest, the whelp of the lion takes its first step from the jungle of luxuriant leaf and wild flower, the kid of goat is born in cavern chandeliered with stalactite and pillared with stalagmite. Christ was born in a bare barn. Yet that nativity was the offender's hope. Over the door of heaven are written these words: "None but the sinless may enter here."

"Oh, horror," you say, "that shuts us all out." No. Christ came to the world in one door and He departed through another door. He came through the door of the manger and He departed through the door of the sepulcher, and His one business was so to wash away our sins that one second after we are dead there will be no more sin about us than about the eternal God.

I know that is putting it strongly, but that is what I understand by full remission. All erased, all washed away, all scoured out, all gone. That undergirding and overreaching and irradiating and imparadising possibility for you and for me and for the whole race was given on that Christmas night.

Do you wonder we bring flowers to-day to celebrate such an event? Do you wonder that we take organ and cornet and youthful voice and queenly soloist to celebrate it? Do you wonder that Raphael and Rubens, and Titian and Giotto and Ghirlandajo, and all the old Italian and German painters gave the mightiest stroke of the pencil to sketch the Madonna, Mary and her boy?

Oh! now I see what the manger was. Not so high as the gilded and jeweled and embroidered cradle of the Henrys of England, or the Louises of France, or the Fredericks of Prussia. Now I find out of that Bethlehem crib fed not so much the oxen of the stall as the white horses of Apocalyptic vision. Now I find the swaddling clothes enlarging and emblazoning into an imperial robe for a conqueror. Now I find that the star of that Christmas night was only the diamond sandal of Him who hath the moon under His feet. Now I come to understand that the music of that night was not complete song, but only the stringing of the instruments for a great chorus of two worlds, the bass to be carried by earthly nations saved, and the soprano by kingdoms of glory won.

"Oh, heaven, heaven, heaven! I shall meet you there. After all our imperfections are gone I shall meet you there. I look out to-day, through the mist of years, through the fog that rises from the cold Jordan, through the wide open door of solid pearl, to that reunion. I expect to see you there as certainly as I see you here. What a time we shall have in high converse, talking over sins pardoned, and sorrows comforted, and battles triumphant!

I am going in. I am going to take all my family with me. I am going to take all my church with me. I am going to take all my friends and neighbors with me. I have so much faith in manger and cross I feel sure of it. I am going to coax you in. I am going to push you in. By holy strategem I am going to surprise you in. Yes, with all the concentrated energy of my nature—physical, [illegible] to compel you to go in. I like you so well I want to spend eternity with you!

Some of your children have already gone. Some time ago I buried one of them, and though people passing along the street and seeing white crape on the doorbell may have said: "It is only a child," yet when the broken hearted father came to solicit my service he said: "Come around and comfort us, for though she was only fifteen months' old we loved her so much." Ah! it does not take long for a child to get its arms around the parent's whole nature.

What a Christmas morning it will make when those with whom you used to keep the holidays are all around you in heaven! Silver haired old father young again, and mother who had so many aches and pains and decrepitudes well again, and all your brothers and sisters and the little ones. How glad they will be to see you!

They have been waiting. The last time they saw your face it was covered with tears and distress, and pallid from long watching, and one of them I can imagine to-day, with one hand holding fast the shining gate, and the other hand swung out toward you, saying:

> Steer this way, father, steer straight for me;
> Here safe in heaven I am waiting for thee.

Oh! those Bethelehem angels, when they went back after the concert that night over the hills, forgot to shut the door. All the secret is out. No more use of trying to hide from us the glories to come. It is too late to shut the gate. It is blocked wide open with hosannas marching this way and hallelujahs marching that way.

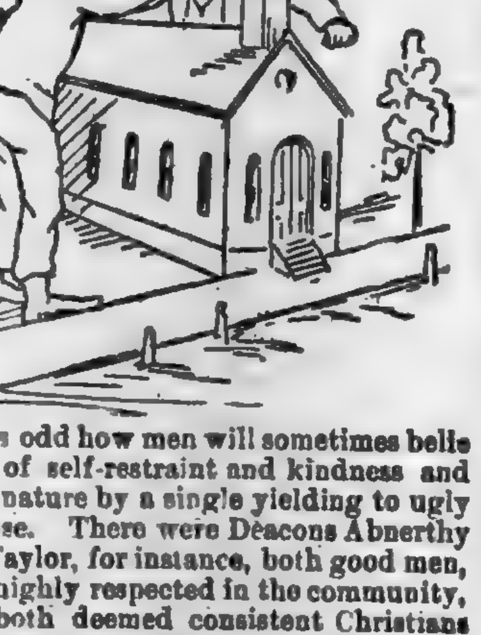
What almost unmans me is the thought that it is provided for such sinners as you and I have been. If it had been provided only for those who had always thought right, and spoken right and acted right, you and I would have had no interest in it, had no share in it; you and I would have stuck to the raft mid-ocean, and let the ship sail by, carrying perfect passengers from a perfect life on earth to a perfect life in heaven.

Oh! I have heard the Commander of that ship is the same great and glorious and sympathetic One who hushed the tempest around the boat on Galilee, and I have heard that all the passengers on the ship are sinners saved by grace. And so we hail the ship, and it bears down this way, and we come by the side of it and ask the Captain two questions: "Who art Thou? and whence?" and He says: "I am Captain of Salvation, and I am from the manger." Oh! bright Christmas morning of my soul's delight. Chime all the bells. Wreathe all the garlands. Rouse all the anthems. Shake hands in all the congratulations.

Merry Christmas! Merry with the thought of sins forgiven, merry with the idea of sorrows comforted, merry with the raptures to come. Oh! lift that Christ from the manger and lay Him down in all our hearts. We may not bring to Him as costly a present as the magi brought, but we bring to His feet and to the manger to-day the frankincense of ous joy, the pearls of our tears, the kiss of our love, the prostration of our worship.

Down at His feet, all churches, all ages, all earth, all heaven. Down at His feet the four-and-twenty elders on their faces. Down the "great multitude that no man can number." Down Michael, the archangel! Down all worlds at His feet and worship. "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men!"

A Literal Illustration.



It is odd how men will sometimes belie a life of self-restraint and kindness and good nature by a single yielding to ugly impulse. There were Deacons Abnerthy and Taylor, for instance, both good men, both highly respected in the community, and both deemed consistent Christians until there came the difficulty as to the style of the new house of worship. It was as pitiful as it was ridiculous to see these two good men "fighting over a church."—Chicago Times.

MONGOLIAN DUDES.

A PHASE OF ORIENTAL LIFE IN SAN FRANCISCO.

The Sunday Promenade in Chinatown—Pig-Tailed Beau Brummels Who Import Their Wardrobes from Peking.

The Mongolian "masher" is as distinctive a character in Chinatown as the American dude is on Kearny and Market streets on fine afternoons. The sameness of Chinese faces and costumes is often remarked by superficial observers, and all strangers unused to Chinese find it impossible to distinguish one of the Asiatics from another. The observant San Franciscan, however, possesses an eye educated in the discernment of Chinese physiognomy, and can detect as much difference in the faces of Mongolians as he can in those of his own race.

It is wrong, however, to think that in the matter of dress the Chinese are all disposed to conform to one model. The plain blouse of the ordinary coolie is so often seen on the streets of San Francisco that one may be pardoned for thinking that it is the universal fashion. Chinese would probably entertain a somewhat similar opinion about the ordinary coat worn by Americans, but we all know that there are as many varieties of the sack coat, for example, as there are globe trotters at the Palace Hotel or toughs in Tar Flat.

The Chinese dude, like his white brother, regards with contempt the efforts of local tailors, and, whenever possible, imports his finery. The corner of Dupont and Sacramento streets was formerly a favorite resort for the Mongolian gentleman of fashion. Here, on Sunday afternoons, quite an array of highly-dressed Oriental fops could be seen ogling the belles of the surrounding alleys. The painted sex in Chinatown is not relatively very numerous, so that the sight of a gaudily attired beauty in figured silk was calculated to create quite a flutter among the mob of pigtailed dudes.

THE SWELL BARBER.

Complaints from the Mongolian merchants in the vicinity of the mashers' favorite corner caused the police to give the Hongkong fashionables some pointed attentions. This official interference, combined with the effect of a new cable line on Sacramento street, caused the favorite promenade to lose its prestige. The fashion and beauty of Spofford alley and the adjacent by-ways of Chinatown moved west for its flirtatious recreation. The east side of Stockton street, between Pacific and Clay, is now the ultra-fashionable promenade of Chinatown, and there, on fine Sunday afternoons, the frescoed belles of the colony repair to delight the eyes of the pig-tailed mashers.

While the male sex is greatly in the majority in Chinatown, the women are by no means scarce, and for a couple of hours in the afternoon quite a spirited flirtation is carried along the two blocks of the promenade.

There is no need of a special officer to segregate the two grades of Mongolian men-about-town. The oleaginous sausage-makers and their intimates drift naturally into their station in the unfashionable section. If by chance one of the undeveloped mashers of the lower strata gets out of his element he soon realizes that he is misplaced and skurries out of range of the contemptuous sneers that reach him on the fashionable reserve.

The Oriental belles of Spofford alley and Murderers' row take dinner at noon, and about 2 o'clock the domestic duties of dishwashing, etc., having been duly discharged the bedizened beauties are ready to sally out for fresh conquests. The procession, so to speak, forms, as a rule, on Dupont street, between Clay and Jackson, and the line of march is from Dupont to Jackson, to Stockton, where it countermarches, and is reviewed by the assemblage of pig-tailed heart-smashers.

Custom prescribes that the unmarried damsels of modest years may show themselves only once on the promenade. To atone for this harsh edict of society they are allowed to walk as slow as they please. Married dames may countermarch once on the promenade without incurring censure. Widows being a law unto themselves can trot up and down the promenade as long as their breath lasts.

It is against all the rules of Chinese propriety that any woman should stand to chat with an acquaintance on the promenade or acknowledge any salutation by more than a smile. There being no old maids in Chinatown, that branch of the female condition needs no special rules, and the general code is thereby much simplified.

The behavior of the promenading belles is propriety itself. The almond-eyed damsels, with marital aspirations, trip along on their doubled-up toes, with their eyes glued to the sidewalk. No amount of ogling can make them hold up their heads, and the greatest favor that the most fascinating masher can obtain is one swift sidelong glance, that is thrown at him as unexpectedly as a brick on Brannan street. The recipient of this fleeting favor is immediately convulsed with delight, and the whole row of his associate mashers set up a gabble that is only quieted by the appearance of a fresh beauty.

The married belles stroll along, accompanied by a slipshod old duenna, who carries a bunch of keys as formidable as a sandclub. This old dame invariably possesses an eye like an auger, and by keeping it steadily fixed on the line of pig-tailed mashers, generally subdues all attempts at familiarity. If her ocular science of repression be not equal to the occasion, she cheerfully raps the giddy masher on the noddle with her bunch of keys and passes on calmly, while his companions take him off to be sticking-plastered. The widows perambulate alone, with their heads up like wild geese in a cornfield, while a running fire of complimentary comment greets them along the length of the line of mashers. The greatest social triumph that the object of this attention can achieve is to appear totally oblivious to all the remarks on her personal appearance. If she succeed in suppressing every sign of consciousness, and walk just as unmoved as if in the solitude of her boudoir in a Jackson street garret, her name is posted in every highbinders' club for a week, and the most prominent members of the profession would esteem it a treat to be sent to State Prison for trying to kidnap her. Nothing is considered sufficient excuse, however, to justify a Chinese gentleman in following the object of his sudden admiration to her domestic refuge.

The attire in which the more distinguished mashers appear on the fashionable promenade is both rich and costly. The "ten-cent" dudes are chiefly patrons of Bartlett alley and Kum Cook alley haberdashers, and never look like anything else than what they are. The veriest tyro in the art of cataloguing Chinese would never peg them up higher than lodging-house chambermaids or ordinary washhouse slaves let loose for an afternoon. The genuine mashers are gentry of a totally different stripe, and look like newly imported mandarins from Peking. They all affect the truly Asiatic garb, and never fall into the unpardonable crime against Chinese fashion of appearing on the promenade in domestic pantaloons, or American shoes or hats. A genuine Anglomaniac would as soon paint his face and sit on the Palace Hotel steps wrapped in a Mission blanket, like a native American, as a true Mongolian swell would sport a stiff brimmed hat and a pair of doeskin pantaloons.

A MONGOLIAN SPORT.

No local knight of the goose ever gets his murderous shears on the wardrobe of the Mongolian dude. His coats, blouses, [illegible] imported. The accompanying portraits, taken from life on the promenade by the Chronicle's talented artists, give valuable ideas as to the correct things in the wardrobe of a Chinese dude of the true Peking pattern.

The first portrait is that of a popular barber on Jackson street, whose blouses of blue and orange silk, with trousers and shoes to match, have made him such a noted figure on the Sunday promenade that his union with the sleek daughter of one of the most prosperous fish peddlers on Bartlett alley is considered a fixed event.

PEKING PANTALOONS.

The person in the fur-trimmed jacket is a fine type of the sporting Chinese gentleman of the modern school, who can handle a flatiron, a dicebox or a tomahawk with equal facility. The fullness of his figure is explained by the fact that he ordinarily wears three padded blouses and on state occasions dons a steel-plated shirt, weighing twenty pounds and impervious to bowie knife or pistol bullet. His costume is too expensive for the tinhorn gamblers and petty chicken thieves to copy, and though some of these gentry appear occasionally on the promenade in fur-trimmed blouses, their general air of cheapness gives them away as bogus sports, and they are relegated to the "ten-cent" division.

The Chinese gentleman whose rear view is so faithfully given illustrates graphically the very latest Peking fashion in pantaloons and hats. Before his introduction to society in Kum Cook alley some time ago through the medium of a Federal Court habeas corpus, it was popularly supposed in Chinatown that pantaloons should conform to the human figure. The new arrival from Peking created a sensation by appearing at the opening of the new rotisserie on Stout's alley with his unmentionables depending so low that his heels kept the garment in a state of agitation. The reception committee, consisting of the high priest of the Pow Sun Low Joss-house on Waverly place and the managers of the Jackson Street Theater, hurriedly took the loosely attired guest into a side room and explained to him that he was likely to lose an important part of his clothing if he did not immediately repair the damage to his parted suspenders. The new arrival from Peking laughed at the advice and abashed the committee by informing them that the droop in the rearward section of his pantaloons was the very latest thing in Oriental tailoring and had received the sanction of the imperial knight of the needle himself.

Since then all the fashionable pantaloons have ceased to conform to the outlines of the figure and have the proper fashionable looseness in the upper portions. Pantaloons of the American pattern with straight legs are tabooed by even the "ten-cent" division of dudes. All fashionable pantaloons must be made of silk, and tied at the ankle with a string. The hat worn by the reformer of pantaloons is also a new Chinese style. It is of a stiff, glazed felt, not unlike a Derby hat, and can only be obtained by sending direct to the best Peking hatters.

The picture of the person with the umbrella in hand is the portrait of a young Chinese diplomat en route to Europe. His long-tailed surtout, which is faintly suggestive of a night-gown, is of maroon silk. The flowing garment, leggins of flowered silk and a blue cap with a flaming ruby for a button, make a costume which has created a great sensation on the Stockton street promenade and relegated several aspiring Spofford alley Beau Brummels to obscurity. Many other striking types of highly dressed Chinese gentlemen could be given. Sufficient have been shown, however, to disprove the erroneous belief that Chinese fashion in dress is immutable and that Confucius set the styles of the Oriental mashers of to-day.—San Francisco Chronicle.

AN AFRICAN TELEPHONE.

Ingenious Method Employed by the Cameroon Natives.

A part of Reclus's map showing the tribes who live in the Cameroon district, West Africa, is shaded to show exactly what portion of the country is the home of the four or five little tribes who have perfected an ingenious and practical telephone system that distinguishes them from all the other natives of Africa. Everywhere among the blacks of Africa the big drum or tam-tam is used in war and on festive occasions, but it is only these Cameroon natives who have discovered how useful the tam-tam may be made as a rapid promulgator of news over mountain and plain.

Of course, the news is telephoned by drumming on the tam-tam, but the sounds produced are not signals. They represent syllables and words, and so grow into sentences like the ticks of a telegraph instrument. It is a very ingenious invention, and deserves to rank with any of our own devices for the rapid transmission of news that were in vogue before the electric telegraph superseded them. The force and rapidity with which the instrument is beaten are elements in the interpretation of the idea to be expressed, and syllables and words are also formed by combinations of strokes, something like the Morse alphabet. It is a complicated system, and speaks highly for the intelligence of the people who devised it.

The system is a secret that is confided to only about 200 of the natives. Though five or six of the white residents and explorers in that region have told all they know about the tam-tam telephone its language is as yet wholly unintelligible to them, as the secret is carefully guarded. Only a few women have been instructed in the art, and no slaver is permitted to acquire it.

It is the duty of every operator to be ready, if need be, when he hears the tam-tam to repeat the message, which is taken up in turn by operators further inland. In this way any news may be communicated for a distance of forty or fifty miles in a few hours. Thus the chiefs correspond with one another, and no important news happens that is not promptly telephoned all over the district. When a ship arrives at the mouth of the Cameroon River, the tam-tam may be heard beating far up the side of the neighboring mountains, and the news is repeated from drummer to drummer until it reaches the furthest confines of the district. If a white party proposes to visit some chief in the interior, the tam-tam carries the news to him that white visitors are coming almost before they have started on their journey. Thus our benighted African brother has taught himself a way to annihilate space and to transmit his thoughts on the wings of the wind.

THE establishment of a cremation society in Glasgow has elicited from the Duke of Argyll an expression of opinion which may probably be taken as representative. "Cremation," says the Duke, "is a subject from which I rather turn away, but I do not think it is unscriptural. It is an open question, and the progress of population may make it almost a physical necessity." When such a mind as the Duke of Argyll's assumes this attitude, the cause of cremation is practically won. It is not in normal human nature to take pleasure in contemplating the accompaniments of "eloquent, just and mighty death!" But there is one subject from which men are beginning to "turn away" with still more horror, and that is decomposition. It is not an idea on which even dukes can dwell with complacency.

To "COTTON," meaning to agree with, to take to, is now a common colloquial expression. As the poet says in "The Ingoldsby Legends:"

> "For when once Madame Fortune deals out her hard raps,
> It's amazing to think
> How one cottons to drink!"

This use of the word, however, was common several centuries ago. It is found occasionally in the Elizabethan writers; but perhaps the earliest known example is the following from Thomas Drant's translation of Horace, published in 1567:

> "So feyneth he, things trew and false
> So alwayes mingleth he,
> That first with midst, and midst with last,
> Maye cottes and agree."

THERE have been various estimates of the value of the property left by the late William Warren. It is known that very recently he held $[illegible] in one issue of Boston city bonds, and that he has held at times Boston and Maine and other railroad stocks and bonds, but how largely it is not known. He lost in some Western investments, made through a broker, some time ago, and a movement to recover failed. Chicago real estate was one of his favorite investments, but to what extent he entered into it is not known to his intimate friends. [illegible]

The Dispatch says that the movement of negroes from that section to Louisiana and the west still continues.

We asked a man the other day to subscribe for the Whig and he replied: "I've already larnt mor'n I wanter know." We didn't press the subject.—Eutaw Whig.

Mr. Chappell Cory, of the Montgomery Advertiser, has accepted the position of managing editor of the Birmingham Herald. Mr. Cory is one of the few editors in the state whose efforts have been a judicious mixture of brains and studious labor. The Birmingham papers can now with reason claim that there is some braine connected with the professon of that city.—Fort Payne Journal.

Since the Immigration Convenmet in Montgomery we have been anxiously looking for some tangible results from the meeting since it was heralded with a flourish of trumpets and proclaimed to be a sure means of bringing immigrants southward in a steady stream. What has that convention accomplished anyway beyond giving the members an opportunity to let loose some of their bottled eloquence and saturate themselves with Montgomery beer?—Fort Payne Journal.

We have been informed that several postmasters in Elmore county, who tell the subscribers "that the Wetumpka papers are not worth a d-n" and at the same time ardently canvass their listener for a subscription to the New York Sun or some other dollar weekly that contains a large amount of reading matter. These foreign papers do not contain your county advertising or any other matter of local interests neither do they acquaint you with the status of your home markets. Practically they are about as valuable to you as a 10 cent novel.—Wetumpka Times.

Birmingham is a serious sufferer from the thousands of convicts from every portion of the State which have been turned loose upon her environs. Every citizen of the State should feel proud to see such a magnificient city growing up in Alabama, and every barrier to her future progress and greatness should be removed. The present legislature will be asked to pass a law requiring all convicts to be returned to the counties from whence they were sentenced when they have served their time in the mines, and such a law is demanded in justice to Birmingham and Jefferson county. It ought to be passed.

A fight is on between the Farmers Alliance and commercial fertilizer companies.

Cotton seed meal, which has been used very extensively by the farmers of Alabama is now priced at $21 per ton, cash down. Last year it was sold at $20 per ton. While the cash price per ton is $21 if the farmers buy the meal to fertilize this year's crops and pay for it next fall it will cost then from $23 to $25 per ton.

All the other commercial fertilizers used in this country have been raised in price $2.50 per ton.

The Alliance men say the prices have been raised by a combination and they propose to run a combine of their own and refuse to buy fertilizers until a reduction is made.

In answer to a question, "Is marriage a failure?" we would ask, "is the home a failure?" Is the christian religion a failure? Far better ask, "is justice a failure?" To this we would most heartily answer, yes! and will be so long as pure women are the other halves of impure men. That the question, "Is marriage a failure?" has become general and is being general seriously discussed is an evidence only that law and and decency are failures, and that human intellect has become as feeble as the human heart is corrupt. When the French nation substituted reason for God they had not gone much further in mental degradation than the American people have got in moral degradation when they consent to seriously discuss the question "Is marriage a failure?"

Another Horrible Crime.

A negro murdered a child and its mother in the woods near Pratt Mines last week. At last accounts the mother was alive but there were no hopes of her recovery. Several negroes were arrested and taken before the woman for identification. She stated that one of them, George Meadows, looked "awfully like the man," and some hours later Meadows was swung to a tree and his body riddled with bullets.

High Living.

Somebody is reported to have said that one half the world don't know how the other half lives. The princely lumber manufacturer of the hard wood, poplar and blue grass regions of Tennessee, Kentucky, and adjoining localities, where the blood horse, the lordly short horn, the butter-giving Jersey, and the lard-producing Berkshire contribute to his table, who feasts royally every day on hog and hominy with plenty of gravy with it, don't know and cannot appreciate how high a living our friends in the "piney woods" of Alabama enjoy, where they are deprived of these luxuries. They do live well and are noted for their fine physical development, their robust health, great longevity, and large size of their families. Their leading article of diet is the sweet potato. Many years ago, the Hon. J. F. H. Claiborne, who canvassed the piney woods district of Alabama as a candidate for Congress, and who was a good story teller, gave a humorous account of his experience, which has been reproduced in the Clarion-Ledger as follows:

Traveling through that portion known as the piney woods region, he stopped for the night at the house of a widow lady. It happened to be Sunday, and most of the family had been to church and had returned home quite late, so that what had been cooked for dinner was set on the table for supper. There was not a dish but potato was the principal ingredient. They had potatoes baked, roasted, stewed and fried; a baked chicken with potato dressing; potato pies and custard, potato bread, potato coffee and potato beer, and in fact every dish was either potatoes or had potatoes in it.

Col. Claiborne paid a universal eulogy upon the universal vegetable, to which the lady of the house replied that some people thought the piney woods too poor to make a living in, but it was the greatest potato country in the world, and if people only knew it, they could live well in the piney woods on potatoes only. She said:

"We live on them, feed our stock on them, fatten our hogs on them, and in fact we want but little else than potatoes."

Before retiring, Col. Claiborne went to the stable to see his horse, and was astonished to see the trough full of potatoes and the rack full of vines. Upon retiring, he found that the mattress upon which he was to sleep was stuffed with potato leaves. He had been complaining of sore throat and soreness of one of his eyes. No sooner had he retired than the landlady made her appearance with a potato poultice to apply to his throat, and assured him that if he would allow her to squeeze a drop of potato juice in his eye the soreness would disappear by morning.

We clip the foregoing from the Southern Lumberman. If the editor of the Lumberman will come down to central Alabama we can promise to show him some potatoes, and he can secure 2500 new subscribers in this section if he will only take pay in potatoes.

The View for 1889 proposes to continue a conservative paper for our home people. Those who feel disposed to assist it in gathering news of interest and importance to the public and those who may feel sufficiently interested in Chilton county, her welfare and progress, and desire to assist in advertising their home county to the world are solicited to aid us by letting us hear from them when anything of consequence or of public interest may occur in their localities. We want to give you as good a paper as we can, and intend to do so. Outside of Alabama the View every week goes into the States of Arkansas, Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, Illinois, Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas, and draws patronage from that extent of territory. It has been here over seven years, and by its independent course has no doubt made some enemies. However, it bears no ill will toward any and wants to hear from all, Democrats, Radicals, the upper ten, the lower ten, the middle ten, the nabob and the pauper alike. If any of these classes wants to be spiteful, because they could not agree with us as to what was right and what was our duty in the past, we forgive them because we feel sorry for them. We would take care of them if they would let us, but can't do it against their will, and they must not expect it.

The paper will endeavor to be wise, and just, and moderate in its opinions. Upon this policy it has met with marked success in the past and we feel confident will continue to meet with prosperity in the future, though the newspaper business in the country is comparatively a precarious business; yet we cannot sacrifice any principle to gain the good will of any class.

The View has found among the people of Chilton many friends, and for that reason it is a friend of Chilton county and has taken up a permanent abiding place within her limits.

Let us hear from you when you have any news and the time to jot it down.

Maplesville Dots.

Mrs. Sawyer has been visiting Dr. Woolley. She is much richer than when she first left, in the possession of a fine boy.

We had our usual Christmas with impish boys and fire-crackers. Some young ladies of our ville amused themselves and frightened their neighbors by shooting pistols.

Mr. T. Foshee was treated to a dinner in Atlanta.

Mrs. Gandy has broken up her old homestead and gone to make her home with her son, Fayette.

Mr. Bearden's little daughter, Dora, was most distressingly burned the 29th ult. She was in the room alone, her clothes caught on fire, and her screams called her mother. She lived eight hours.

Miss Palestine Rollins and Mr. C. Abrams were married the 28th of December.

Mrs. McCary, Miss Ella Dudley and Mrs. N. Goodwyn took Christmas dinner with Mrs. Frank DuBose, of Orrville.

Mr. B. O. Glover made a very pleasant visit to a friend at Dayton.

Mr. L. H. DuBose has been visiting his old homestead, combining business with pleasure.

Mr. Frank Kelly is in business at Ashby. Mr. Willie Kelly spent his Auburn vacation with friends here.

Mr. Robert Martin is in the employ of Mr. Tom Foshee.

Mr. Robertson is cultivating Mrs. N. Goodwin's farm this year.

We are pained to know that Mrs. McCrary, Sr., is quite sick with pneumonia.

Miss Maggie Walker has been on a pleasant visit to Miss Lula DuBose.

Sees Satan in his Dreams.

Mr. Jno. L. Jordan, of this county rushed into the Messenger office this week and depositing $2, upon the editor's desk, asked for a receipt for 1888. The editor pocketed the "two wheels," and instantly wrote out the receipt, but as he handed it to Mr. J. he noticed that he was nervous and excited, and asked the cause.

Said Mr. J. shuddering, "I had a terrible dream the other night I dreamed that I died, and my spirit sank down, down into a bottomless pit of eternal darkness and in a cavern of burning brimstone and sulphur. I stood before his Satanic Majesty to be judged for the deeds done in the body. All the evil deeds of my entire life were enumerated to me and I managed to find plausible excuses for them all, until his Majesty read in a voice that resembled thunder "Swindling your local newspaper out of its just dues." To this charge I could not answer my tongue clove to the roof of my mouth, and starting trembling before that fearful judge my silence confessed my guilt. With sparks of fire flying from his mouth and sulphuric smoke issuing from his nose he exclaimed "depart you soulless wretch and fail not in that or the most terrible punishment awaits you." I awoke in an awful fright my hair standing up and perspiration oozing from every pore. That dream happened last night and to-day I made all haste to pay my subscription and never will I let it run over again."—Gainesville Messenger.

Travers Hurst who assisted Hughes and two other prisoners to escape jail last September was arrested at Talladega and jailed.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Justice Dake seems to be kept pretty busy with official work.

Mr. H. A. Wilson, of Birmingham, spent Monday in Clanton. His family still reside at Lomax.

Mr. B. T. Rasberry has opened a new store on his place five miles west of Strasburg. Success to him.

To all who have been complaining of hard times we would suggest: Better save your money, and stay away from the circus to-day.

That good and valuable citizen Squire J. R. Jones has purchased a farm a short distance east of town and will move upon it at an early day.

Mr. Geo. D. Whitson, representing the National Life and Maturity Association, of Washington D. C., is among his friends in Clanton this week.

While the Legislature is in session you will want the Montgomery Advertiser and your county paper. You can get both one year for $2.00. Subscribe now.

To those whom it may concern we beg to say that before they spend a dollar or more at the circus to day they should pay the preacher, the merchant and the printer, and keep their money at home.

A bicycle party composed of Mess. T. Caheen, Petter Boggan and Fred Furgerson, from Birmingam passed through Clanton Sunday morning on their way to Montgomery.

Our Maplesville correspondent gives us neway items, and we want to ask that we may hear from her often and that the items be mailed in time to reach us Monday night.

Farmers, See Here.

I have what you want for use on your farms at this season of the year and will sell you your goods cheap for the cash. I need the cash and you need the goods, so come to see me and you soon can be relieved of your cash, and not robbed either.

Your friend,
W. L. SAMPEY.

Miss Gussie Evans has been visiting the family of Maj. W. P. Burks, Montgomery.

Read the new advertisement of Messrs. Lyman & Stone, dealers in books and stationery. You can order from them by mail and feel sure of getting what you want.

We notice that Rev. R. M. Honeycutt, of this county, was one of the delegates to the National Farmer's Alliance recently in session at Meridian Miss., and in the appointment of committees Mr. Honeycutt was placed upon the committee on "constitution and statutes."

Wedding Bells.

Rev. D. L. Lindsay pastor of the Jemison M. E. Church was married at Six Mile, Ala., on January 9th, to Miss Imogene Cottingnam, of Six Mile. All that our reverend friend needed to complete his happiness was a good wife, so he "went to Bibb and tuck 'er." The VIEW extends congratulations upon his very good fortune, and wishes for him and his fair bride much prosperity and happiness.

On Sunday the 6th inst., a niece of Mrs. J. M. Thacker, who is visiting the latter at her home near this place, came near losing her life by her clothing catching on fire; and but for the timely action of Mr. Thacker she would have doubtless been burned to death. While standing before the fire her skirts became ignited and almost in an instant the blaze shot upward two or three feet. Mr. Thacker, who was sitting near at the time grabbed her and endeavored to smother the flames with his hands, partially succeeded in doing so, though burning his hands terribly in the attempt. Being near the bed he reached out and pulled the quilts and blankets off and quickly wrapped them around the young lady and smothered the flames. Fortunately the young lady was not badly burned. Mr. Thacker is now carrying his left hand in a sling and his right one is badly burned and blistered though he is still able to use it. His presence of mind and prompt action is to be commended, and saved the young lady's life, beyond question.

Tribute of Respect.

WHEREAS, By the visitation of death into the circle of our school, we are called upon to mourn the loss of our beloved and highly esteemed friend, FELIX LEONARD ASHLEY; and, whereas, by this visitation we are taught the important lesson of mortality, and that the shaft of death finds its way to the hearts of the young as well as the old; therefore,

Resolved, 1st, That in the death of our esteemed friend, the Clanton High School has lost one of its best students and brightest ornaments.

2nd, that we as individuals have lost a strong personal friend, which tie was strengthened by our daily associations.

3d, That we will endeavor to profit by this dispensation of Providence, so that we may at all times be ready to answer to the summons when we are called to enter the dark valley and shadow of death.

4th, That we bow in humble submission to the will of God in this strange and mysterious Providence.

5th, That we deeply sympathize with the family of our deceased schoolmate.

6th, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the CHILTON VIEW for publication, and a copy sent to the family of the deceased.

Borax is exceedingly useful in the domestic economy and should always be at hand. Its medicinal properties are cleansing and healing. It is highly recommended for catarrhal troubles, and as a wash for weak eyes, especially for inflamed lids. For public speakers and singers it is invaluable for keeping the voice clear; a piece the size of a pea, dissolved in the mouth is all that is necessary It allays the inflamation of sore throat, and mixed with honey is very healing to canker, thrush and sore mouths of any kind.

The list of failures, 387, during the past week is the largest, probably ever recorded in this country.

UNAPPRECIATIVE.

How little we are apt to appreciate that which we possess. The hardy wood-sawyer envies the wealth of his employer. The rich man envies the health and strength of his poor neighbor.

"Our mind and our time we employ
In longing for what we have not,
Unmindful of what we enjoy."

How much better if all exerted themselves to obtain their heart's longing. If poor in purse seek to gain wealth by industrious and frugal habits. If poor in health seek to use those remedies which are the best and truest medicines. Among remedies sold by druggists none is the equal of Botanic Blood Balm for curing the ills of flesh and blood.

Felix Foster, Atlanta, Ga., says: "I took B. B. B., for several foul ulcers, which had given me much trouble and would not heal from a use of ULCERS other remedies. Within ten days my health improved, and before I had used three bottles every sore was entirely healed. It improved my appetite and gave me flesh and strength."

Hudson Clark, Camden, Ark., says: "I was afflicted with the severest form of BAD BLOOD rheumatism for about 12 years, and suffered extreme misery during all that while. I also had catarrh so bad it almost stopped CATARRH my breathing through my nose. My flesh in some places looked as if it had been charred or scalded. My back was so lame I could hardly stand. I tried nearly every- RHEUMATISM thing but found no relief until I tried B. B. B. I used several bottles and am now as sound and well as any man in Arkansas."

J. W. Messer, Howell's Cross Roads, Cherokee County, Ga., writes: I was afflicted with chronic SORES sores nine years, and had tried many medicines and they did me no good. I then tried B. B. B., and eight bottles cured me sound and well."

IN THE WINDOW SEAT.

One evening in an autumn old
We in the cushioned window seat
Sat side by side in converse sweet.
As that old tale our young lips told
We watched the shadows sway and greet
Upon the walls. The burning logs
Lay crackling on the big brass dogs.
Far back within the window seat,
Half hidden by the curtain's fold,
You sat and swung your dainty feet.
Our brown eyes tenderly did meet
As low we talked, the story told,
That evening in an autumn old.

Things did not chance as they were told
Within the cushioned window seat
That autumn time. Our story sweet
Is like some vague romance of old.
Here in the after years we meet,
When shadows oft from burning logs
Have lain athwart the great brass dogs,
And clung about the window seat
Half hidden by the curtain's fold.
The paths we trod have led our feet
Apart till now; and years full fleet
Have drifted by. Since we are old
We smile at that old tale we told.

But hist! Within the window seat,
Half hidden by the curtain's fold,
Your daughter swings her dainty feet;
And, madam, hear my boy repeat,
With eager lips, a story told
One evening in an autumn old.

CAPTAIN TREVOIR'S GUIDE.

BY JENNIE S. JUDSON.

The bees-wax light in the wounded soldier's room was flickering low; still the quiet voices did not cease.

Through the thin partition the young girl in the adjoining apartment could not but hear them, whether she desired or not. She tried to read as she kept her lonely vigil, but—was that her name that had been mentioned? She lifted her head in wondering excitement.

"I met her at Inka Springs," said the young officer, "two years ago. She was the belle of the season there, and a belle worthy the title, I assure you. I never saw a more beautiful girl. Her hair was as soft and dark as a midnight cloud, her eyes were like flashing jewels, and her lips as red as a coral spray. But the color in her cheeks"—reflectively—"ah! that was something lovely. It reminded me of the light in a fire opal, which flickers gently for a time, then breaks into a flame."

"Why Trevoir, you actually grow poetic," laughed his wounded comrade.

"Over the subject's beauty, Edwin, not over the subject herself," with a slight bitterness of tone.

"Why not the subject herself? Was she not attractive?"

"Yes, as piquant, bright, and sparkling as you can imagine. A perfect little humming bird, scintillating her beauty here and there, but with about as much heart as one of those tiny creatures might possess. At first I enjoyed watching her as one might a lovely butterfly gathering sweets from every flower. She seemed so innocent, so joyous, so intoxicated with her own success. But I soon saw there was a 'method' in all this 'summer madness.' She was after all," with a slight sneer, "what is called 'deep.'"

The listening girl clasped her hands to her heart at these words, as if to quell a fierce and sudden pain.

"The wealthy young man of the set was by far the plainest and least interesting of them all. Least inclined too, apparently, to pay Miss Garrett the homage she had grown to consider her due. At first I thought this seeming indifference piqued her to unusual action in winning his regard; but I found afterward the motive was a more sordid one. She had determined to marry him for his wealth."

How white the girl's face gleamed in the feeble light! How hard and set her features!

"I was a semi-invalid at the time, and as a looker-on could see all the points in the game. Consequently it became one of unusual interest."

"Of too much interest for his happiness," his friend thought sympathetically.

"A valued friend of mine, young Harry Yerger, who had just graduated from the University of Mississippi, was one of the principal actors. I never saw a young fellow more infatuated. Happy as if in heaven when she was kind; utterly cast down if she were cold or careless. I could but remonstrate with him, once or twice, on his complete absorbtion, but I might as well have talked to younder image. And when I called Clayton Garrett a heartless coquette, and told him of her design to capture Whitcomb and his wealth, he turned upon me like a tiger.

"Three weeks later, Yerger came one morning with white face and anguish-stricken eyes to say good-bye. He had been discarded, as I had so surely predicted, and was to start directly for the East.

"'I do not blame her,' he said loyally; 'she did not love me.'

"'And yet she led you on,' I replied, with heat.

"'How hard you are, Trevoir! how harsh you have always been toward her! I loved her for what she was, and not because of any effort she put forth to make me.'

"'Blind to the last,' I muttered.

"He joined the Egyptian army that fall, and a month later was killed. I can but hold Clayton Garrett responsible in a measure for his death."

A groan escaped from the girl's pallid lips.

"I was very lonely after Harry left, and feeling my health restored, entered more fully into the gayeties of the pleasure seekers than before. Miss Garrett was pleased to be very gracious to me, and that I did not readily respond to the witching wiles which told so tremendously on others seemed to cause her some slight chagrin.

"Once I found her gazing at me earnestly, as if she would fathom the reason why I alone should be so impervious to her charms. Heavens!" he added, reflectively, "how could she have been so lovely, yet so devoid of heart? I sometimes wonder if it could possibly be that Harry was right after all. On the day that I received the news of his departure for the Egyptian army, swayed by regret at his exile and resentment at its cause, I made a remark in her hearing which may have seemed a little harsh. It was to the effect that I felt nothing but contemptuous scorn for a woman who encouraged the honest love of a poor man, when she had no thought all the while but to sell herself to a rich one. She turned on me for an instant with hurt, wounded eyes, and I saw that my shaft had struck home. She was kinder than ever to Whitcomb after that, and when we all left a week later she wore a handsome diamond ring, and it was currently reported that they were engaged.

"No doubt she lives in elegance now in her New Orleans home, and is able to gratify every wish of her worldly heart. A humble home with one she loved and who loved her would be nothing to a woman like that," he added, bitterly.

"Such a home and such a love as you [illegible]" thought his friend. "And did you never ask whether they were really married or not?" he asked.

"Why should I?" answered the officer, wearily. "It is something I've tried—Ah! have you heard," he interrupted himself hastily, "that the Washington Artillery has been ordered to our relief, and that Whitcomb is in command? 'Hence these tears,' or rather this retrospect of two years agone."

"Are they needed?"

"Great heavens! Edwin, has no one told you that we are in a desperate strait? The bridge is burned before us, the enemy is at our backs, and unless we escape by some ford to-night we shall be attacked in the morning and completely overcome. At nine o'clock, which is near, I am to meet at this house 'a friend'—so the note is signed—who is to show me the way to the ford. It was a courageous offer too, for much of the track, it is supposed, lies under the enemy's fire. But it is time for preparation, and I must say good-bye. God be with you, dear friend; I will write you in a few days if we are rescued from this snare." And with a hearty hand-shake he was gone.

A figure on horseback stood at the gate. "Is this the guide?" asked Captain Trevoir, as he advanced.

"It is," was the reply in a woman's sweet, low voice.

"There is some mistake," cried the young man in surprise.

"No, there is no mistake," the lady replied. "I came for this purpose from my father's plantation, three miles below and near the ford, this afternoon, and have only been waiting until the hour arrived."

"How did you reach here?"

"I made a detour through the woods on the south side of the stream, and crossed to this point in a skiff."

"Did you come alone?"

"Yes, for I could not trust the servants in such a case, and my father and brothers are in the army. No one knows of my intention but yourself and my friend."

"Then I beg of you, madam, to give me directions as clearly as you can, and turn back at once to the home of your friend. It is more than possible that the path lies near the line of the enemy's picket. I could not think of permitting you to accompany me."

"And I," she answered firmly, "could think of nothing that would induce me to return."

Ah! that sweet, tantalizing voice, where had he heard it before?

"We must start," she said. "Follow me closely. Should I fall, push on as best you can until you see a large house well lighted. The ford is near. Should you fall," with a break in the soft tones, "I will turn back to the camp and guide another."

What a brave, unselfish spirit this was! What intrepidity was shrined in this weak woman's form!

Breathlessly and in silence they traversed the threatened path. The dark river rolled at one side of them; on the other, any bush or tree might hold a lurking foe. The night was dark and still. Each sound could be heard with startling distinctness. Suddenly a voice quite near cried out: "Who goes there?" The two urged their horses wildly forward, and a bullet whizzed past in the air, then another, and another; but now they were at last out of range.

"Are you hurt?" asked Captain Trevoir, with trembling anxiety, as they slackened a moment their pace.

"No; but that was very close, was it not?"

"You should never have subjected yourself to such terrible possibitities," he answered, almost angrily.

"I was not thinking of myself," she said.

More than a mile of the winding, danger-beset path had been passed, and the worst would soon be over. But scarcely had Captain Trevoir and his guide started on the second mile when again the command "Halt!" was heard, and so near that they could dimly discern the figure of a man but six feet away. Again they urged their horses forward. Again came the singing bullet, but this time it found a mark, and its course was followed by a groan.

"You are hurt!" cried the young officer, in gravest solicitude.

"My right arm is slightly wounded; I will guide the horse with my left," the lady replied. "But for heaven's sake let us push on!"

Oh, the agony of the next few moments for the wounded guide! How hard to throw off the deadly faintness which threatened each moment to overwhelm her! She heard as in a dream the words, "We are safe at last," when the lighted house came into view; then knew no more until she awoke to find her head, with its mass of soft, loosened hair, pillowed on the young officer's breast. He held her tenderly, and guided his horse as best he might.

"You can turn back now," she said, rousing herself; "the ford is near, and though the way has been tortuous, you can surely find it again. I will keep the fires in the house blazing, and when you arrive with your troops, a guide will conduct you to the ford."

"I will never leave you, madam, except within your father's door. You have been wounded, and for us. No matter what the urgency of our case, I will see you where you can be cared for."

"This is nothing," she answered quietly; "I have suffered from far deeper wounds."

The pained significance of her tone sharply touched him.

"Will you tell me your name?" he asked earnestly. "Your voice is like that of a former friend. Beside, I must know to whom we are so immeasurably indebted."

"My name is not unknown to you, Captain Trevoir; I have even heard you mention it this very night."

A quick and fatal revelation stunned him.

"Is it Clayton Garrett or Clayton Whitcomb?" he asked huskily, after a moment's pause, while his heart stood still for the answer.

"Clayton Garrett," coldly. "Arnold Whitcomb was for years engaged to my cousin, who is now his wife. I was never influenced by the motives which two years ago, and again to-night, you so freely attributed to me. You labored under a mistake."

"Good God! Clayton, do you speak the truth? Have I in thought and deed so cruelly wronged you? If so"—after a pause filled by fierce mental conflict—"my suffering for the past two years will be but slight indemnity for the injustice I have done."

"I did not love your friend," she continued, in quiet vindication. "If I had, rich or poor, I should have married him; and heaven is my witness," earnestly, "that I did not 'lead him on.' I was too absorbed, perhaps too thoughtless as to results; but, oh! I was not a 'heartless coquette.'"

"Say no more," he answered, with a groan; "every word you utter enters my heart like a two-edged blade. My own weapons have been turned against me. How harsh, how unjust I have been! How cruel to the one who, despite all the unkind thoughts I have endeavored to foster against her, has been dearest of all the world to me for these two years! My punishment will be bitter, but, Miss Garrett, you will have the sweet satisfaction of knowing that you have been and yet will be avenged."

"Do not speak to me so," she cried; "we have come through great danger together. You have yet to go and come again. Let us be at peace in the short time left."

"At peace!" bitterly, "when my whole heart is filled to breaking with love for you, and yours holds nothing but resentment for me."

They were riding now up the avenue to the lighted house. For an instant she lifted her eyes to his, but in the half-light he could not read their expression.

"Please set me down near this rustic bench," she said; "it will least alarm my mother if I enter alone."

He lifted her gently from the horse. "And is this good-bye?" he asked with whitening lips.

"It is," she answered coldly, "for you must hasten on. There is need for great dipatch."

"Then good-bye, Clayton," in broken tones. "May God bless and restore you, darling, and may He see fit to reward you nobly for this night's brave work." No other word of the sorrow gnawing so cruelly at his heart, and he was gone.

He had mounted his horse.

"Arthur," she cried wildly, "come back."

In an instant he was at her side.

"I may never see you again," she panted; "there must be truth between us now. It was for your sake that I acted as guide to-night. You have vouchsafed me nothing but pain from the first, but, oh! my love, I have always loved you."

"Clayton, dearest, can this be true? I do not deserve such happiness. But, if I am spared, a whole lifetime of love and devotion shall atone. This is our betrothal as well as good-bye," he whispered, as he clasped her close to his passionately throbbing heart, and left a kiss on the tender, upturned lips.

And on the morrow the enemy heard that a part of Forrest's troop, whom they had considered as snared and hemmed in, had been guided to a ford, and had thus escaped in the night.—Belford's Magazine.

HOUSEHOLD AFFAIRS.

Mock Turtle Soup.

Put a well-seasoned calf's head in a soup kettle with two quarts of cold water and some salt to three pounds of head, and set it on a good fire. At the end of half an hour, the scum will have risen to the surface and the water will begin to boil. Set the kettle back: add a gill of cold water and take off all the scum. Now add one carrot, half as much turnip, one onion, with two cloves, one leek, one stalk of celery, one of parsley, one bay leaf and two cloves of garlic. Simmer until the head is cooked, but is not too soft; strain the broth and set the calf's head aside to cool. When cool cut four ounces of the skin into dice. Put two ounces of butter into a saucepan and set it on the fire. When melted add one tablespoonful of flour, stir, and, when turning brown, add three pints of broth and boil for five minutes; add the four ounces of calf's head dice, four ounces of truffles or mushrooms cut into dice, or two ounces of each, and boil five minutes. While boiling cut two hard-boiled eggs and half a lemon into dice and put them in the soup tureen, pour the boiling broth over them and serve.

How to Use Stale Bread.

Slices of bread, no matter how stale, make good toast, if held for an instant over glowing coals. Pile them neatly on a plate and send to the table hot; or dip each slice quickly in a dish of boiling water to which has been added a large lump of butter and a little salt. This is called water toast, and should be served in a heated, covered dish. If milk toast is preferred, pile these dipped slices in a deep dish; boil a pint of milk, stir in a teaspoonful of corn-starch moistened with cold milk or water, a large lump of butter and a little salt. Stir all together until it begins to thicken, then pour over the toast.

Slices of stale bread are delicious spread with butter and browned in a quick oven, with a thin slice of cheese laid on each, and put back in the oven long enough to melt the cheese. They are nice also dipped in a batter made of one egg, one cup of milk, one cup of flour and one-half teaspoonful of salt; fried in hot butter or dripping until a light brown, and used as a breakfast or tea dish, or eaten with molasses or sugar as dessert.

Slices of toast are appetizing with poached eggs on top, or a spoonful of hash, minced fish, Welsh rare-bit, asparagus, etc. Or they may be cut in small squares and added to the soup as it goes to table.

Croutons, used with strained soups, are small squares of stale bread fried brown.

Slices of bread spread with butter may be laid on top of a good custard and baked in the usual manner. Or they may be laid in a dish alternately with stewed or preserved fruit, a custard poured over them, and baked.

Bits and broken pieces of bread should be spread on a pie-plate or baking-pan, and browned slowly in an oven, with the door open; rolled (while still hot) on a bread-board, and put away in tin boxes or air-tight jars. They will be found far nicer than cracker crumbs for dipding oysters, chops, cutlets, small fish or anything else which is fried in egg and cracker.

They are also delicious stirred in browned butter, and sprinkled over the top of meat dumplings; or used for potatoes au gratin, tomato farci, etc. They also make delicate and delicious puddings.—Housewife.

Recipes.

GRAHAM CAKE.—One cup of brown sugar, one cup of sour cream, two eggs, two cups of Graham flour, one teaspoonful of soda, a little salt and cinnamon if liked. If the cream is not sour, use less soda. Do not stir too stiff.

HICKORY-NUT CAKE.—One-half cup of butter, two cups of sugar and four eggs beaten separately; three cups of flour, one-half cup of sweet milk, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, two cups of hickory-nut meats, minced, one teaspoonful of extract of vanilla.

COFFEE.—Take one tablespoonful of coffee for each person, put in a thin muslin sack and pour slowly over boiling water enough to make the amount required; let stand ten minutes, then take out the sack containing the grounds and the coffee is ready for use.

BLACK SPICE CAKE.—The yolks of four eggs; mix two teaspoonfuls and a half of baking powder in two cups and a half of flour, one cup of brown sugar, half cup of syrup, half cup of milk, half cup of butter. The butter must be melted after being measured and stirred with the sugar; two teaspoonfuls and a half of powdered cloves, one teaspoonful of cinnamon, the same of allspice; the spices must be put into the flour, the syrup added after the sugar and butter are stirred together, then the eggs and milk.

SOME QUEER CUSTOMERS

THAT GOTHAM'S GUNDEALERS HAVE TO LOOK OUT FOR.

The Would-Be Suicide—The Insanely Jealous Lady, and Lastly the Three Bad Boys.

"There is no one who has to be a better judge of human nature," said a Broadway gundealer, "than a man in my business. I can size a man up the minute he steps into my store, and if I notice anything peculiar in his manner I watch him as closely as a cat does a mouse. What for? Why, because I don't want my place made the scene of a sensational suicide if I can help it. I began business here in 1875, and during that period some rather exciting incidents have happened in front of my counter. Let me see, I believe it was in 1876," and the dealer scratched his head in a reminiscent manner, "that I was at my desk one morning making out some bills, when a gentleman fully six feet in height and broad shoulders in proportion, came in. 'Will you let me see some of your revolvers?' he asked, in an ordinary tone; 'I am desirous of getting one for target practice.' I showed him several of the finest I had in the case, but they didn't seem to suit him. Then he asked to see a derringer. This request, coupled with an indefinable feeling that I had already felt that there was something wrong about the man, aroused my suspicions. What on earth can he want of a derringer for target practice? I said to myself, but I showed him one. He said he would take it, and asked for a quantity of cartridges to go with it. 'I am very particular about my cartridges,' he said, as I was about to do them up. 'Will you kindly open one of the boxes so that I may examine them.' The request seemed reasonable, and I did so. He glanced at the cartridges, took a few from the box, examined them, and then replaced them, with the remark: 'I guess they're all right. You may do the package up.' His calm manner partially allayed my suspicions and I started to wrap up the revolver and cartridges, when the man suddenly exclaimed: 'By Jove! that's a funny thing,' pointing toward the door. I turned my head, and, seeing nothing unusual, took a step or two in the direction he pointed. Still seeing nothing strange, I turned to ask him what he referred to. I didn't ask him anything, though, but instead jumped forward just in time to prevent his brains being scattered upon the floor. While my head had been turned he had slipped a cartridge which he had concealed in his hand into the revolver, placed the muzzle against his temple, and was about to pull the trigger as I sprang upon him. My fingers closed on the hammer just as it was coming down, and broke its force so that the cartridge was indented but the least bit, not enough to fire it. The man seemed as cool as a cucumber, and surrendered the weapon to me without a word. I put it back in the case, and as I did so he looked at me inquiringly. 'Won't you sell it to me?' he asked, and when I replied most emphatically in the negative he said: 'Well, suit yourself,' and walked calmly out, humming a fragment of a then popular air. I have never seen the man since, but for weeks I watched the papers to see if a gentleman of his description had killed himself. If he did I never found any account of it."

"Do you think he killed himself?"

"I do not, for this reason. If you have ever investigated cases of suicide you must have noticed that a person generally kills himself upon the impulse of the moment. Of course there are exceptions to this rule, but they generally occur among the lower classes. If a man of any intelligence yields to a suicidal impulse and is foiled in his attempt he is likely to believe that fate has intervened and that his luck will change. It is unlikely, therefore, unless he is crazy, that he will again attempt to take his life."

"Have you ever had any other strange experiences of a similar nature?"

"I can't remember any just like that I have told you about, but I have had other strange ones. One morning a woman who was refined looking and had quite ladylike manners, came in and asked to see some revolvers. I showed her some from which she selected one. 'This one will do,' she said, 'please load it for me.' I told her that I couldn't do that, as it was against my rules. She urged me for some little time to load it, but I still refused. 'Very well, keep it then,' and sailed out in an indignant manner. Hardly had she passed through the door when a detective with whom I was well acquainted came in. 'Did you sell that lady a revolver?' he asked. I told him I had not. 'Very well, don't sell her one if she should come here again,' he said, and rushed out after her. Either the same or following day she came in again. 'I'll take that revolver,' she said. 'I've got a friend who will load it for me.' 'I am sorry, madame,' I replied, 'but I cannot sell it to you.' 'Can't sell it to me,' she exclaimed. 'That's strange. What's the reason you can't?' I told her that I could give her no reason, but I could not sell her the revolver. She appeared very indignant, and went out, simply saying she would buy one somewhere else. A few days after I saw my friend, the detective, and he told me that the lady was well known in society, where she was a great favorite. 'She has a fine looking husband, who is devoted to her,' he said, 'but at times she becomes insanely jealous of him for no cause at all. At such times she is really out of her mind, and unless watched would do herself or him some injury. Every two or three months she has those spells, which generally last a day or two and then pass away. At such times I am employed to watch her. I get well paid for doing it, or you can bet I'd steer clear of such work. It's no picnic, I can assure you.'"

"Did you ever see the lady again?"

"Yes. Not long after she passed here leaning on the arm of a tall, handsome gentleman, whom, I suppose, was her husband. She was chatting gayly with him, and both seemed supremely happy. As they passed I saw her glance in my direction, but apparently without recognition. I understand that she is entirely cured now.

"There is one more curious case that I want to tell you of, and then I'll stop. One cold March afternoon three small boys, the oldest of whom could not have been over 13, swaggered into my store and asked 'ter see some of them guns and pistols.' I showed them some rifles and revolvers, and the oldest one of the crowd selected a Remington rifle, two revolvers, a quantity of ammunition, three bowie knives and some fishing tackle. The whole bill amounted to $80, and they settled it then and there. Of course, I knew there was something wrong, and so while the boys were selecting their outfit I sent my office boy out with a note on which I had written 'Call the first policeman you come across.' The policeman came and took the boys, outfit and all, to the station house. When the case came up before Justice White the next day it was discovered that the three little rascals had robbed a third boy of $80, which his father had sent him with to pay the rent. Filled with a desire to go West and kill Indians they had secured the money and came to me to buy their outfit. The remaining $36 was to pay their fares West. It is unnecessary to add that they never got further than the reform school, where I believe they still linger in durance vile."

Pneumonia's Fatal Progress.

According to a medical contemporary, Dr. Gouverneur L. Smith, of New York, has just given some interesting and startling facts in regard to pneumonia. Dr. Smith points out that the disease is becoming worse every year, increasing rathing than decreasing, both in the number of cases and the percentage of mortality. The statistics of the Pennsylvania Hospital shows that the mortality from pneumonia there advanced from 6¼ per cent. in 1847 to 18½ per cent. in 1867, and 31 per cent. in 1886. Similarly, in the New York Hospital the ratio of mortality from this disease is more than double what it was in 1878. Thirty or forty years ago it was regarded as serious, but it did not excite anything like the alarm it does to-day. Dr. Smith is rather inclined to believe that the medical art, instead of progressing in its treatment of pneumonia, has actually gone back; and holds that the old methods of treating the disease at the time it was less deadly to have been abandoned for methods more finical but less efficacious. The first requisite, he insists, is a "superabundance of pure air about the patient. In pneumonia the breathing apparatus only partially performs its functions, for the diseased parts of the lungs are substantially useless. 'The working portion must perform the work of two lungs for a week or ten days in order to maintain the blood in a proper condition to sustain life;' and, therefore, 'the patient requires purer air and vastly more than one in sound health.' 'Pure air as a remedial agent in the management of pneumonia and other disorders, both acute and chronic, has ever been a more potent ally of therapeutics than any panacea offered by alchemy or any hobbledehoy presented by modern chemistry.'"—Atlanta Constitution.

Fantastic Canes of Rare Woods.

One of this week's steamships brought over more and prettier cane and umbrella novelties than have ever been imported in one lot before. The larger number consist of French and Spanish creations, and of woods and ivory from the Holy Land. Spotted palm and Egyptian olive are perhaps the prettiest woods among the lot, and when capped and swedged with beautifully grained ivory they make canes which delight the eye of the most conservative connoisseur. The Egyptian olive wood is used principally in umbrella handles in the unfinished state.

Bouillion blonde, a very light wood from Algeria, and accasia, which grows in Spain, complete the list of new woods. Bleached buckhorn handles, with extra large, full crown, and lizard skin handles from Tunis, which have a decidedly snakish appearance, will please the ultra fashionable.

Mexican onyx is now being used in various designs for handles; shaped in Masonic emblems, it makes up very attractively, and bids fair to have a large run.—New York Sun.

Slave Traffic.

The dispatches from Zanzibar show some of the difficulties in the way of suppressing the slave trade there. One element available against the slave traders is furnished by the missionaries, who have a great many stations around lakes Nyassa and Tanganyika and Albert and Victoria Nyanza, and between those regions and the coast. These include Protestant and Catholic missions, and a point on which German, English and Scotch missionaries agree, is the enormity of this traffic in human beings and the need of opposing it at all hazards. Some of them have shown themselves of the church militant in this respect, having repeatedly fought the slave traders. The appeals of Cardinal Lavigerie are well known and are founded on personal observation. From the missionaries have been gathered some of the most startling statistics as to the extent of this traffic. The alleged tripartite agreement between the Sultan, the Arab traders, and the English East Africa Company, whose authenticity is denied in the current dispatches, refers to the English missions as being obliged to restore runaway slaves to thir owners. It is safe to say that they would not agree to anything of the sort.

Stingy Duke.

The parsimony of the Duke of Edinburgh has lately been exhibited in another direction. When the duke and duchess went to Greece with the English fleet, of which the duke is admiral, it was discovered that a trunk containing certain indispensable articles of attire belonging to the duchess had been left behind at Malta. The duke could readily have telegraphed for the trunk and had it forwarded by next day's steamer, but being unwilling to do so on the ground of the expense involved, he dispatched one of the vessels of his squadron back to Malta to bring back the trunk and its contents. The trip involved a tax of some hundreds of pounds to the English tax-payer, but, of course, cost the duke nothing.

Consumption, Wasting Diseases And General Debility. Doctors disagree as to the relative value of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites; the one supplying strength and flesh, the other giving nerve power, and acting as a tonic to the digestive and entire system. But in SCOTT'S EMULSION of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites the two are combined, and the effect is wonderful. Thousands who have derived no permanent benefit from other preparations have been cured by this. Scott's Emulsion is perfectly palatable and is easily digested by those who cannot tolerate plain Cod Liver Oil.

Caheen Declares and Pledges himself to sell Dry Goods and Millinery cheaper than other houses can buy them. Our business has been a grand success, and we truly appreciate the large patronage bestowed upon us. We shall always endeavor to merit a continuance of popular favor by offering such inducements and unexcelled bargains to the people of Birmingham and vicinity, that the crowds of buyers will seek our double store (filled with desirable Dry Goods) in preference to any other. We are not selfish in our dealings, for when our New York buyer ships us our car loads of Dry Goods, bought direct from manufacturers, at the lowest cash prices, we do not ask our customers a double profit, but at once divide the jobbers' profit with our patrons. A happy New Year to one and all!

There is a gloomy and passive way of waiting for the events of the opening year to come upon us, and there is a heroic way of going out to meet them, strong in God and fearing nothing. When the body of Catiline was found on the battle-field it was found far in advance of all his troops and among the enemy; and the best way is not for us to lie down and let the events of life trample over us, but to go forth in a Christian spirit determined to conquer.

The papers were made out, and some of you have just entered into business partnerships, and others of you take higher positions in the commercial establishment where you were engaged, and others have entered upon new enterprises, and there were last week in these cities ten thousand business changes. You are expecting prosperity, and I am determined, so far as I have anything to do with it, that you shall not be disappointed, and therefore I propose, as God may help me this morning, to project upon your attention a new element of success. You will have in the business firm, frugality, patience, industry, perseverance, economy—a very strong business firm, but there needs to be one member added, mightier than them all, and not a silent partner either—the one introduced by my text: "Godliness which is profitable unto all things, having the promise of the life that now is as well as of that which is to come."

I suppose you are all willing to admit that Godliness is important in its eternal relations; but perhaps some of you say: "All I want is an opportunity to say a prayer before I die, and all will be well." There are a great many people who suppose that if they can finally get safely out of this world into a better world, they will have exhausted the entire advantage of our holy religion. They talk as though religion were a mere nod of recognition which we are to give to the Lord Jesus on our way up to a heavenly mansion; as though it were an admission ticket, of no use except to give in at the door of heaven. And there are thousands of people who have great admiration for a religion of the shroud, and a religion of the coffin, and a religion of the hearse, and a religion of the cemetery, who have no appreciation of a religion for the bank, for the farm, for the factory, for the warehouse, for the jeweler's shop, for the broker's office. Now, while I would not throw any slur on a post-mortem religion, I want this morning, and on the first Sabbath of the new year, to eulogize an ante-mortem religion. A religion that is of no use to you while you live, will be of no use to you when you die. "Godliness is profitable unto all things, having the promise of the life that now is as well as of that which is to come." And I have always noticed that when the grace is very low in a man's heart he talks a great deal in prayer meetings about deaths, and about coffins, and about churchyards. I have noticed that the healthy Christian, the man who is living near to God, and is on the straight road to Heaven, is full of jubilant satisfaction, and talks about the duties of this life, understanding well that if God helps him to live right He will help him to die right.

Now, in the first place, I remark that Godliness is good for a man's physical health. I do not mean to say that it will restore a broken down constitution, or drive rheumatism from the limbs, or neuralgia from the temples, or pleurisy from the side; but I do mean to say that it gives one such habits and puts one in such condition as is most favorable for physical health. That I believe, and that I avow. Everybody knows that buoyancy of spirit is good physical advantage. Gloom, unrest, dejection are at war with every pulsation of the heart, and with every respiration of the lungs. It lowers the vitality, it slackens the circulation, while exhilaration of spirit pours the very balm of heaven through all the currents of life. The scene of insecurity which sometimes hovers over an unregenerate man, or pounces upon him with the blast of ten thousand trumpets of terror, is most depleting and most exhausting, while the feeling that all things are working together for my good now, and for my everlasting welfare, is conducive to physical health.

You will observe that Godliness induces industry, which is the foundation of good health. There is no law of hygiene that will keep a lazy man well. Pleurisy will stab him, erysipelas will burn him, jaundice will discolor him, gout will cripple him, and the intelligent physician will not prescribe antiseptic, or febrifuge, or anodyne, but saws, and hammers, and yardsticks, and crowbars, and pickaxes. There is no such thing as good physical condition without positive work of some kind, although you should sleep on down of swan, or ride in carriage of softest upholstery, or have on your table all the luxuries that were poured from the wine-vats of Ispahan and Shiraz. Our religion says: "Away to the bank! away to the field! away to the shop! away to the factory! do something that will enlist all the energies of your body, mind and soul." "Diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord;" while upon the bare back of the idler and drone comes down the sharp lash of the apostle as he says: "If any man will not work, neither shall he eat."

Oh, how important in this day, when so much is said about anatomy and physiology and therapeutics and some new style of medicine is ever and anon springing upon the world, that you should understand that the highest school of medicine is the school of Christ, which declares that "Godliness is profitable unto all things, having the promise of the life that now is as well as that which is to come." So if you start out two men in the world with equal physical health, and then one of them shall get the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ in his heart, and the other shall not get it, the one who becomes a son of the Lord Almighty will live the longer. "With long life will I satisfy thee, and show thee My salvation."

Again I remark that Godliness is good for the intellect. I know some have supposed that just as soon as a man enters into the Christian life his intellect goes into a bedwarfing process. So far from that, religion will give new brilliancy to the intellect, new strength to the imagination, new force to the will, and wider swing to all the intellectual faculties. Christianity is the great central fire at which Philosophy has lighted its brightest torch. The religion of the Lord Jesus Christ is the fountain out of which learning has dipped its clearest draught. The Helicon poured forth no such inspiring waters as those which flow from under the throne of God clear as crystal. Religion has given new energy to Poesy, weeping in Dr. Young's "Night Thoughts," teaching in Cowper's "Task," flaming in Charles Wesley's hymns, and rushing with archangelic splendor through Milton's "Paradise Lost." The religion of Jesus Christ has hung in studio and in gallery of art and in Vatican, the best pictures—Titian's "Assumption," Raphael's "Transfiguration," Rubens's "Descent from the Cross," Claude's "Burning Bush," and Angelo's "Last Judgment." Religion has made the best music of the world—Haydn's "Creation," Handel's "Messiah," Mozart's "Requiem." Is it possible that a religion which builds such indestructible monuments, and which lifts its ensign on the highest promontories of worldly power, can have any effect upon a man's intellect but elevation and enlargement? Now, I commend Godliness as the best mental discipline—better than belles-lettres to purify the taste, better than mathematics to harness the mind to all intricacy and elaboration, better than logic to marshal the intellectual forces for onset and victory. It will go with Hugh Miller and show him the footprints of the Creator in the red sandstone. It will go with the botanist and show him celestial glories encamped under the curtain of a water-lily. It will go with the astronomer on the great heights where God shepherds the great flock of worlds, that wander on the hills of heaven answering His voice as He calls them all by their names.

Again I remark that Godliness is profitable for one's disposition. Lord Ashley, before he went into a great battle, was heard to offer this prayer: "O Lord, I shall be very busy to-day; if I forget Thee, forget me not." With such a Christian disposition as that, a man is independent of all circumstances. Our piety will have a tinge of our natural temperament. If a man be cross and sour, and fretful naturally, after he becomes a Christian he will always have to be armed against the rebellion of those evil inclinations; but religion has tamed the wildest nature; it has turned fretfulness into gratitude, despondency into good cheer, and those who were hard and ungovernable and uncompromising have been made pliable and conciliatory. Good resolution, reformatory effort, will not effect the change. It takes a mightier arm and a mightier hand to bend evil habits than the hand that bent the bow of Ulysses, and it takes a stronger lasso than ever held the buffalo on the prairie. A man cannot go forth with any human weapons and contend successfully against these Titans armed with uptorn mountain. But you have known men into whose spirit the influence of the Gospel of Christ came, until their disposition was entirely changed. So it was with two merchants in New York. They were very antagonistic. They had done all they could to injure each other. They were in the same line of business. One of the merchants was converted to God. Having been converted, he asked the Lord to teach him how to bear himself toward that business antagonist, and he was impressed with the fact that it was his duty when a customer asked for certain kinds of goods which he had not, but which he knew his opponent had, to recommend him to go to that store. I suppose that is about the hardest thing a man could do; but being thoroughly converted to God, he resolved to do that very thing, and being asked for a certain kind of goods which he had not he said: "You go to such and such a store, and you will get it." After awhile, merchant number two found these customers coming so sent, and he found also that merchant number one had been brought to God, and he sought the same religion. Now they are good friends and good neighbors, the grace of God entirely changing their disposition.

"Oh," says some one, "I have a rough, jagged, impetuous nature, and religion can't do anything for me." Do you know that Martin Luther and Robert Newton and Richard Baxter were impetuous, all-consuming natures, yet the grace of God turned them into the mightiest usefulness? A manufacturer cares but very little for a stream that slowly runs through the meadow, but a strong torrent that leaps from rock to rock, and rushes with mad energy through the valley and out toward the sea. Along that river you will find fluttering shuttles and grinding mill and flashing water wheel. And a nature, the swiftest, the most rugged and the most tremendous, that is the nature God turns into greatest usefulness. Oh, how many who have been pugnacious, and hard to please, and irascible, and more bothered about the mote in their neighbor's eye than about the beam like ship timber in their own eye, who have been entirely changed by the grace of God, and have found out that "Godliness is profitable for the life that now is as well as for the life which is to come."

Again I remark that religion is good for a man's worldly business. I know the general theory is, the more business the less religion, the more religion the less business. Not so, thought Dr. Hans, in his "Biography of a Christian Merchant," when he says: "He grew in grace the last six years of his life more than at any time in his life; during those six years he had more business crowding him than at any other time." In other words, the more worldly business a man has, the more opportunity to serve God. Does religion exhilarate or retard worldly business? is the the practical question for you to discuss. Does it hang like a mortgage over the farm? Is it a bad debt on the ledger? Is it a lien against the estate? Does it crowd the door through which customers come for broadcloths and silks? Now, religion will hinder your business if it be a bad business, or if it be a good business wrongfully conducted. If you tell lies behind the counter, if you use false weights and measures, if you put sand in sugar, and beet-juice in vinegar, and lard in butter, and sell for one thing that which is another thing, then religion will interfere with that business; but a lawful business, lawfully conducted, will find the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ its mightiest auxiliary.

Religion will give an equipoise of spirit, it will keep you from ebullitions of temper—and you know a great many fine businesses have been blown to atoms by bad temper—it will keep you from worriment about frequent loss, it will keep you industrious and prompt, it will keep you back from squandering and dissipation, it will give you a kindness of spirit which will be easily distinguished from that mere store courtesy which shakes hands violently with you, asking about the health of your family when there is no anxiety to know whether your child is well or sick! But the anxiety is to know how many dozen cambric pocket handkerchiefs you will take and pay cash down. It will prepare you for the practical duties of every-day life. I do not mean to say that religion will make us financially rich, but I do say that it will give us, it will assure us, of a comfortable sustenance at the start, a comfortable subsistence all the way through, and it will help us to direct the bank, to manage the traffic, to conduct all our business matters, and to make the most insignificant affair of our life a matter of vast importance glorified by Christian principle.

In New York city there was a merchant hard in his dealings with his fellows, who had written over his banking house, or his counting-house room: "No compromise." Then when some merchant got in a crisis and went down—no fault of his, but a conjunction of evil circumstances—and all the other merchants were willing to compromise—they would take seventy-five cents on the dollar, or fifty cents, or twenty cents—coming to this man last of all, he said: "No compromise; I'll take one hundred cents on the dollar, and I can afford to wait." Well, the wheel turned, and after a while that man was in a crisis or business, and he sent out his agents to compromise, and the agents said to the merchants: "Will you take fifty cents on the dollar?" "No." "Will you take anything?" "We'll take one hundred cents on the dollar. No compromise." And the man who wrote the inscription over his counting-house died in destitution. Oh, we want more of the kindness of the Gospel and the spirit of love in our business enterprises! How many young men have found in the religion of Jesus Christ a practical help! How many there are in this house to-day who could testify out of their own experience that Godliness is profitable for the life that now is. There were times in their business career when they went here for help, and there for help, and yonder for help, and got no help until they knelt before the Lord crying for His deliverance, and the Lord rescued them.

In a bank not far from our great metropolis—a village bank—an officer could not balance his accounts. He had worked at them day after day, night after night, and he was sick nigh unto death as a result. He knew he had not taken one farthing from that bank, but somehow, for some reason inscrutable then, the accounts wouldn't balance. The time rolled on, and the morning of the day when the books should pass under the inspection of the other officers arrived, and he felt himself in awful peril, conscious of his own integrity but unable to prove that integrity. That morning he went to the bank early, and he knelt down before God and told the whole story of his mental anguish, and he said: "O Lord, I have done right; I have preserved my integrity, but here I am about to be overthrown unless Thou should come to my rescue. Lord, deliver me." And for one hour he continued the prayer before God, and then he rose and went to an old blotter that he had forgotten all about. He opened it and there lay a sheet of figures which he only needed to add to another line of figures—some line of figures he had forgotten, and knew not where he had laid them—and the accounts were balanced, and the Lord delivered him. You are an infidel if you do not believe it. The Lord delivered him. God answered his prayer as He will answer your prayer, O man of business, in every crisis when you come to Him. Now, if this be so, then I am persuaded, as you are, of the fact that the vast majority of Christians do not fully test the value of their religion. They are like a farmer in California, with fifteen thousand acres of good wheat land and culturing only a quarter of an acre. Why do you not go forth and make the religion of Jesus Christ a practical affair every day of your business life and all this year, beginning now, and to-morrow morning putting into practical effect this holy religion and demonstrating in your life that Godliness is profitable here as well as hereafter!

How can you get along without this religion? Is your physical health so good you do not want this divine tonic? Is your mind so clear, so vast, so comprehensive that you do not want this divine inspiration? Is your worldly business so thoroughly established that you have no use for that religion which has been the help and deliverance of tens of thousands of men in crises of worldly trouble? And if what I have said this morning is true, then you see what a fatal blunder it is when a man adjourns to life's expiration the uses of religion. A man who postpones religion to sixty years of age gets religion fifty years too late. He may get into the kingdom of God by final repentance, but what can compensate him for a whole lifetime unalleviated and uncomforted? You want religion to-day in the training of that child. You will want religion to-morrow in dealing with that Western customer. You wanted religion yesterday to curb your temper. Is your arm strong enough to beat your way through the floods? Can you without being encased in the mail of God's eternal help go forth amid the assault of all hell's sharpshooters? Can you walk alone across these crumbling graves and amid these gaping earthquakes? Can you, waterlogged and mast-shivered, outlive the gale? Oh, how many there have been who, postponing the religion of Jesus Christ, have plunged into mistakes they never could correct although they lived eighty years after, and like serpents crushed under cart-wheels, dragging their mauled bodies under the rocks to die; so these men have fallen under the wheel of awful calamity, crushed here, destroyed forever, while a vast multitude of others have taken the religion of Jesus Christ into every-day life, and first, in practical business affairs, and secondly, on the throne of heavenly triumph, have illustrated, while angels looked on and a universe approved, the glorious truth that "Godliness is profitable unto all things, having the promise of the life which now is as well as of that which is to come."

ONE FOR THE MICROBE.

Mrs. Noseup has always contended that her husband's tobacco habit was a vile thing.

"There," remarked Mrs. Noseup, as she turned from the scientific journal, "it says here that there are no microbes to be found in tobacco."

"That's where the microbe shows his good sense," said Mr. Noseup.

WINTER QUARTERS.

SCENES AT A MENAGERIE DURING COLD WEATHER.

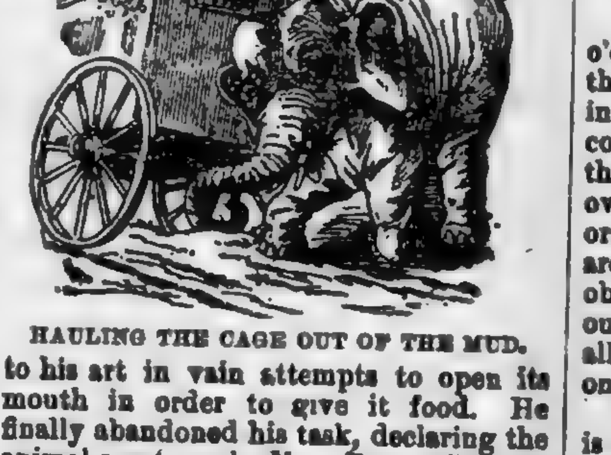
A Burmese Cow's Affection for a Young Goat—The Lockjawed Camel that Lives on Water, Etc., Etc.

"That is the strangest attachment I ever saw formed, and I've been around with circuses, man and boy, for forty-six years," said Harry Pierce, the veteran in charge of Grenier's wild beasts, in the winter quarters of the menagerie at the corner of Randolph and Ann streets. He referred to a white Burmese cow and a white kid, which were made fast, close by one another, to a wheel of the great cage in which was the hippopotamus. "Why, sir," said Pierce, approaching close to the animals with the Herald reporter, "we dare not separate them, even for a few moments, lest the cow go into fits. She will cry, moan and take on like a human being if it is out of her sight for a moment. She is evidently under the delusion that it is her calf. She will lick it, get close by its side, insist upon its having the choice of all food and fight for it, if needs be."

THE LOCK-JAWED CAMEL.

The reporter, being somewhat skeptical upon the latter point, drew close to the little goat and began to tease it. Well for him was it that Mr. Pierce was close at hand, else had the horns of the humped cow tossed him in the air. Accepting the remainder of the statements as facts, the reporter turned about, when his eye fell upon a goldish-red dog, possessed of intelligent face and soft, melting eyes. Nature had ungenerously withheld forelegs from the canine, which did not appear, however, to lie awake nights worrying over the niggardliness manifest in its make-up; for a jollier, better-natured, fatter dog could not be come up with in a month's journey.

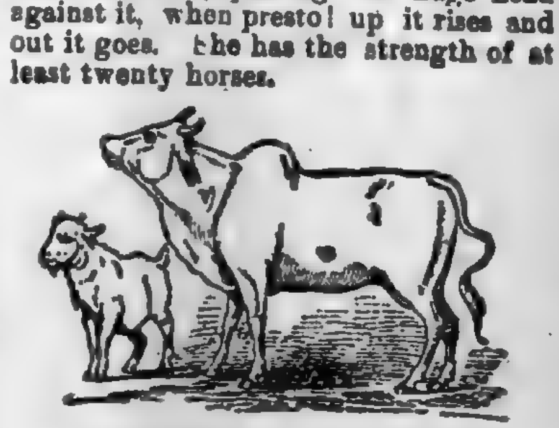
Strangest, though, of all the sights in Grenier's collection is a giant camel, a bactrian, which is suffering from lockjaw. Its mouth has been shut fast since October 10, and in all that time it has not taken any sustenance whatsoever, except a very small amount of water, say a quart or so, in each twenty-four hours. It is somewhat gaunt in appearance, it is true; yet at the request of the reporter Mr. Pierce caused it to move around, and it stepped forward seemingly without an effort, stalking up and down the room after the ungainly springlike manner peculiar to its class. There was not the slightest appearance of weakness. Its jaws are locked as firmly as though a half score of bolts had been driven through them and riveted there. A veterinarian of skill attended the great beast every morning for a month, exhausting every means known to his art in vain attempts to open its mouth in order to give it food. He finally abandoned his task, declaring the animal must surely die. But will it do so? Already it has shamed Tanner. Possessed of infinite powers of endurance, having a considerable amount of flesh to draw upon, is it not possible for it to hold out until the lock terminates? Mr. Grenier hopes so, for the animal is young and of extra value, because it is a superb beast of great stature, trained to draw wagons with the docility of an old dray horse.



HAULING THE CAGE OUT OF THE MUD.

There is much of interest attaching to a circus and menagerie in winter quarters. Wild beasts on exhibition are seen usually at some little distance from the cage. Here, if one be a friend of keeper or the owner, he can see them as they are, observe their habits, admire their beauty, strength or intelligence, and finally leave, feeling that he has been brought face to face with the wild beasts and become acquainted with them.

Two great elephants are close companions of the lock-jawed camel. One of them, Jennie, [illegible] animal, which is a veritable beast of burden. Her daily task, when the circus is on the road, is to place all the wagons in position in the tent. So, too, when a wagon sticks fast in the mud or a deep rut, it is she who gets behind it, placing her huge head against it, when presto! up it rises and out it goes. She has the strength of at least twenty horses.



THE BACTRIAN COW AND PET KID.

ther, it may be well to inform the curious that an elephant when on the road requires two bushels of oats and 200 pounds of hay daily. His allowance of water is forty gallons in the same time. In winter, when resting, he eats 250 pounds of hay and drinks forty to fifty gallons of water. Grain is denied to him until he starts out on his spring campaign. Elephants are inordinately fond of whisky and beer. Keepers, whether teetotalers themselves or not, are of the opinion that whisky is a good medicine for the beasts, and occasionally they give to each a half-gallon in bottles. No old toper ever displayed greater zeal in emptying a glass than do these monsters in uncorking a bottle and draining its contents, only to seize another and another, as fast as handed to them.

"Do they feel it?" said Mr. Pierce. "Of course they do. They are like men folks, too, showing by their actions that in the wine is truth. If a beast is of an ugly disposition when sober, he will be meaner than the meanest when drunk. If of a lively disposition when sober, he'll be frisky as a lamb and gay as a peacock in spring time when drunk. I guess they have headaches afterward, too, like human beings. They look miserable enough to have the biggest sort of big heads; but they don't complain of it to me.

"We give the lions about fifteen pounds of meat each per day, feeding them but once in twenty-four hours every day in the week except Sunday. Sundays are fast days for carnivorous animals in all the menageries. They receive nothing in the shape of food from Saturday morning to Monday morning. I do not perceive that it makes any difference with them. You know that in a wild state they are frequently compelled to go a long time without food when it is scarce."

Mr. Pierce, who was one of the earliest of lion tamers, laughed at the idea of going in among them just after they had eaten. "That is a big mistake," said he. "It is strange how many sensible people swallow that yarn. All of the cat family are uglier and crosser just after eating than at any other time. We feed them in the morning about ten o'clock, and enter their cages say about three o'clock and again at nine o'clock in presence of the audiences. We get control of them by association with them, and the superiority which man has over wild beasts. There is no clap trap or humbug about it. We teach them we are masters, and they learn to fear and obey, if not to love us. It is a dangerous business, however, for the cats are all treacherous, and one can avoid attack only by constant vigilance."

Returning to the animals, in a stall is a horse twenty-one hands high with a weight of more than a ton and a quarter, whose great solid face is in marked contrast with the chipper, intelligent countenance of the diminutive Shetland.

Dick, the jaguar, beautifully spotted, is tame and likes to be petted. In the cage adjoining him is a brute of a puma, which, ever restless, strides up and down its cage. A ferocious, ungrateful wretch, it would murder the man who feeds it, as it killed its beautiful and more docile mate a short time ago. Perhaps the meanest brute in the aggregation is a big mandril, whose purple-blue breast swells with rage at the slightest provocation. Untamed and untamable, it springs forward mad to seize and to tear every one passing the cage.

A curiosity is a den of five black wolves which commemorated their first night with Mr. Grenier by making a supper off the sixth, the largest of their number.

In the same apartment are Prince, Belle and Rose, three fine lions. Prince three weeks ago was the proud father the prettiest of baby lions. It was three months old when its voracious appetite was the cause of its death. It choked to death over a bunk of meat too large for its little throat. During the last month of its life it was passed around to ladies and children, who delightfully held it in their arms, fondling and caressing the feline without thought of its fierceness should it be spared to adult age.

Before referring to other animals fur-

THE SPIRIT MOVES THEM.

The house which the wild animals with the horses occupy is large and roomy. The premises are never left unguarded for a single moment. When Mr. Pierce's duties end for the day he is succeeded by an intelligent keeper who remains until his return in the morning. Besides these there is a superintendent, watchman and divers assistants. Insurance companies demand twelve per cent. for the risk, which they consider very hazardous. Rather than pay this every precaution is taken against fire, while ways of egress are many. There is something homelike about the place. One regarding the animals in their several apartments can scarcely bring himself to realize that once these beasts were wild and a terror to man. Now they are cared for better than many human beings in this great city. If sick they are nursed tenderly. Strong attachments grow up between keepers and the animals in their charge, even where, as in the cases of the baboon and puma, they are known to be treacherous, and love not in return for the many kindnesses heaped upon them.—Chicago Herald.

Remodeling Quaker Marriage Laws.

Important changes in the marriage laws of the younger branch of the Society of Friends are now under consideration and will be submitted to the next quarterly meeting. The changes recommended are "to discourage" instead of to "discountenance" mixed marriages; or strike out the prohibition against courting or "keeping company" with or attending the weddings of people who are not Quakers. The rule recommending "treating with" persons violating these regulations and "testifying against" them in case they remain obdurate is materially modified, giving the monthly meeting the right to condone the offense if the accused gives evidence of being approachable in other respects. Paragraph 54 of the Book of Discipline, adopted in 1846, renders parties liable to be expelled for marrying out of the order, or, if both amenable to Friends' law, without the sanction of the monthly meeting is modified to allow the retention of the member without a written acknowledgment, provided it be found that he or she is desirous of continuing a member of the society. If both parties are "amenable" and after care has been extended are not prepared to make satisfactory explanation in writing, they are to be released from membership. The last paragraph has also been rendered more liberal in its provisions for authorized marriages with persons not members of the Society of Friends.—[Philadelphia Inquirer.

What is a managing Editor, anyhow?—Birmingham News.

That depends. On most metropolitan papers he is the boss; the high muck-a-muck; the man from whose decision there is no appeal the chief of the editorial department the man who says what shall and what shall not go in the paper.

In Birmingham he seems to be the news editor—the supervisor of the telegraph.

Down here he is the man who makes out the bills and hustles around with them; he is the man who writes the leader; throws on variety; looks after the telegraph, edits and sets the "ads," does the job work; is foreman of the composing room; makes a hand and a half at the case; uses the scissors and paste; makes up the forms; does the press work; makes fires in the morning when the devil is belated; does the swearing for the entire office; edits the occasional pieces of pie and cake that find their way into the inner sanctum; receives subscriptions (when there are any to receive;) runs to all of the fires; looks after the office cat; goes to bed while his other shirt is being washed, and attends to any other little detail that may be lying around loose and suffering for attention.

Dear brother there are managing editors and managing editors. We belong to the latter class.—Tuskaloosa Times.

The Chattanooga Times takes the checkered career and stormy history of the Nashville American to point the following wholesome moral:

Wrecks of this kind lie thick on the shores of the last quarter century. Millions on millions of money and vast amounts of talent and endeavor have been wasted in efforts to turn great newspapers into organs, divert them from their well worn channels and to found and keep alive party and personal newspaper representatives. It is amazing that the intelligent business men have not learned that such efforts are in their very nature business failures and foredoomed to disappointment if not ruin to their backers.

Journalism, like law, medicine or any other profession or calling is first of all business. Whenever it makes party or personal or factional interests anything but incidents and news materials in its management journalism fails to meet the wants of the general public and then follows certain failure.

The day of the newspaper organ has gone. Nothing but the independent, untrampled, unawed newspaper of the people and for the people has a lien or a lease on favor in these enlighened times.

The Lawson Bill.

This is a bill now pending in the Legislature embodying a new election law for Alabama. From what we have seen of it in the press we are disposed to think it is an improvement upon the present plan of conducting elections in this State. It is a bill the main point of which is that it will require that the voter be able to read the ballot he casts if he votes at all intelligently. It requires that the names of all the candidates before the people of whatever political party shall be printed on one ticket and the voter is to be handed the ticket by an election manager and must erase the names of those candidates for whom he does not wish to vote. He must do this himself while at the polls, and the vote is to be counted as cast. Should the voter be unable to read he may make a wrong erasure and vote for a candidate who is not his choice. Should he make no erasure for any given office the ballot is not counted for that office, and likewise it is not counted if no erasures at all are made.

If passed the bill may undergo some amendments. It is an improvement upon the present law and will probably be passed.

Annex West Florida.

A proposition is pending before the Florida Legislature which provides for the annexation of that part of the State of Florida west of the Chattahoochee river to the State of Alabama. This portion of Florida is known as West Florida and is quite a different county in climate, resources and prospects from that portion of Florida known as the peninsular. The citizens of the territory mentioned are largely in favor of the annexation. The country has been settled principally by people from Alabama. It is a good country agriculturally, its water and timber resources are extensive and valuable. In addition the harbors at Pensacola and St. Andrew's Bay are the finest and deepest on the gulf coast, and each as the cooling part for gulf steamers could be the site of populous cities. Pensacola now has a population of about 12,000. St. Andrews is yet a village but is growing.

We would like to see the plan of annexation carried out if it can be done. It would add to Alabam's wealth and resources and that is reason enough for us to desire to see it accomplished.

Never Get Into Debt.

Not many years ago a young man came in town to finish his studies at the office of one of our best lawyers. He was well educated, intelligent, agreeable and kind but he was poor, and in order to support himself tried to get a class in French. A few scholars came and the thing did not pay. After awhile he paid his landlady, left his boarding house and took to the woods. On the side of a hill, in a thick pine grove, he pitched his tent, where he cooked his food, slept and studied. Of course his strange conduct made a great deal of talk. One morning, after a terrible thunder storm during the night, his friends hunted him up.

"You'll be sick of this bargain after this," they said, and be glad enough to have a water-proof roof over your head."

"I did not take to the woods from choice," answered the young man. "I could not see my way clear to pay for my lodgings, and I am resolved never to be in debt. I know too well the danger of being in debt—my scanty income will carry me through the summer when I hope better times are coming."

Gentlemen offered to help him, but he sturdily refused their offers got through his studies, and has now a large business which handsomely supports him.

Was not that pluck? And did he not well think that the danger of being in debt is a serious danger? I wish more people thought so. Getting loose in money matters is often the beginning of ruin. When a boy or young man falls into the habit of borrowing money, spending freely, having things charged, neglecting to pay, dodging his creditors, promising to pay and not keeping his promise, he is in a bad way. He forgets, lies, loses self-respect, and is slowly but surely letting himself down, down, down. The history of many a man shows how far down it may be, even to robbery and murder. Two of the worst murders ever committed in Boston were done by respectable men to hide their debts. One killed his intimate friend because he could not pay a debt which he was owing him. The other, a young man, shot in cold blood in broad day a young associate, that he might rob the bank he was in in order to pay his debts Both did their work coolly, and apparently without any twinges of conscience. Both were above all suspicion. They had borne characters fair to the world; but there was a weak spot, a screw loose, a canker at the core. They were loose in their money matters.—Exchange.

OVER THE COUNTY.

Neighborhood News Gathered by Our Correspondents.

Maplesville Dots.

Mrs. Sophia Griffin is recovering from a serious illness.

Farmers are slowly moving around looking after pig cracks in their fences preparatory to planting, hoping after tickling the great brown earth with a hoe she may laugh with a harvest instead of a collapse of their pocket books.

Gardeners should plant Landreth's seed. Landreth's late cabbage stand our long summers better than any.

Miss Annie Givhan and Miss Loula Gilliam were the guests of Miss Willie Glover last week.

Stanton Notes.

Mrs. W. W. Little, our accomplished music and art teacher, is on a visit to her mother in Clark county.

Dr. W. W. Little, our beloved and skillful physician, can trade horses with the same success that attends his practice of medicine.

Miss Mamie Harwood, the popular and accomplished assistant teacher of the Stanton Institute, is expected home daily after a month's visit to Montgomery, Eufaula and Uniontown.

Mrs. O. H. P. Wright, who has been sick for over two month's, we are glad to say, is able to go about the house; may she soon be her self again.

The Stanton Alliance store is doing a fine business selling cheap goods. Mr. Stephens the manager is a wide awake merchant and as polite and affable as he is skillful in business.

Our little city is blessed in having preaching every Sunday except when we have a fifth Sunday. There are also two fine Sunday Schools. And we think we have the most moral community in the State. The writer has never heard an oath since his stay in Stanton.

Our Baptist ministers, Bros. McCord and Ruddick are exerting a healthful influence over the young of our neighborhood. May their harvest be abundant.

The immense business of Gregory-Coe Lumber Co. moves on under the management of its quiet, unassuming head, Mr. Richard Coe, like clock work. No strikes, no jars. Would that all enterprises had such a leader.

The Stanton Institute claims to be the largest school in the county, having 85 pupils on her roll-and can produce as fine specimens of art as can be found in any school in the State.

Miss Sallie Peebles, one of Brierfield's belles is visiting her aunt, Mrs. R. S. Marshall, of this place.

It is probable that Gregory-Coe Lumber Co. has sold 10,000 acres of land to an Immigration Co. from Chicago, Col. Randall Berry, of Selma, leading about a dozen of the representatives of the Company passed through this place enroute for the lands Sunday morning we hope the sale will be made.

We were glad to see the pleasant face of Mrs. Perry, nee Miss Lillie McGee, at church to-day.

You know Stanton is a historical place and in our next we hope to give you an account of the great battle fought here by General Forrest. X.

The Evil and the Remedy.

N. Y. Herald.

It is a disgrace to our civilization that fifty diverse systems of marriage and divorce are tolerated in this country.

That in one State a man may be a lawful husband and in another a bigamist.

That in one a woman be a wife and in an another a mistress.

That in one children may be legitimate and in another illegitimate.

That in one natural heirs may inherit and in another be disinherited.

That in a community where polygamy and polyandry are declared to be crimes a man may be the husband of more than one woman and a woman the wife of more than one husband.

The remedy is a constitutional amendment empowering Congress to make a uniform law of marriage and divorce.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Several good friends gave us pleasant calls on circus day.

Mr. R. P. Woolley, of this place, will farm near Strasburg this year.

Miss Lilla Gulledge, of Verbena, is visiting the Misses Gullahorn at this place.

The circus had a very fair attendance, but did not draw such a great crowd as was expected.

Miss Abbott Spratlin and Miss Fannie Nix, of Verbena, visited friends in our town Saturday.

Mrs. Adam Scheussler, of Montgomery, and her little daughter have been visiting Clanton.

Mr. J. C. Lawrence and wife after a week's stay in Clanton returned last week to Tuskaloosa.

For sale at a sacrifice, a good farm horse only 5 years old. For further information apply at this office.

Miss Anna Logan, of Verbena has taken charge of the house keeping department of the A. C. F. College at Tuskaloosa.

We are very glad to learn that Mr. J. F. Maull has rebuilt his dwelling. His serious misfortunes seem to only redouble his wonderful energy and enterprise.

When you go to a circus always hunt up the "thimble rig" performer and bet against his trick. You can make a thousand dollars in fifteen minutes, which is a sure way to get rich fast.

Neglect never yet lifted a mortgage or bettered a bank account and just now the thrifty breeder will bestir himself to see that provision is made for carrying the live stock properly through the winter months.

Farmers, See Here.

I have what you want for use on your farms at this season of the year and will sell you your goods cheap for the cash. I need the cash and you need the goods, so come to see me and you soon can be relieved of your cash, and not be robbed either.

Your friend,
W. L. SAMPEY.

Miss Mattie Holt, a sister of Mr. T. G. Holt, is visiting relatives here.

Order rubber stamp goods from Osce Rroberts 1918 First Avenue. Birmingham, Ala.

Maj. John Harrell, of Birmingham, visited relatives in Clanton this week.

Miss Burwell, after a protracted visit to relatives in Clanton, retured to her home in Sumter last week.

Sheriff Hayes and deputy Stewart did some good work on circus day. They have set a good example by never having any thing to do with whiskey.

The Coosa Advocate is doing good work in behalf of good morals at Rockford by fighting the "blind tiger" in the interest of a good school. The Advocate, by the way, is an excellent paper.

Circus day was drunkard's day in town, but our business-like sheriff and deputy were onhand and kept good order. They are two men who never handle tangle-foot except when it is in another fellow.

Editor Bentley, of the Rockford Advocate, spent a few days with friends in Clanton the past week. Our brother is invited to make the VIEW office his headquarters when in our city, where he can write his notes or talk politics either. He wears such good clothes to be a country editor, and has such a winning look when he is over this way that we are 'kinder' suspicious that he means business when he comes here.

Sam English some time ago moved from Chilton to Autauga and left his subscription dues unpaid. The Pratville Progress man had better make a note of this. Another gentleman (?) by the name of J. H. Vines moved from near the town of Jemison into the western part of the county recently, and he keeps "as snug as a bug in a rug," and we can't get a hearing from him. However we will give him what he owes us if he will move on into Bibb or Dallas. The beats on our list are few and we will have to get some fun out of them if we can't get any money.

Justice Gore of beat one informed us on Thursday last of a criminal assault made right recently upon a thirteen year old child in that beat by a villain named G. W. Cannon. This was the second assault of the kind made by Cannon upon the same child. Justice Gore took the testimony of the little girl. The scoundrel escaped. It is too often the case in this part of the country that such fiends are allowed to get out of the reach of the law before they pay the penalty of their crimes.

The publications made by the daily press concerning the affair are incorrect in the matter of time, place and names of the parties.

The close of the war found Joe Owens a poor slave with a large family to support. He had nothing but a strong muscle and willing heart. He went to work and to-day he is what the world calls a rich man—has a fine valley farm plenty of good stock, a large gin, a commodious barn and a comfortable dwelling occupied by a happy family. He pays his debts and enjoys the full confidence of all business men. We are glad to note this evidence of prosperity among the colored people and hope to see them continue to prosper. Joe is a subscriber to the Advertiser and no doubt owes much of his success to its teachings.—Moulton Advertiser.

I have purchased the drug business of W. H. Phillips in Clanton, and will continue the business at the same stand.

I shall also keep a stock of extra quality family groceries. I shall handle none but the very best articles, and my customers can rely upon getting pure, fresh goods.

Answer this Question.

Why do so many people we see around us seem to prefer to suffer and be made miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of Appetite, Coming up of the Food, Yellow Skin, when for 75 cents, we will sell them Shiloh's System Vitalizer, guaranteed to cure them. Sold by A. E. Bivings, Clanton.

Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy.

Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy, a marvelous cure for Catarrh, Diptheria, Canker Mouth, and Head-Ache. With each bottle there is an ingenious Nasal Injector for the more successful treatment of these complaints without extra charge. Price 50 cents. Sold by A. E. Bivings, Clanton.

A serious difficulty occured at Chandler's mill, some distance west of Clanton Tuesday. John Morgan and J. L. Smith two employees of the mill had a dispute about some logs, which ended in blows. Smith struck Morgan with a whip handle. Morgan retaliated by striking Smith on the head with a piece of iron, fracturing his skull. Morgan has left for parts unkown, and Smith, it is feared, is very seriously injured, though he will probably recover.

All kinds of blank deeds and waive notes for sale at this office.

Shiloh's Consumption Cure.

This is beyond question the most successful Cough Medicine we have ever sold, a few doses invariably cure the worst cases of Cough, Croup and Bronchitis, while its wonderful success in the cure of consumption is without a parallel in the history of medicine. Since its first discovery it has been sold on a guarantee, a test which no other medicine can stand. If you have a cough, we earnestly ask you to try it. Price 10 cents, 50 cents, and $1.00. If your Lungs are sore, Chest or back lame, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by A. E. Bivings, Clanton. jan 10 itself so safe, sure and QUICK an eradicator of mercurial, syphilitic, scrofulous, malarial or other poison, foreign to health, that gets into bone and blood, when all else fails as B. B. B. Send to Blood Balm Co., Atlanta, Ga., for illustrated "Book of Wonders," filled with convincing proof of QUICK CURES of seemingly incurable cases.

A. F. Britton, Jackson, Tenn., writes: "I contracted malaria in the swamps of Louisiana while working for the telegraph company, and used every kind of medicine I could hear of without relief. I at last succeeded in breaking the fever but it cost me over $100.00, and then my system was prostrated and saturated with poison and I became almost helpless. I finally came here, my mouth so filled with sores that I could scarcely eat, and my tongue raw and filled with little knots. Various remedies were resorted to without effect. I bought two bottles of B. B. B. and it has cured and strengthened me. All sores of my mouth are healed and my tongue entirely clear of knots and soreness, and I feel like a new man."

POISON

R. R. Saulter, Athens, Ga., writes: "I have been afflicted with Catarrh for many years, although all sorts of medicines and several doctors did their best to cure me. My blood was very impure, and nothing ever had any effect upon the disease until I used that great Blood Remedy known as B. B. B., a few bottles of which effected an entire cure. I recommend it to all who have Catarrh. I refer to any merchant or banker of Athens, Ga., and will reply to any inquiries."

CATARRH

Benj. Morris, Atlanta, Ga., writes: "I had no appetite, my kidneys felt sore, my throat was ulcerated and my breast a mass of running sores. Seven bottles of B. B. B., entirely cured me."

WOMAN'S WORLD.

PLEASANT LITERATURE FOR FEMININE READERS.

A Cigarette-Smoking Duchess.

Mrs. Hamersley, now the Duchess of Marlborough, was always an inveterate cigarette smoker, and she has not abandoned the practice upon her elevation to the peerage. Just now the shops are showing little ladies' smoking jackets, said to be patterned after the one worn by the Duchess when she joins her husband in the smoking-room after dinner, for that is her custom, I am told, by those who have been to Blenheim under the new regime.—Chicago News.

Mrs. Shaw, the Whistler.

There was a great throng at Chickering Hall on her opening night in New York City to hear Mrs. Alice Shaw, the whistler. Seven numbers were heard before Mrs. Shaw appeared. To most of the audience she was a novelty, and not even Josef Hofman was looked upon with keener curiosity at his debut than was she as she walked from the waiting-room to the footlights. She held a piece of sheet music "Mia Piccirella," by Gomes, in her hand just as though she were going to sing from it. Nobody knew which was to have a turn first, the whistle or the piano. It was the piano. A short, meaningless prelude began the affair, and then Mrs. Shaw held up her head and put out her flexible lips like a pretty school girl under the light of the moon. The sound that followed was not suggestive of the moonlit scene. It was a soft, silvery trill, that hung for an instant at the same note and then darted away in liquid melody. High and low, presto and adagio, it went, now blustering a forte like a mad winter wind around a house corner, and again waiting sentimentally after the portamento fashion of a lover tenor. It was an interesting performance, and when the piece was finished the applause was genuine and hearty. Of course she was recalled and the second piece was as good and as well done as the first. Then there was more applause, and after coming out to bow her acknowledgments four times Mrs. Shaw whistled a third piece. Mrs. Shaw was a sensational pouting success.—Chicago Times.

The Toilet in Ancient Egypt.

A few words may be said about the dress of the ladies in ancient Egypt. They wore a gown of brightly colored and patterned stuff secured by a sash at the waist or by a belt over the shoulders. Above this was a large, loose robe of fine linen, with full sleeves, fastened in front below the breast. The sandals were usually pointed and turned up at the toe, and people of position were very particular about them. The hair was worn long or plaited in the triple plait, the ends being tied by a string of the same color as the hair. The back hair in plaits reached to the bottom of the shoulderblades, while the plaits at the side fell down to the breast. Ornamental bands were fastened over the head, and sometimes combs were worn. The short hair at the side of the face was interwoven with some of the longer hair and made to fall in a little curl just in front of the earring. The earrings usually worn were large hoops of gold, of a diameter of from one to nearly three inches, but one in the shape of a dragon has been found. Rings were generally worn on the left hand, and particularly on the third finger; they were of gold, and were sometimes set with engraved gems. Anklets and bangles were also worn, and bracelets set with precious stones; also necklaces of many devices, usually with a large drop ornament in the centre. The appliances of the toilet used by a lady were numerous and included a black powder for staining the eyelids and eyebrows—antimony or black oxide of manganese being generally used, though the black powder of burnt almonds seems a more harmless material than these metallic products. In Egyptian paintings the eye is often represented as much elongated, and probably this appearance was produced by painting. A bodkin was used for applying the black powder, or kohl, and very elegant little boxes with various compartments were devised to contain it. Some large gold-headed pins have been discovered, which seem to have been used to stick into the hair, much after the modern fashion. In order to enhance the beauty of the fingernails the pink portion of them was stained with henna, which made the white semi-circle at the root of the nails stand out more clearly by contrast. Mirrors were made of metal, and so highly polished that they were perfectly adapted for the purpose; they were round, and were inserted in a handle of some pretty or quaint design. Sometimes the head of some hideous monster formed part of the handle, the mirror thus suggesting the idea of Beauty and the Beast, and the ugly head serving as a foil to the loveliness reflected in the bright surface above. The ladies were fond of bathing, using both the hot and cold bath, but ordinarily preferring the latter.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Fashion Notes.

Feather boas are more popular than ever.

Green retains its place as the favorite color.

The newest French toques are round in shape.

A great many black hats and bonnets are worn.

Dark green bengaline is used for street costumes.

Lace is the favorite trimming for evening dresses.

The low-crowned hat and bonnet are coming, but they come, like most good things, slowly.

Ribbon toques are new. They are in the long English shape, two kinds of ribbon being used.

Misses' evening bonnets are in pale pink or blue tulle, with very long and very broad ribbons of the same color.

Quite new and immensely stylish are the veils of black dotted net drawn under the chin by a narrow black ribbon.

A white flannel afternoon bonnet recently seen was trimmed in white cloth, with green velvet front, laid in loose folds.

Among the novelties in millinery are bonnets covered in split zephyr worsteds, usually white, woven across and around the crown.

Although coiffures are less voluminous, the hair is still piled on the top of the head, while a few light curls fall over the forehead.

Ribbon muffs to match the costumes with which they are worn are novel and pretty. They are made with alternating strips of ribbon and of fur going round the muff, and many-looped bows of the ribbon on the top.

Fillets of ribbon are worn in the hair with evening toilets; also half-wreaths of tiny flowers, which tend the hair in two pointed, fillet-like rows. These fillets are often finished with a [illegible] bow of many short loops.

HOUSEHOLD MATTERS.

Glue for Many Purposes.

Soak half a pound of glue over night in a quart of good milk, and boil it the next day; it will dissolve moisture much better than glue dissolved in water.

An adhesive mucilage for labels, suitable for bottles or glass, may be prepared by soaking glue in strong vinegar; then heat to boiling and add flour. This is very adhesive, and does not decompose when kept in wide-mouthed bottles.

The following preparation is very useful for gumming large sheets of paper, which may be kept on hand ready for use; when wetted they will stick well on glass: Starch, two drachms; white sugar, one ounce; gum arabic, two drachms; to be boiled with a sufficient quantity of water.—Jewellers' Review.

Economical Hints for the Kitchen.

Among the cheap and nutritious meats may be mentioned tripe. Twice a week, each time in a different way, this dish would be acceptable to many. Where the meat dish is light a cheese or macaroni may be served with it, thus keeping up the required amount of nourishment. Lentils also contain so much nitrogenous food that very light or made over meats should accompany them. Variety will be found to be more economical, at the same time more beneficial to health and appetite than the usual rounds of the American housewife. When a quart can of tomatoes is opened for soup, one-half only should be used, and with a quart of stock (the latter costs nothing if all stock materials are saved), a little suet, flour, onion and bay leaf, makes a delightful dinner soup, and quite enough for a family of six. The few pieces of bread left from breakfast may be cut into squares and toasted to serve with it. The remaining half of the tomatoes should be put in a bowl or jar and used next day for sauce, scalloped, or if mixed with okra and rice will make a nice dish for lunch. Do not waste even a slice of tomato or a leaf of cabbage, and at the end of the year you will be well paid.—Table Talk.

Cold Potatoes in Nine Ways.

There are many families, writes D. M. M. in Good Housekeeping, who never make any use of potatoes left from dinner; there are others who use the whole boiled and throw away the mashed. There is no vegetable which may be made into more savory forms than the potato. Of the various ways of frying there need be but little mention. The whole ones cut in four large slices are very good broiled over coals.

Potato mound: One-half of a cupful of milk, a tablespoonful of butter, salt and pepper to taste, the well-beaten whites of four eggs added to six mashed potatoes. Stir all together lightly with a fork. Pile in a mound and brown.

Lyonnaise Potatoes are prepared by cutting cold potatoes into small pieces, season with salt and pepper; add one teaspoonful of chopped parsley. Put a teaspoonful of butter on the fire in a saucepan; when hot add a slice of onion; fry brown; add potatoes and fry a light brown.

Potato cake: Mix mashed potato with pepper, salt, a small proportion of flour and a little baking powder. Mix with milk to proper consistency, roll out to the thickness of an inch and cut in cakes; grease the frying-pan, lay in the cake and turn as griddle cakes are turned to cook both sides.

Potato scalloped with cheese: Two pounds of finely mashed potato; add three ounces of melted butter, two ounces of grated cheese, a little pepper and salt. Fill small dishes with this and brown in the oven. Glaze them over with melted butter and grated cheese, return one minute to the hottest part of the oven. Serve very hot.

Potatoes a la Provencale: Finely mashed potato seasoned with pepper and salt. For two pounds of the potato allow two ounces of grated cheese which has been mixed to a paste with butter; add a gill of milk and a teaspoonful of chopped parsley. Put the mixture in a frying-pan, add the potato mixed well and stir till the mass is pale brown. Serve as a pyramid.

Potato croquettes are good and easily made. To mashed potatoes add pepper and salt, with sufficient egg to make a stiff paste; make it into balls of equal size, roll in fine crumbs, dip in egg and again roll in crumbs. When your fat is smoking hot put the croquettes in the wire basket and fry them, shaking lightly all the time. As soon as they are a golden brown they are done.

Scalloped potatoes: For one quart of potatoes cut very small, allow a large cupful of milk. Make a cream of the milk, one teaspoonful of flour and one tablespoonful of butter. When it is thick put a layer of potato in a baking dish, season with salt and pepper and pour on a little of the cream. Continue until all is used. Cover the top with rolled cracker crumbs and bits of butter. Bake twenty minutes. Serve in the baking dish.

Potatoes with cheese: Cut six cold potatoes into dice. Make a sauce by by melting two tablespoonsful of butter; add two tablespoonsful of flour and pour on slowly one cupful of white stock and one cupful of milk; season with salt and pepper and add four heaped tablespoonsful of grated cheese. Put a layer of potato into a baking tin, and pepper; cover with sauce, and continue until all is used. Sprinkle with buttered crumbs, and brown in the oven.

Potato salad: One of the best methods of serving cold potatoes is to make them into salads. Cut them into any convenient form, add one small onion finely chopped and a little celery. Mix thoroughly with a dressing made as follows: Break into a bowl the yolks of three eggs, add a pinch of red pepper, a teaspoonful of made mustard, a teaspoonful of salt, and beat hard. Add of best oil, beating constantly, enough to make the dressing as thick as cake batter, alternating occasionally with a few drops of vinegar. Finish by adding one cupful of thick cream—sweet or sour.

A Goldbeater's Marvelous Skill.

It is said that a single Cincinnati establishment each year beat out 21,000 gold dollars into gold leaf, and as each dollar can be made into a sheet that will carpet two rooms sixteen and a half feet square, some idea may be formed of its extreme tenuity. It requires 1400 thicknesses of gold leaf to equal a sheet of this paper, and 280,000 to form an inch. The metal, which must be twenty-three carats fine, is first run into bars one inch wide and about seven inches long, and then rolled to the thickness of letter paper. It is then cut into inch squares, 390 of which are interleaved with four-inch squares of parchment and beaten by hand with heavy hammers upon a solid block till they spread to the parchment's dimensions. Then they are subdivided and again beaten out, and the process goes on and on, till the limit is reached, when the moulds pass into the hands of girl sorters and counters, who trim each sheet to the size of 3¼ inches, and lay them between tissue paper in the "books" of commerce.—Commercial Advertiser.

AGRICULTURAL.

TOPICS OF INTEREST RELATIVE TO FARM AND GARDEN.

To Prevent Winter Killing of Wheat.

Every spring when the crop reports begin to come in, more or less is heard of winter killed fields of wheat. Whatever tends to prove this, helps to increase the crop and the farmer's profit. The American Agriculturist gives the following upon this subject, which is worthy of trying:

The most effective and beneficial mode of preventing the wheat plant from being injured or destroyed by the freezing and heaving of the soil, is liberal mulching, top dressing with fine manure or compost from the barnyard, or slacked peat from the muck pile, to be evenly spread over the fall sowed wheat field. In autumn, when the ground is sufficiently frozen to bear the wagon wheels, spread just thick enough to have the ground lightly covered, so that when the soil freezes, cracks and heaves, the wheat roots will be covered, protected, and not torn out, but the mulch or compost will fall into the cracks and cover the roots, sheltering them from the effects of the weather. We have several times seen fields which were liable to freezing and heaving, with wheat drilled in, portions of which were top dressed in autumn as above directed, and on which a full crop of plump grain was secured, while on the portion of the fields not mulched, in every instance the crop of wheat was a total failure, not showing straw or grain enough to be worth harvesting. In fact, the grain obtained from the top dressed portions of the fields much more than paid the cost of the operation; beside the incidental benefits of this light mulching as a surface manure, it was a protection to the soil from scorching sun rays of summer, and sheltered the young grass when the grain was cut off. In fact, liberal, frequent, careful top dressing of fall sown grains as well as meadows, is one of the most profitable and reasonable methods for preserving fertility of soils and protecting grains and grasses that farmers can practice, and will be found always profitable.

The Care of Poultry in Winter.

As the winter draws near and the provident farmer prepares food for his cattle, sheep and other live stock, it will be well for him also to take into consideration the wants of the poultry. By looking around the farm many little remnants of seeds and grain can be put aside for their use, as for instance the seed from the sorghum stalks, the scattered corn gathered up from the floor of the corn crib before the new crop is housed, and the trashy wheat mixed with dust and chaff left on the granary floor when the last bag has been carried to mill.

During the cold weather as much of their food should be given to them warm as possible; even the milk for them to drink should be warmed. Last winter the cook used to make mush of skim milk for the fowls. The milk was brought to a boiling point, then thickened with cornmeal. It is needless to say that this dish was most highly appreciated. Corn was also boiled for them, and wheat, partly because it is more wholesome and partly from economic reasons; the grain by swelling to twice its size goes twice as far. Boiled wheat is the best food for fowls that we have ever tried; still, the greater variety the better. We give them something of nearly everything on the place. The horses are made to contribute some of their shelled oats; the cows, a bag of wheat bran now and then, a small portion of their ground oats, shipstuff, or whatever is in season. It is an excellent idea to mix a little cottonseed meal with the soft food about every other day. One pint to a mess for one hundred fowls is sufficient, as the cottonseed meal is very rich. This, by the way, deepens considerably the color of the yolks of the eggs. I know of one farmer who raised a large crop of black-eyed peas for the benefit of his fowls on a field that was too poor to bring anything else. It is a good idea to boil the peas with the corn or the wheat, and the fowls show their appreciation by eating the peas first.

Before the winter comes on the hen-house should be examined, close shutters nailed over the lattice-work windows, and all other openings closed that are large enough to admit the driving rain or drifting snow. When fowls are not sufficiently protected to prevent their combs and feet from becoming frosted, not only is their appearance considerably disfigured, but the suffering is so intense that the hens become poor and the supply of eggs is diminished. Many persons think that fowls are healthier to roost above an earthen floor, but where a good many are kept in one house it seems to me it would be difficult to keep the floor clean; earth, because of its absorbent qualities, soon becomes very impure. My best hen-house has a good tight floor high enough from the ground for the air to circulate freely beneath it, and so smooth that it can be scraped clean with a hoe, after which it is neatly swept with a broom, and receives, together with the roosting-poles and nest-boxes, a good thick coat of whitewash. This is done as often as seems necessary; when we have a good many fowls, every two weeks at least. The old nests are then thrown away and a layer of refuse tobacco placed in the bottom of the boxes with only a sufficient quantity of clean straw or hay put above it to make a soft nest. Since this plan has been adopted the fowls have not been troubled with insects, and have been remarkably healthy. Lime, crushed egg-shells and bone meal are placed in accessible places; and thus finding all their natural wants provided for, chickens are not apt to contract the bad habit of eating their own eggs, or plucking out each other's feathers.—Country Gentleman.

Do not waste wood ashes.

The pulse of a healthy horse is from thirty-two to forty beats per minute.

Buttermilk poured over the backs of scurvy swine is said to be a sure cure.

It is better to give the cows plenty of bedding than to abuse them because they lie in the manure.

Give a small quantity of bicarbonate of soda in swill to young pigs which are afflicted with scours.

Never give a horse a full feed immediately before nor soon after subjecting him to severe exertion.

It is better to make box stalls for your cows than to dehorn them so that you can pack them closer in a shed.

Club root in cabbages is prevented by making the seed bed on new ground or ground not used for cabbage for several years.

Major Alvord condemns dehorning in toto. He says that it is cruel, and argues that it does not render the cattle less pugnacious.

Cows at pasture after the first severe frost want something more than damaged grass. Grain will come in play as well as in midwinter.

WORDS OF WISDOM.

It is the last step that costs.

Never put a gift cigar in the mouth.

A man is known by the dog he keeps.

Never press a favor where it seems undesired.

Never intrude ill health, pains, losses or misfortunes.

Never unavoidably wound the feelings of a human being.

A man may wear epaulets and be only a drummer in the band.

Providence always provides a shorn lamb for the wind to blow upon.

Love labor; for if thou dost not want it for food, thou mayst for physic.

Injuries are forgiven only in their ceasing to be such, and then, what is there to forgive?

Selfishness mars the loveliest actions; it stains the fairest beauty; it dims the brightest lustre; it blotches the most munificent charity.

The golden beams of truth and the silken cords of love, twisted together, will draw men on with a sweet violence whether they will or not.

Prosperity is not the only state and course of things among mankind. Only a very few prosper until they have purchased prosperity by very severe and long-continued effort and suffering.

Always give precedence to elders, visitors and superiors. Offer them the best seat at the table, the best place by the fire and the first of everything. Go farther than mere form and see that they are comfortable and happy.

Novel Mode of Keeping Fish Fresh.

On the river front of the Fulton Market little offices are portioned off for the use of the marketmen. Visitors to these offices, should they happen to look out on the river water between the piers enclosing the slips in the rear of the market, will be puzzled at the scene that greets them. A score or more of small sloops or schooners lie a stone's throw distant from the river front, and between them and the rear of the market are dozens of queer-looking contrivances, something like big tomato crates, so submerged in the water as to only have their tops projecting above the surface. If these crates or boxes are watched signs of life will be seen within them. Close inspection will reveal the fact that most of these crates are filled with lobsters, green turtles, ocean cod, sea bass or other denizens of the deep.

The crates are designed to keep certain kinds of fish alive until they are wanted for the market. The average crate, or "car," as it is technically termed, is about eighteen feet long by fourteen wide and about five feet deep. It is made of slate, nailed to a framework and placed so close together as to prevent the escape of the fish imprisoned within, but at the same time sufficiently apart to permit a free circulation of river water through the sides. There are scores of these "cars" moored in the slip in close proximity to one another.

The frame of which they are constructed is very buoyant and the "cars" are used by the marketmen as a sort of a pontoon bridge from their stalls to the fishing vessels. Ladders are suspended from the rear of the market stalls, and the marketman can clamber down to the floath underneath, run over the "cars" to his smack in the slip and the back again, up the ladder, and in his office in a few minutes time.

Several of these smacks may be seen in the slip at any time when the river is navigable. They are for the most part small affairs, ranging from 10 to 75 tons burden, and are worth from $150 to $4000 or $5000. The fleet numbers about eighty sloops and schooners, the halibut boats being schooner-rigged and the larger number of the others being sloops. Most of them are owned by commission fish dealers, though some belong to their captains.—New York Sun.

Elevated Railroad Perquisites.

It may not be generally known that even the ticket sellers in the Elevated roads have what they cheerfully term "perquisites." They consist largely of the change that passengers in a hurry leave behind them in their haste to board the cars. This forgotten change invariably goes into the pocket of the ticket seller, and the agent who turns this money into the office would be regarded as uncommonly soft. The Observer was told the following story by an ex-agent on the Sixth Avenue "L:" "Some time ago," said the young man, "an old fellow came along carrying one of those chain purses. It bulged at both ends, and in getting out his money he evidently dived into the wrong end, for he passed a $20 gold piece through the window. I gave him his ticket and his ninety-five cents change and turned to the drawer to count out the other $19. When I had it ready the old fellow had disappeared." "What did you do with the money?" I asked. "Put it in my pocket, of course. The old fellow never came back for it and I was in just $19 that day above my regular perquisites." At some of the busy stations it is no uncommon thing for the agents to clear from $3 to $10 a day above their regular wages from forgotten change, and they consider themselves perfectly justified in appropriating it to their own use. This is not all. Some of them effect temporary loans from the money drawer, and to keep their accounts straight borrow tickets from each other, representing the amount, until the loan has been repaid. There is a great deal of quiet financiering among the "L" road ticket agents.—New York Graphic.

Area and Population of British India.

A statistical abstract recently published contains a table showing the increase in the area and population of British territory in India since 1842. In that year the area was 626,000 square miles, in 1844 it increased to 675,000; in 1847 to 694,000; in 1848 to 699,000; and so down to 1855 more or less was added every year (except 1852), until it reached 832,000 square miles; and in 1856 it arose to 856,000. At this it remained until 1865, when this increased to 860,000; in 1882 this rose to 868,256; and in 1886 to 947,887 square miles. So that British India in 1886 was half as large again as it was in 1842. Perhaps this extraordinary increase will be better understood when put in this form. Since 1842 an area equal to that of France, Italy and Belgium had been added to British India—that is to the British territory in India, including the native States. In 1842 British India had an area equal to that of France, Spain and the German Empire of to-day; in 1852 an area as large as Italy and Portugal put together was added to this; by 1862 a further area as large as Hungary was added; by 1882 this was increased by the area of Holland; and by 1886 an area equivalent to that of the whole German Empire, including the kingdom of Prussia, was added to this. The area of the native States under British protection, which are not included in the above examination, is roughly equivalent to the combined areas of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, Spain, Portugal and Italy.—Pioneer.

STORIES ABOUT WASHINGTON.

The New Congressmen and the Jokes Played on Them.

An employé of the House has been telling me about a new Congressman from the South, who came walking into the hall, looked around for awhile with an air of ownership as if he had just bought the Capitol and was pleased with his purchase, and then inquired where the vacant desks were. When told they were all vacant he seemed gratified and asked how they were assigned.

"Every member selects for himself," was the reply,

"Which have been taken?"

"None. Nobody has been in to choose yet."

"Wa'al, that's lucky, ain't it; so I'm the first man on the ground;" and walking away with a satisfied air he picked out a seat nearly in front of the clerk's desk and observed:

"I reckon I'll roost here,"

The word was passed around among the messengers and pages, and, as usual, they were ready for a lark. A card was cut, upon which the new Honorable wrote his name, and then one of the boys shoved it in the frame made for the purpose. Next they showed him to the stationery room, where he inquired into the perquisites of a legislator and seemed greatly pleased at the idea of having so much fine letter paper and sundries at his disposal. He gave each of the pages a pocket-knife and the stationery clerk put him up an assortment of all kinds and sizes of paper and envelopes, which he packed away in his desk. Then he sat down to write a letter home and "tell the folks all about it." Next week he will discover what the boys were laughing at.

I heard about another member of the freshman class at the Capitol who discovered the House restaurant, ordered a square meal, ate it with great gusto, and was then almost knocked out of his chair by having a cashier's check presented to him. He had previously taken a bath and offered to pay for it, but was told that it was a free Government institution. He naturally concluded that a great Nation—spelled with a big N—that bathed its servants and paid men to rub them down, fed them as well, and thought the waiter was trying to humbug him.

"Isn't this the members' restaurant?" he asked.

"Yes, sir," replied the waiter.

"Well, I'm a member from So-and-So."

"Can't help that, sir; members pay just like other folks."

Well, it all ended by the new member hauling out his wallet and in a cautious way settling the bill, but it will take some time for the idea to get through his head that while the Government provides every opportunity for its legislators to be clean, it has not reached that point yet where it proposes to feed them.

The Dutch Succession.

The king of the Netherlands is dying. The heir to King William III is the Princess Wilhelmina, the only child of his second marriage, who is now in her 9th year. It has been decided by the Dutch Chamber that, failing the young princess and her heirs, the succession is to vest in the king's sister, the Grand Duchess Sophia Louisa, of Saxe-Weimar-Eisenach, and then in the descendants of the late Princess Marianne, of the Netherlands, who was married to Prince Frederick Albert, of Prussia, a younger brother of the late German Emperor William I, who died in 1872, having been divorced from her in 1849. Their eldest son is the prince regent of Brunswick, but his chances of reigning at the Hague are remote, as the grand duchess of Saxe-Weimar has a son and two grandsons, and her elder daughter, Princess Marie, is married to Prince Henry VII, Reuss.

Something New.

A new and very effective thing which is taking hold on the market, is a valuable discovery made known through The Charles A. Vogeler Co., Baltimore, Md., proprietors of the renowned St. Jacobs Oil, and known as Diamond Vera-Cura, for Dyspepsia, a positive cure for Indigestion and all stomach troubles arising therefrom. If not found in the stock of druggist or dealer, it will be sent by mail on receipt of 25 cents (5 boxes $1.00) in stamps. Sample sent on receipt of two-cent stamp. It has been found on trial to be a specific for sour stomach, heartburn, nausea, giddiness, constipation, nervousness and low spirits, and it is spoken of and recommended by hundreds who have used it and have found lasting benefits.

Lung Troubles and Wasting

Diseases can be cured, if properly treated in time, as shown by the following statement from D. C. Freeman, Sydney: "Having been a great sufferer from pulmonary attacks, and gradually wasting away for the past two years, it affords me pleasure to testify that Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Lime and Soda has given me great relief, and I cheerfully recommend it to all suffering in a similar way to myself. In addition, I would say that it is very pleasant to take."

The question of reviving the use of the lance in the [illegible] army is again being discussed.

Pains and Aches

In various parts of the body, more particularly in the back, shoulders, and joints, are the unwelcome indications that rheumatism has gained a foothold, and you are "in for it" for a longer or shorter period. Rheumatism is caused by lactic acid in the blood, and is cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which neutralizes the acidity, and eradicates every impurity from the blood.

"I suffered from an acute attack of rheumatism induced by a severe sprain of a once dislocated ankle joint, which caused great swelling and intense pain. One bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla restored circulation, cleansed the blood and relieved the pain."—L. T. [illegible], Springfield, Mo.

Burning the Dead.

Cremation societies are being augmented in this country by women of the "strong-minded" class, who are joining them rapidly. In New York, Brooklyn, and Boston particularly, there are a great many well-known women enrolled among the cremationists, and the movement is endorsed by a still greater number who have not taken pains to become members. Mary A. Livermore, Lucy Stone, Miss Peabody, Clara Erskine, Clement Waters, Edna Dean Proctor, Lillian Whiting, Lucy Larcom, and Miss Whitney are among those in Boston who advocate burning the dead. In New York there is a yet greater company of literary and artistic women, and throughout the country the prominence and numbers of cremationists are surprisingly large. Many members of Sorosis, of the Authors' Club, and the Artist League are cremationists, and the rank and file of heterodox people are its advocates. Among Unitarians, cremation is generally accepted as the best mode of disposing of dead bodies, and not a few orthodox Christians favor it earnestly.

Use of the Beaver's Tail.

It is a common belief that the beaver uses its tail as a trowel to plaster the mud on the walls of its house and dam. Captain Hardy studied the habits of the animal in Nova Scotia some time ago, and came to the conclusion that this opinion was not well founded.

The vulgar opinion that the broad tail of the beaver was used to plaster down the mud in its work, has long since been pronounced erroneous. Its real use is evidently to counterpoise, by an action against the water in an upward direction, the tendency to sink, head foremost, when propelling itself through the water by its powerful and webbed hind feet, and at the same time supporting the load of mud or stones in its forepaw under the chin.

Our Indians laughed at the idea of the trowel story. That, and the assertion that the tail is likewise used as a vehicle for materials, may be considered as exploded notions.

Read and Remember.

Thousands suffer from ailments that make existence almost unbearable. Weakness, loss of appetite, sore kidneys, sore liver, skin sores, aching joints, etc., cause years of suffering simply because the true remedy is not made use of. Botanic Blood Balm, more familiarly known as B. B. B. or the Three B's, has satisfactorily proven its merit in many thousand instances, and is an unfailing cure for all diseases originating from a state of either inherited or contagious blood poison. It is unique in its curative power, and is unlike all other compounds. It has cured many cases pronounced incurable. No sufferer should feel discouraged because other medicines have miserably failed to give relief. B. B. B. will not disappoint anyone. Get it of retail druggists. If they don't have it on hand, make them send to their wholesale dealer for a supply. Try it when in a condition of ill-health. You will be delighted with its quick assistance as a recuperative agent. Send for our illustrated book of testimonials. Blood Balm Co., Atlanta, Ga.

Caheen Declares and Pledges himself to sell Dry Goods and Millinery cheaper than other houses can buy them. Our business has been a grand success, and we truly appreciate the large patronage bestowed upon us. We shall always endeavor to merit a continuance of popular favor by offering such inducements and unexcelled bargains to the people of Birmingham and vicinity, that the crowds of buyers will seek our double store (filled with desirable Dry Goods) in preference to any other. We are not selfish in our dealings, for when our New York buyer ships us our car loads of Dry Goods, bought direct from manufacturers, at the lowest cash prices, we do not ask our customers a double profit, but at once divide the jobbers' profit with our patrons. REV. DR. TALMAGE.

THE BROOKLYN DIVINE'S SUNDAY SERMON.

Subject: "A Bright Sunday Versus A Doleful Sunday."

TEXT: "And call the Sabbath a delight."—Isaiah lviii., 13.

There is an element of gloom striking through all false religions. Paganism is a brood of horrors. The god of Confucius frowned upon its victims with blind fate. Mohammedanism promises nothing to those exhausted with sin in this world but an eternity of the same passional indulgences. But God intended that our religion should have the grand characteristic of cheerfulness. St. Paul struck the key-note when he said: "Rejoice evermore, and again I say, rejoice." This religion has no spikes for the feet; it has no hooks for the shoulder; it has no long pilgrimages to take; it has no funeral-pyres upon which to leap; it has no Juggernauts before which to fall. Its good cheer is symbolized in the Bible by the brightness of waters, and the redolence of lilies, and the sweetness of music, and the hilarities of a banquet. A choir of seraphim chanted at its induction, and pealing trumpet, and waving palm, and flapping wing of archangel are to celebrate its triumphs. It began its chief mission with the shout: "Glory to God in the highest!" and it will close its earthly mission with the ascription: "Hallelujah, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth!"

But men have said that our religion is not cheerful, because we have such a doleful Sabbath. They say: "You can have your religious assemblages, and your long faces, and your snuffling cant, and your psalm books, and your Bibles. Give us the Sunday excursion, and the horse-race, and the convivial laughter. We have so much joy that we want to spread it all over the seven days of the week, and you shall not have one of our days of worldly satisfaction for religious dolefulness." I want to show these men—if there are any such in the house this morning—that they are under a great delusion, and that God intended the fifty-two Sundays of the year to be hung up like bells in a tower, beating a perpetual chime of joy, and glory, and salvation, and heaven; for I want you to carry out the idea of the text, "and call the Sabbath a delight."

I remark, in the first place, we are to find in this day the joy of healthy repose. In this democratic country we all have to work—some with hand, some with brain, some with foot. If there is in all this house a hand that has not, during the past year, been stretched forth to some kind of toil, let it be lifted. Not one, not one. You sell the goods. You teach the school. You doctor in the sick room. You practice at the bar. You edit a newspaper. You tan the hides. You preach the Gospel. You mend the shoes. You sit at the shuttle. You carry the hod of bricks up the ladder on the wall. And the one occupation is as honorable as the other, provided God calls you to it. I care not what you do, if you only do it well. But when Saturday night comes you are jaded and worn. The hand cannot so skillfully manufacture; the eye cannot see as well; the brain is not so clear; the judgment is not so well balanced. A prominent manufacturer told me that he could see a difference between the goods which went out of his establishment on Saturday from the goods that went out on Monday. He said: "They were very different indeed. Those that were made in the former part of the week, because of the rest that had been previously given, were better than those that were made in the latter part of the week, when the men were tired out." The Sabbath comes, and it bathes the soreness from the limbs, quiets the agitated brain, and puts out the fires of anxiety that have been burning all the week. Our bodies are seven-day clocks, and unless on the seventh day they are wound up, they run down into the grave. The Sabbath was intended as a savings bank: into it we are to gather the resources upon which we are to draw all the week. That man who breaks the Sabbath [illegible] his own nerve, his own muscle, his own brain, his own bones. He dips up the wine of his own life and throws it away. He who breaks the Lord's day gives a mortgage of disease and death upon his entire physical estate, and at the most unexpected moment the mortgage will be foreclosed, and the man ejected from the premises. Every gland, every pore, and cell, and finger-nail demands the seventh day for repose. The respiration of the lungs, the throb of the pulse in the wrist, the motion of the bone in its socket declare: "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy." There are thousands of men who have had their lives dashed out against the golden gates of the Sabbath. A prominent London merchant testifies that thirty years ago he went to London. He says: "I have during that time watched minutely, and I have noticed that the men who went to their business on the Lord's day or opened their counting-houses, have, without a single exception, come to failure." A prominent Christian merchant in Boston says: "I find it don't pay to work on Sunday. When I was a boy, I lived out on Long Island there were merchants who loaded their vessels on the Sabbath day, keeping their men busy from morning until night, and it is my observation that they themselves came to nothing—the merchants—and their children came to nothing. It doesn't pay," he says, "to work the Sabbath."

I appeal to your observation. Where are the men who twenty years ago were Sabbath-breakers, and who have been Sabbath-breakers ever since? Without a single exception, you will tell me, they have come to financial or to moral beggary. I defy you to point out a single exception, and you can take the whole world for your field. It has either been a financial or moral ruination in every instance. Six hundred and forty physicians in London petition Parliament, saying: "We must have the Sabbath obeyed. We can not have health in this city and in this nation unless the Sabbath is observed." Those of our own country have given evidence on the same side. The man who takes down the shutters of his store on the Sabbath takes down the curse of Almighty God. The farmer who cultures his ground on the seventh day raises a crop of neuralgia, and consumption, and of death. A farmer said: "I defy your Christian Sabbath. I will raise a Sunday crop." So he went to work and plowed the ground on Sunday, and harrowed it on Sunday, and he planted corn on Sunday, and he reaped the corn on Sunday, and he gathered it into the barn on Sunday. "There," he says, "I have proved to you that all this idea about a fatality accompanying Sabbath work is a perfect sham. My corn is garnered, and all is well." But before many weeks passed the Lord God struck that barn with his lightnings, and away went the Sunday crop.

So great is the moral depression coming upon those who toil upon the Sabbath day, that you may have noticed (if you have not, I call your attention to the fact) that in cases where the public interest demands Sabbath toil the moral depression is so great that there are but very few who can stand it. For instance, the police service, without which not one of our houses would be safe—there are very few who can stand the pressure and temptation of it. In London, where there are five thousand policemen, the statistic is given that in one year nine hundred and twenty-one of that five thousand were dismissed, five hundred and twenty-three were suspended, and two thousand, four hundred and ninety-two were fined. Now, if the moral depression is so great in occupations that are positively necessary for the peace and prosperity of society, I ask you what must be the moral depression in those cases where there is no necessity for Sabbath work, and where a man chooses wordly business on the Lord's day just because he likes it, or wants to add to his emoluments? During the last war it was found out that these public works which paused on the seventh day turned out more war material than those which worked all the seven days. Mr. Bagnall, a prominent iron merchant, gives this testimony: "I find we have fewer accidents in our establishment and fewer interruptions, now we observe the Lord's day; and at the close of the year, now that we keep the Sabbath, I find that we turn out more iron and have larger profits than any year when we worked all the seven days." The fact is, Sabbath-made ropes will break, and Sabbath-made shoes will leak, and Sabbath-made coats will rip, and Sabbath-made muskets will miss fire, and Sabbath occupations will be blasted. A gentleman said: "I invented a shuttle on the Lord's day. I was very busy, so I made the model of that new shuttle on the Lord's day. So very busy was I during the week that I had to occupy many Sabbaths. It was a great success. I enlarged my buildings; I built new factories, and made hundreds of thousands of dollars; but I have to tell you that all the result of that work on the Sabbath has been to me ruin. I enlarged my buildings, I made a great many thousands of dollars, but I have lost all, and I charge it to the fact of that Sunday shuttle." I will place in two companies the men in this community who break the Sabbath and the men who keep it, and then I ask you who are the best friends of society? Who are the best friends of morals? Who have the best prospects for this world? Who have the best for the world that is to come?

Sabbath morning comes in the household. I suppose that the mere philosopher would say that the Sabbath light comes in a wave current, just like any other light, but it does not seem so to me. It seems as if it touched the eyelids more gently, and threw a brighter glow on the mantel ornaments, and cast a better cheerfulness on the faces of the children, and throw a supernatural glory over the old family Bible. Hail! Sabbath light! We rejoice in it. Rest comes in through the windows, or it leaps up from the fire, or it rolls out in the old arm chair, or it catches up the body into ecstacy, and swings open before the soul the twelve gates which are twelve pearls. The bar of the unopened warehouse, the hinges of the unfastened store window, the quiet of the commercial warehouse seem to say: "This is the day the Lord hath made." Rest for the sewing-woman, with weary hands, and aching side, and sick heart. Rest for the overtasked workman in the mine, or out on the wall, or in the sweltering factory. Hang up the plane, drop the adze, slip the band from the wheel, put out the fire. Rest for the body, for the mind, and for the soul.

"Welcome, sweet day of rest;
That saw the Lord arise;
Welcome to this reviving breast,
And these rejoicing eyes."

Again I remark, we ought to have in the Sabbath the joy of domestic reunion and consecration. There are some very good parents who have the faculty of making the Sabbath a great gloom. Their children run up against the wall of parental lugubriousness on that day. They are sorry when Sunday comes, and glad when it goes away. They think of everything bad on that day. It is the worst day to them, really, in all the week. There are persons who, because they were brought up in Christian families where there were wrong notions about the Sabbath, have gone out into dissipation and will be lost. A man said to me: "I have a perfect disgust for the Sabbath day. I never saw my father smile on Sunday. It was such a dreadful day to me when I was a boy, I never got over it, and never will." Those parents did not "call the Sabbath a delight;" they made it a gloom. But there are houses represented here this morning where the children say through the week: "I wonder when Sunday will come!" They are anxious to have it come. I hear their hosanna in the house; I hear their hosanna in the school. God intended the Sabbath to be especially a day for the father. The mother is home all the week. Sabbath day comes, and God says to the father, who has been busy from Monday morning to Saturday night at the store, or away from home: "This is your day. See what you can do in this little flock in preparing them for heaven. This day I set apart for you." You know very well that there are many parents who are mere sutlers of the household; they provide the food and raiment; once in a while, perhaps, they hear the child read a line or two in the new primer; or if there be a case of especial discipline, and the mother can not manage it, the child is brought up in the court-martial of the father's discipline and punished. That is all there is of it. No scrutiny of that child's immortal interests, no realization of the fact that the child will soon go out in a world where there are gigantic and overwhelming temptations that have swamped millions. But in some households it is not that way; the home, beautiful on ordinary days, is more beautiful now that the Sabbath has dawned. There is more joy in the "good morning." There is more tenderness in the morning prayer. The father looks at the child, and the child looks at the father. The little one dares now to ask questions without any fear of being answered: "Don't bother me—I must be off to the store." Now the father looks at the child, and he sees not merely the blue eyes, the arched brow, the long lashes, the sweet lip. He sees in that child a long line of earthly destinies; he sees in that child an immeasurably eternity. As he touches that child he says: "I wonder what will be the destiny of this little one!" And while this Christian father is thinking and praying, the sweet promise flows through his soul: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." And he feels a joy, not like that which sounds in the dance, or is wafted from the froth of the wine-cup, or that which is like the "crackling of thorns under a pot," but the joy of domestic reunion and consecration.

Have I been picturing something that is merely fanciful, or is it possible for you and and for me to have such a home as that? I believe it is possible.

I have a statistic that I would like to give you. A great many people, you know, say there is nothing in the Christian discipline of a household. In New Hampshire there were two neighborhoods—the one of six families, the other of five families. The six families disregarded the Sabbath. In time, five of these families were broken up by the separation of husbands and wives; the other by the father becoming a thief. Eight or nine of the parents became drunkards, one committed suicide, and all came to penury. Of some forty or fifty descendants, about twenty are known to be drunkards and gamblers and dissolute. Four or five have been in State prison. One fell in a duel. Some are in the almshouse. Only one became a Christian, and he after first having been outrageously dissipated. The other five families that regarded the Sabbath were all prospered. Eight or ten of the children are consistent members of the church. Some of them became officers in the church; one is a minister of the Gospel; one is a missionary to China. No poverty among any of them. The homestead is now in the hands of the third generation. Those who have died have died in the peace of the Gospel. Oh, is there nothing in a household that remembers God's holy day? Can it be possibly that those who disregard this holy commandment can be prospered for this life, or have any good hope of the life that is to come.

Again, we ought to have in the Sabbath the joy of Christian assemblage. Where are all those people going on the Sabbath? You see them moving up and down the street. Is it a festal day, people might ask? Has there been some public edict commanding the people to come forth? No, they are worshippers of God who are going to their places of religious service. In what delicate scale shall I weigh the joy of Christian convocation? It gives brightness to the eye, and a flush to the cheek, and a pressure to the hand, and a thrill to the heart. You see the aged man tottering along on his staff through the aisle. You see the little child led by the hand of its mother. You look around and rejoice that this is God's day, and this is the communion of saints. "One Lord, one faith, one baptism." Some familiar tune gets all the soul aquiver and aquake with rapture. We plunge into some old hymn, and all our cares and anxieties are bathed off. The glorious Gospel transports us, the Spirit descends, Jesus appears, and we feel the bounding, spreading, electric joy of Christian convocation.

I look upon the Church of God as one vast hosanna. Joy dripping from the baptismal font, joy glowing in the sacramental cup, joy warbling in the anthem, joy beating against the gate of heaven with a hallelujah like the voice of mighty thunderings. Beautiful for situation! The joy of the whole earth is Mount Zion. It is the day and the place where Christ reviews his troops, bringing them out in companies and regiments and battalions, riding along the line, examining the battle-torn flags of past combat, and cheering them on to future victories. Oh, the joy of Christian assemblage!

I remark also, we are to have in this day the joy of eternal Sabbatism. I do not believe it possible for any Christian to spend the Lord's day here without thinking of heaven. There is something in the gathering of people in church on earth to make one think of the rapt assemblage of the skies. There is something in the song of the Christian Church to make one think of the song of the elders before the throne, the harpists and the trumpeters of God accompanying the harmony. The light of a better Sabbath gilds the top of this, and earth and heaven come within speaking distance of each other, the song of triumph waving backward and forward, now tossed up by the Church of earth, now sent back by the Church of heaven.

"Day of all the week the best,
Emblem of eternal rest."

The Christian man stands radiant in its light. His bereft heart rejoices at the thought of a country where there is neither a coffin nor grave; his weary body glows at the idea of a land where there are no burdens to carry, and no exhaustive journeys to take. He eats the grapes of Eshcol. He stands upon the mountain top and looks off upon the promised land. He hears the call of the eternal towers, and the tramp of the numberless multitude with sins forgiven. This is the day which the Lord hath made. Let us rejoice and be glad in it. Oh, ye who have been hunting for Sunday pleasures in the street, and on the river bank, and in the houses of sin, I commend to you this holy day and holy service! I do not invite you to swallow a great bitterness or to carry a heavy yoke; but I invite you to feel in body, mind and soul the thrill of joy which God has handed down in the chalices of the golden Sabbath.

With what revulsion and with what pity we must look out on that large class of persons in our day who would throw discredit upon the Lord's day. There are two things which Christian people ought never to give up: the one is the Bible, the other is the Sabbath. Take away one, and you take both. Take either, and farewell to Christianity in this country, farewell to our civil and religious liberties. When they go, all go. He who has ever spent Sunday in Paris, or Antwerp, or Rome, if he be an intelligent Christian, will pray God that the day will never come when the Sabbath of Continental Europe shall put its foot upon our shores. I had a friend in Syracuse who lived to be 100 years of age. He said to me, in his ninety-ninth year: "I went across the mountains in the early history of this country. Sabbath morning came. We were beyond the reach of civilization. My comrades were all going out for an excursion. I said: 'No, I won't go; it is Sunday.' Why, they laughed. They said: 'We haven't any Sunday here.' 'Oh, yes,' I said, 'you have. I brought it with me over the mountains.'"

There are two or three ways in which we can war against Sabbath-breaking usages in this day; and the first thing is to get our children right upon this subject, and teach them that the Sabbath day is the holiest of all the days, and the best and the gladdest. Unless you teach your child under the paternal roof to keep the Lord's day, there are nine hundred and ninety chances out of a thousand it will never learn to keep the Sabbath. You may think to shirk responsibility in the matter, and send your child to the Sabbath-school and the house of God: that will not relieve the matter. I want to tell you, in the name of Christ, my Maker and my Judge, that your example will be more potential than any instruction they get elsewhere: and if you disregard the Lord's day yourself, or in any wise throw contempt upon it, you are blasting your children with an infinite curse. It is a rough truth, I know, told in a rough way; but it is God's truth, nevertheless. Your child may go on to seventy or eighty years of age, but that child will never get over the awful disadvantage of having had a Sabbath-breaking father or a Sabbath-breaking mother. It is the joy of many of us that we can look back to an early home where God was honored, and when the Sabbath came it was a day of great consecration and joy. We remember the old faces around the table that Sabbath morning. Our hearts melt when we think of those blessed associations, and we may have been off and committed many indiscretions and done many wrong things; but the day will never come when we forget the early home in which God's day was regarded, and father and mother told us to keep holy the Sabbath.

There is another way in which we can war against the Sabbath-breaking usages of the country at this time, and that is by making our houses of worship attractive and the religious services inspiring. I plead not for a gorgeous audience chamber; I plead not for groined rafters or magnificent fresco; but I do plead for comfortable churches, home-like churches—places where the church-going population behave as they ought to. Make the church welcome to all, however poorly clad they may be, or whatever may have been their past history; for I think the Church of God is not so much made for you who could have churches in your own house, but for the vast population of our great cities, who are treading on toward death with no voice of mercy to arrest them. Ah! when the prodigal comes into the church, do not stare at him as though he had no right to come. Give him the best seat you can find for him. Sometimes a man wakes up from his sin, and he says: "I'll go to the house of God." Perhaps he comes from one motive, perhaps from another. He finds the church dark and the Christian people frigid (and there are no people on earth who can be more frigid than Christian people when they try), and the music is dull, and he never comes again. Suppose one of these men enters the church. As he comes in he hears a song which his mother sang when he was a boy he remembers it. He sits down, and some one hands him a book, open at "Jerusalem, my happy home,

Name ever dear to me."

"Yes," he says, "I have heard that many times." He sees cheerful Christian people there, every man's face a psalm of thanksgiving to God. He says: "Do you have this so every Sunday? I have heard that the house of God was a doleful place, and Christians were lugubrious and repelling! I have really enjoyed myself!" The next Sabbath the man is again in the same place. Tears of repentance start down his cheek; he begins to pray; and when the communion table is spread he sits at it, and some one reaches over and says: "I am surprised to find you here. I thought you didn't believe in such things." "Ah!" he says, "I have been captured. I came in one day, and I found you were all so loving and cheerful here that I concluded I would come among you. Where thou goest I will go: thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God. Where thou diest will I die, and there will I be buried."

Ah! you can't drive men out of their sins, but you can coax them out—you can charm them out.

I would to God that we could all come to a higher appreciation of this Sabbath heritage! We can not count the treasures of one Christian Sabbath. It spreads out over us the two wings of the archangel of mercy. Oh, blessed Sabbath! blessed Sabbath! They scoff a great deal about the old Puritanic Sabbaths, and there is a wonderful amount of wit expended upon that subject now—the Sabbaths they used to have in New England. I never lived in New England, but I would rather trust the old Puritanic Sabbath, with all its faults, than this modern Sabbath, which is fast becoming no Sabbath at all. If our modern Sabbatism shall produce as stalwart Christian character as the old New England Puritanic Sabbatism, I shall be satisfied, and I shall be surprised.

Oh, blessed day! blessed day! I should like to die some Sabbath morning when the air is full of church music and the bells are ringing. Leaving my home group with a dying blessing, I should like to look off upon some Christian assemblage chanting the praises of God as I went up to join the one hundred and forty and four thousand and the thousands of thousands standing around the throne of Jesus. Hark! I hear the bell of the old kirk on the hill side of heaven. It is a wedding-bell, for behold the Bridegroom cometh. It is a victor's bell, for we are more than conquerors through Him who hath loved us. It is a Sabbath-bell, for it calls the nations of earth and heaven to everlasting repose.

"Oh when, thou city of my God,
Shall I thy courts ascend?
Where congregations ne'er break up,
And Sabbaths have no end."

Curious Relic of the Revolution.

A curious relic of Revolutionary days is preserved by the Maryland Historical Society. It is a pen and ink drawing, showing Washington on his death bed, surrounded by doctors. The drawing is washed with color, and is humorously spoken of by art critics. Mrs. Washington, in a neat cap, is holding a handkerchief to her face; the recumbent form of Washington is touched with blue and one of the doctors is dressed in green and another has jet-black legs. The perspective is something astonishing. A quaint inscription is appended.

LAND OF WONDERS.

CURIOUS CUSTOMS AND RARE SIGHTS IN SIAM.

Giving the Dead to the Vultures—An Expensive Cremation—Beautiful Temples—Curious Features of the City of Bangkok.

SIAM'S LITTLE QUEEN, AGED 28 YEARS.

Hon. Jacob T. Child, United States Minister to Siam, who recently passed through San Francisco on his way to Bangkok, Siam, in conversation with a Chronicle representative related to him a great many interesting facts about the customs of Siamese and their country. Mr. Child said: "Siam is a land of wonders. Many of the customs seem shocking to us, and yet the people are highly civilized. But the civilization of all Oriental lands differs in so many ways from ours, at first one is likely to look upon any variation from our Western customs as barbaric. One of their most shocking practices is the way they dispose of the bodies of poor people and criminals after death. Every Siamese whose friends pay the cremation fee of about $1 is cremated, but there are many poor people who cannot secure even this small amount. The bodies of those for which no fees are raised are taken to what is called a wat, or temple, for the poor. This is a large structure without a roof, and it is usually built in some great city, as at Bangkok. Tropical trees grow within the walls of the dismal inclosure, and sometimes the trees are fairly black with savage vultures. The body is laid upon the floor, which is merely a rough piece of ground, and within an hour the vultures have torn every particle of flesh from the corpse.

"The wat for the poor at Bangkok is upon a high hill, called 'Gold Hill,' because of the enormous sum of money which was required to get a proper foundation for the temple. The people do not seem to care what becomes of their bodies, if they are poor, and instead of regarding the 'poor wats' as horrible places, I believe they regard them as wise provisions made by the King, and they are thankful for such a favor as having even the wat as a final resting place.

"The cremation ceremonies over royal personages are the most expensive and elaborate forms of doing honor to the dead that the world has ever seen. Last May three children of the King were cremated. The bodies were first embalmed in oils, gums and spices, then placed in a casket and left for six or seven months. In the meantime many high priests called at the palace to offer up prayers for the dead. Provisions were then set out in the open air to propitiate the spirits of evil. Then for months the best bands of music that could be hired were procured to give open-air concerts free. Siamese lacons Japanese jugglers and Chinese actors were employed to give daily entertainments for the amusement of the people. Soda water, ice cream, cake, fruits and more substantial articles of diet were given away for months, to all who called to pay respects to the dead. These ceremonies were all propitiatory to the spirits and to please the departed, who were supposed to hover nigh and partake in the general joy.

"When the time arrived for the cremation of the bodies of the princes, a premian, or palace, was built at enormous expense and gorgeously decorated. The remains were conveyed to the premain on a golden chariot, surrounded by priests, and when the altar was reached the embalmed bodies were carefully put in a golden urn, which was suspended above the high altar. In the altar was built a great furnace. The funeral services then began and lasted for three days. They consisted of readings from the works of Buddha by the high priests, and mourning aloud, by groaning, by women enrobed in white. All the servitors and wives were dressed in white, while the high priests were clothed in brilliant yellow robes. At the end of the third day the King and one of the high priests brought from the palace the sacred fire in a lamp containing palm oil. The fire was then applied to the mass of combustibles in the furnace, and the King retired. The princes, nobles and all the invited guests, who had been supplied with scandal-wood flowers, and sticks a foot long, then advanced slowly to the furnace and threw the offerings into the sacred flames. The fire was kept up until after sunrise of the next day, when the urn was opened. The white ashes and a few selected bones were placed in another golden urn and carefully conveyed to a porcelain vault, which is used as a receptory of the crematory urns of the royal dead of the Kingdom. The remainder of the bones—for some were not taken to the vault—were then taken and blessed by the high priest, after which they were conveyed in a royal barge down the Menam River to where the tides meet and thrown into the water. "The boatmen, sixty in number, chanted a requiem as they plied the oars. They were all dressed in brilliant red. The cost of this cremation alone ran up to $1,000,000, while each invited guest received a valuable present drawn on a number marked on his ticket, somewhat after the fashion of our American lotteries.

"While speaking of temples and ceremonies I may as well say that while I have seen most of the grand architecture of the Old World I never saw anything to compare with a temple in the Menam Chopea River at Bangkok, built to honor the spirits of the water. It is a handsome spiral dome of purest white, with two wings, which are crystal palaces.

The temple standing there in the picturesque mother of waters is a poem in itself. The combination of handsome architecture and striking natural scenery was never surpassed.

"The system of jurisprudence in Siam strikes one as crude. There are not many lawyers, and while they go through the form of a trial and have judges, who receive petty salaries, they seldom give a case the thorough ventilating it would get in an American court. There are some English and German lawyers there who are beginning to make money. Their system of capturing criminals works well, although it strikes one as very unfair to innocent persons. When a criminal escapes his family is at once arrested, put in chains and made to work on the streets or elsewhere with the 'chain gang' until he is apprehended. The criminal usually comes in and surrenders himself rather than have his wife, parents or sister tortured for his misdeed.

"The Chinese are the upper business class there. They keep the stores and conduct the great business interests of Siam. The Siamese lower classes are usually peddlers and boatmen, and they are in a great measure slaves to the Chinese. I believe that the people respect the Chinese and encourage them. I remember that a young Siamese, a relative of the King, who got his education in London, asked permission to start a newspaper. He was allowed to run it, and when he asked the King whether he would be allowed the privilege of freedom of the press, the jolly King replied in a joking manner: 'Yes, but if you say what does not please me I'll bamboo you.' Of course the King did not mean that he would carry out his threat. However, the young man began a vigorous attack upon the Chinese, and he advocated restriction of Chinese immigration. The King notified him to let some one else print the newspaper and to report to his palace, where he would be detailed a position in the Foreign Office.

THE GOLGOTHA OF SIAM.

"But the King and Queen are usually quite liberal with their subjects, and of late years they have been very charitable, recently endowing and giving large sums to well known charities. The Bangkok Times, a semi-weekly newspaper edited and owned by a remarkable Englishman named William Eas, who speaks seventeen languages, has never been molested by the Government. There are a great many English speaking people to patronize his paper, but by far the greater part of the foreign population is German. The city itself is healthful for a place of 600,000 population. We have daily monsoons, and a daily rise of ten feet in the tide water river Menam Chopea. A large part of the city is built on the river, and boating is the chief occupation of the lower classes.

"The Siamese people resemble more closely the better tribes of American Indians than any of the neighboring Oriental nations, although their resemblance is very faint. The full blooded Siamese is copper colored and not usually more than five feet five inches in height. They are alert and active, reasonably muscular, and decidedly a handsome people. Nothing of the Chinese cast of feature is to be found among them. The population of the Empire is about 10,000,000, but this is mere guesswork, for no census has ever been taken.

"The costume of the people is simple and graceful. The climate is warm, not hot like that of Singapore, but about like that of Jacksonville, Fla., with less severe winters. No very heavy clothing is required, and the garments are therefore light and flowing. Men and women dress about alike. They wear the penang or pantaloons, made out of silk, linen or cotton, as the taste or fortune of the wearer may determine. Under the penang they wear a very curious pair of drawers, the legs not being more than a foot long, and in some instances very handsomely embroidered, the Siamese dudes, of whom there are not a few, pay particular attention to this part of their attire. But one upper garment is worn, a sort of jacket made of silk, velvet or linen. The jackets worn by the nobles and richer merchants are handsomely embroidered, great attention being paid to the buttons. Few are so poor as not to be able to afford silver, while among the upper classes gold buttons, very intricately worked in a beautiful filigree pattern, are worn. The nobles use diamonds as buttons, some of them very large and valuable. Around the waist is a gold-embroidered belt, which in the case of the nobles is a belt of flexible gold fastened with a large diamond-studded clasp. This dress is very picturesque and exceedingly becoming. Over the jacket and across the shoulders the women wear a gay scarf. A peculiar and graceful feature of their attire is the jessamine wreath, which they habitually wear on their heads.

TEMPLE ON MENAM RIVER.

"The present Siamese King, Somdech Phra Pharamindr Maha, known as Chulalongkorn, is a handsome man, thirty-two years old. He has absolute power, but avails himself of a council of nobles. He is of a kind disposition, easily approachable, and is very popular among his subjects. I once attended a grand garden party given by him, at which more than 3000 guests were present. There were not more than 500 foreign residents in Bangkok, but the most elaborate preparations were made for their entertainment. English and French cooks were employed, and European wines flowed like water, the champagne especially being received with great favor by the natives. The King moved about among his guests with perfect freedom. His crown is worn only on rare occasions, as it is a very uncomfortable headgear. It is of solid gold, about eighteen inches high, and runs to a point. It is thickly studded with jewels of the largest size and first water, and is of great value. It is so heavy that the monarch is ill at ease while it is upon his head. The King's bedchamber, baths and other apartments are worthy the abode of royalty. His couch is made of rare wood and carved in the most artistic designs, draped with rare lace fringed with gold; a gold-embroidered spread covers the bed; the pillows and bolsters are also hemmed with lace, and above the couch swings a handsome pumba to keep him cool.

"The army is well organized, the officers being trained in a cadet school under charge of Major Walker, an officer of the Bombay militia. Bangkok has a large and efficient police force, which has little work to do, as the people are neither inclined to theft or idleness. They readily adopt European ideas and are particularly cordial to Americans. There is a great field for American trade in Siam, and I hope to see them brought into closer union with us."

The Charleston (S. C.) News and Courier says, editorially: "That few now dispute that the cotton crop of 1888-9 will be the largest ever known.

"Che Mah," the Chinese dwarf the smallest lilliputian on earth aged fifty years, is so small that you can cover him with an ordinary plug hat.

Huntsville will have three candidates in the race for State offices next year, Hon. William Richardson for Governor, W. L. Clay, for Secretary of State and Oscar Hundley for Attorney General.

Think of it. Three criminal assaults upon respectable white ladies of Alabama within a week's time. One at Pratt Mines, another at Bessemer and still another at Jemison. Will these outrages never stop.

Twenty years ago there were ninety-two lightning rod factories in the United States. To-day there are but three, and those doing a trifling business. The lightning rod was the biggest humbug of the nineteenth century.—Chicago Herald.

The intellect of Webster, Calhoun and Clay would do them no good in these days it they were candidates in Republican States for the United States Senate. Their bank accounts would fall short of the demands made upon them. It is the almighty dollar and not God-given intellect that is fast securing control of the upper house of the American Congress. Two Republicans elected in the last few days are possessors of several millions of dollars.—Ex

It does not seem to have occurred to the newspapers that if the same abuse had been bestowed on juries who fall short of their duties as is dealt out to mobs who exceed theirs a great step would have been taken in the reform of our lawyers who resort to trickery to defeat the ends of justice and juries who corruptly or ignorantly or carelessly connive at these tricks are as legitimate subjects of criticism and denunciation as an indignant public which grows tired of such abuses and deals out justice after its own mad fashion. It juries realized that they would be held to strick public accountability for a failure to do their duty they would be more careful and give less cause for complaint.—Fort Payne Journal.

It is both a condition and a theory which confronts the people of this state. The condition is that of the wheezing, shackly, worm-eaten, dry rotted, run down and antiquated old machine which we call law; and the theory is that the reasonable sensible, progressive people of this state are asked to venerate and respect the antediluvian bundle of quirks, quibbles, contradictions and inconsistencies. Sensible people cannot respect a corrupt mass of incongruity and falsity, nor can they be made to do so. The way to make the law respected is to make it worthy of respect. No one can uphold that which denies men their rights and fails to protect their lives and liberties. If illustrations are needed they can be furnished from the dockets of every county in the state. Come to this county and we can show from its records that men have bought land from their neighbors refused to pay, been sued and admitting the debt and its justice, have been enabled by the law to keep in possession of the land and enjoy its revenues year after year while the true owner is deprived of his own property by that law which pretends to give every citizen his rights. From the same records we can show the commission of every crime know to the decalogue and the perpetrators have escaped entirely, or with so light a penalty that it was equivalent to none. Now people are asked to stand still and see the farce played out to the end and be satisfied with that end whatever it may be. A free and self-respecting people cannot remain quiet under the sense of such wrongs as are daily committed under color of law. They will grow restive and break bounds once in a while. The fool may propose with a little brief authority to stem the tide but the wise man will try to remove the cause and let the trouble die for want of provocation to keep it alive and fan it occasionally into flames that sweep everything before them.—Fort Payne Journal.

OVER THE COUNTY.

Neighborhood News Gathered by Our Correspondents.

Dry Valley Locals.

There has been so much rain recently that little has been done in the way of farming.

Prof. J. M. Corderie has a flourishing school at Providence.

Pleasant Grove Academy is largely attended. The roll gradually increases.

Mrs. M. West has been quite ill. She is much better now.

Last week death visited the family of Mr. E. F. Seals and took from him his infant daughter, Oleva. He and family have the sympathy of the entire community.

Miss Maggie Garner is visiting friends in Jefferson county.

Miss Annie Moore has returned home leaving some of the young men with sad looking faces.

Mr. John Garner, of Clanton, gave us a short visit last week.

Justice courts are now in order

Many good wishes for the VIEW.

CYRUS.

Maplesville Dots.

Mr. Tom Foshee is paying tribute to and receiving Tribune from Rome.

Mr. Joe Ellis, of Texas, has been visiting relatives here.

Mr. Hugh Foshee and wife visited friends and relatives here the past week.

We are trying to keep it a secret for fear our northern friends would blame a cotton planter's wife here for picking cotton by having a colored maid carry a comfortable chair to the field, and then have the maid pull the cotton stalks and hand them to her when she leisurely picks the cotton.

To date we have had the mildest winter ever known in this latitude. The festive "skeeter" is abroad, seeking in mid-winter whom he may devour. The candle moth and butter-flies are sporting these mild days. Last Sunday was our coldest wave during the winter.

Miss Fannie Foshee left this morning for Tuskegee.

REVOLG.

Stanton Notes.

We are glad to state that a large sale of land has been made by Gregory-Coe Lumber Co. to a Chicago Immigration Society.

Any one having lands to sell in Chilton county, will do well to come and fill out a contract with J. A. Harwood, of Stanton.

Miss Mamie Harwood arrived home last night much to the delight of her friends.

Mr. J. H. Prichard the champion deer and bear hunter has just gotten home from a ten days hunt in the swamps of south Alabama, he says we may look for a car load of bear meat soon.

Mrs. P. P. Thomas paid a flying visit to her brother Mr. Wright of this place.

We learn that several town lots in Stanton changed hands in the last few days,

We regret to state that Dr. Little lost a very valuable horse last night.

Our farming friends are looking very blue on account of the constant rains.

The new Baptist Parsonage presents a beautiful appearance in its new dress of paint.

Dr. W. B. Crumpton preached an able sermon on Missions last Sunday.

The Sunbeam Society of this place is doing a good work for the Missionary cause.

Jemison Locals.

Jemison has been on a boom in the matrimonial line of late. Recently there have been married Rev. D. L. Lindsey and Miss Gena Cottingham, of Six Mile; Mr. Geo. Skaggs and and Miss Lizzie Killingsworth; Mr. John Bean and Miss Lizzie Sperlock of Ashby; and Mr. James Sims and Miss Kizzie Horsely.

Rumor says there are more yet to come.

We notice that your Stanton correspondent in last week's VIEW boasts that Stanton has the largest school in the county, numbering if we remember correctly, 85. We beg leave to inform said correspondent that he is mistaken. Prof. J. L. Ruffin, at this place, has on his roll book 91 students. In addition to this we have another school in Jemison taught by Mr. Harwood who has on has roll book 50 students, This makes 141 students in our two schools.

Jemison, with all due deference for her sister towns claims to be the metropolis of the county.

Rev A. E. Burns has accepted a call from the Jemison Baptist church to preach the first and third Sundays in each month.

Mr. J. L. Rasberry is building a new residence in north Jemison.

Mr. John Honeycutt is building a new residence in west Jemison.

We are glad to state that Mr. J. J. Honeycutt is up again from a spell of continued fever.

Mr. Frank Crocheron and family have removed from Strasburg to Jemison. We welcome them.

We regret to give up Mr. Fletcher Green who removed from Jemison to Strasburg last week to take a position at Mr. Maull's mill.

The post office and store of Mr. W. E. Lowery and the store of Mess. Harris & McCrary were burglarized last Saturday night. We understand Mr. Lowery's loss is $25.00 or $30.00 while that of Harris & McCrary is about $50.00. Detectives are on trail of the thief and we hope he will be caught and punished to the extent of the law.

X, Y. Z.

The thieves have been caught and jailed. They were two negroes.—VIEW.

Read This For a Change.

Perhaps some wives would like to cut out the following and paste it in their husbands hat:

1. Always come home good-tempered, leaving business cares behind, and do not vent annoyances met with at office on your wife and family.

2 Make yourself agreeable to your wife and friends and do not sit glum all evening, looking utterly bored.

3 Be lenient to your wife's fault and do not expect perfection until you have first become perfect yourself.

4. Be punctual at meals. Remember a cook cannot keep dinner waiting without its being spoiled. Do not expect each servant to have two pairs of hands.

5 Do not expect your wife to keep accounts unless you take the trouble to keep your own correctly.

6 Dress as neatly as your means will allow, and be careful not to get your best trousers wet, as baggy knees are a thing no woman can respect.

7 Be as kind and attentive to your wife as you were before your marriage and remember she has got no pipe to go to for comfort.

8 When your liver is out of order remember food cannot be palatable; therefore do not grumble and turn over what is on your plate that your wife has provided for you as if it were not fit for a dog to eat.

9 If you have a wife who does keep house in order, is not constantly at war with the servants, is not extravagant, has meals regularly and well served and does her best to please, let her see you appreciate her, otherwise she will cease to try and make your home comfortable and in due course your trouble at home will be infinitely worse than any you may have at the office.—Philadelphia Press.

About Stopping a Paper.

After you get mad and stop your paper, says the Keowee Courier, just poke your finger in water, pull it out and look for the hole. Then you will know how sadly you are missed. A man who thinks a paper cannot thrive without his support ought to go off and stay awhile. When he comes back half of his friends will not know he was gone and the other half will not care a cent while the world at large kept no account of his movements. You will find things that you cannot endorse in every paper. Even the Bible is rather plain and hits some hard licks. If you were to get mad and burn your Bible, the hundreds of presses would still go on printing it, and when you stop your paper and call the editor names, the paper will still be published and what is more—you will read it on the sly.

The newspaper is ubiquitous. It is everywhere in every man's home. The man who has no newspaper has no home. He may have a place to stay and so do the Digger Indians. But there can be no home without a newspaper There can be no general diffusion of knowledge without it. It is life and light in the world. It moves the world in all its enterprises, in all its great philanthropies and all its majesty of wealth and power.—Press and Printer.

Do You Want a Silk Dress?

Wood, Thornburg & Co., of London, England, have recently purchased several hundred thousand yards of full width, black gross-grain dress silks of the most excellent quality at the late auction sales in England, and in order to advertise themselves with the consumers of this country will for the next fifteen (15) days, ship by express to consumers only in single dress patterns, these goods at (50c) fifty cents per yard. This silk cost 87½ cents per yard to manufacturers and would retail for $1.50 per yard in New York City. Send cash or postal note with order. No goods sent C. O. D. Address C. H. Warner, N. W. LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Send us the news from your neighborhood.

Tax Assessor Rollins publishes his notice of last round this week.

Rev. D. L. Lindsay and wife, of Jemison, visited Clanton Saturday.

The VIEW subscription list is on the increase. Now is the time to subscribe.

Judge L. M. Lane, of Greenville, visited his brother's family near town Sunday.

Dr. Burkhead will preach at the Methodist church to morrow morning and at night.

If you want money call on Jones & Bentley. They will be in Clanton at least twice a month.

There is some opposition in the county to the new court house bill now pending in the Legislature.

Work has begun on the Episcopal church building and will be pushed through to completion.

It will be cheaper for you to borrow money from Jones & Bentley than to pay 25 or 50 per cent. for goods, &c., on time.

Mr. F. J. Davis and family, of Montgomery, are visiting relatives here and Mr. Davis thinks of returning to Clanton to live.

The recording of mortgages we learn is on the increase at the Probate office. This does not speak well for our farmers.

Quarterly conference of the M. E. Church was held with the Verbena Church on last Saturday and Sunday.

Messrs. B. H. Chesnutt, A. J. Scott, and W. A. Midleton attended quarterly conference at Verbena Saturday.

New Goods.

I have now in stock a fresh supply of clothing at very low prices and also a full line of shoes guaranteed as represented and the prices are not to be beat in this market. A new feature in my grocery department is an open tierce of the best leaf Lard. Send your cans or buckets and get pure lard, no cotton seed oil and tallow.

W. L. SAMPEY.

Mr. H. W. Herbert, of Jemison, was in Clanton last week.

Mr. F. J. Davis, of Montgomery, visited friends in Clanton last week.

We are sorry to say that Mr. W. R. Robinson has been quite ill for a week.

Mr. H. M. Colvin, of Montgomery, has been visiting relatives in Clanton.

A good farming mule for sale cheap for cash or on time. Terms reasonable. A. J. MARLAR.

Mr. W. H. Phillips and Mrs. Chas. Phillips made a business trip to Clanton the past week.

An effort will be made to have the Legislature pass a bill to incorporate the town of Clanton.

Col. R. M. Williamson has purchased the Sarter store house near the post office and will occupy it as a law office.

Lucien Day has gone to Marion to enter the Marion Military Institute. We predict for him a high standard and good report.

J. L. Smith, the man who was struck in the head by John Morgan last week at Chandler's mill is improving and will soon recover.

We hear of a spelling match at Clanton High School in which the girls proved better spellers than the boys.

Don't swallow the slime which the scandal monger gives you. The lowest breed of the animal kind is the character defamer.

If you want money quick and cheap, bring your land deeds, and meet E. V. Jones and A. D. Bentley February 8 and 9 at Clanton, Ala. 2t

A statement of the Commercial Fire Insurance Co. of Montgomery, Ala., shows a surplus to policy holders now on hand of $146,578.69.

We advertised a horse for sale in last issue. Papers were placed in the postoffice at 8 o'clock a. m., and horse was sold before 9 a. m. So much for advertising.

A very excellent communication suggesting an amendment to the Lawson election bill is unavoidably crowded out of this issue but will appear next week.

We are requested to announce that the day for Episcopal services has been changed to the second Sunday. Mr. Smith will be here the 10th of February to fill appointment.

We hear that many of the farmers in the Mulberry neighborhood who are Alliance members claim that they were "badly bitten" in the purchase of guano through the county agency last year and they propose to buy no guano this year. Make your fertilizers at home. It is better and cheaper than buying mean guano.

A bill is before the Legislature to prohibit the sale of liquor in Alabama except in incorporated towns. Now comes a move to incorporate the town of Clanton. We would have it known to all that if this is an effort to resume the sale of whiskey in Clanton, the VIEW and a great many of our best citizens are opposed to the incorporation movement.

O, What a Cough.

Will you heed the warning. The signal perhaps of the sure approach of that more terrible disease, Consumption Ask yourselves if you can afford, for the sake of saving 50 cents, to run the risk and do nothing for it. We know from experience that Shiloh's Cure will cure your cough. It never fails. This explains why more than a million bottles were sold the past year. It relieves croup and Whooping Cough at once. Mothers do not be without it. For lame back, side or chest, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by A. E. Bivings, Clanton.

We have a speedy and positive cure for Catarrh, Diptheria, Canker Mouth, in Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. A Nasal Injector free with each bottle. Use it if you desire health and sweet breath. Price 50 cents. Sold by A. E. Bivings, Clanton, Ala.

Dyspepsia and Lver Complaint.

Is it not worth the small price of 75 cents to free yourself of every symptom of these distressing complaints, if you think so call at our store and get a bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. Every bottle has a printed guarantee on it, use accordingly, and if it does you no good, it will cost you nothing. Sold by A. E. Bivings, Clanton.

Read This All!

I have purchased the drug business of W. H. Phillips in Clanton, and will continue the business at the same stand.

I shall also keep a stock of extra quality family groceries. I shall handle none but the very best articles, and my customers can rely upon getting pure, fresh goods.

sep. 20. A. E. BIVINGS.

John Morgan who had a difficulty with J. L. Smith at Chandler's Mill last week, returned to Clanton this week and surendered himself to the authorities. He was given a hearing on a writ of habeas corpus and bound over to the circuit court in the sum of $400. He gave bond and was released.

Laws Relating to Newspaper Subscriptions.

The following is the decision of the United States Supreme Court:

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscription.
2. If subscribers order the discontinuance of their periodicals the publishers may continue to send them until all arrearages are paid.
3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their periodicals from the office to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they have settled their dues and ordered them discontinued.
4. If subscribers move to other places without notifying the publishers, and the papers are sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

The courts have decided that refusing to take periodicals from the office or removing and leaving them uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

It Has Never Failed.

Botanic Blood Balm, (B. B. B.) has cured hundred of cases of Scrofula, Eczema and other contagious blood diseases, after other treatment had been tried and failed. You do yourself and family great injustice unless you give this excellent remedy a trial. Send to Blood Balm Co., Atlanta, Ga., for illustrated "Book of Wonders" filled with letters from persons cured by B. B. B.

MR. M. J. ROSSMAN, Greensboro, Ga., writes: "I have a lady friend who has been entirely cured SCROFULA of an ugly scrofulous breaking out of the skin, and the use of two bottles of B. B. B. effected an entire cure. I know of several cases of blood diseases cured speedily by the use of B. B. B.

E. G. TINSLEY writes: My mother and sister used B. B. B. for scrofula and ulcerated sore throat SORE THROAT and received more benefit from its use than all other remedies they ever used.

A. H. NICHOLS, 110 Gray St., Atlanta, Ga., writes: "My wife for several years has been suffering with what physicians term Eczema, affecting her whole body, limbs and scalp. It appeared that her whole skin would shed off in scales about once a week, leaving the surface red and tender, and sometimes cracked open. Her general health failed, and for a while it was thought she would die, as several doctors and numerous patent medicines failed to give ECZEMA any relief. My brother-in-law, Mr. J. B. Cummings, was selling the B. B. B and insisted that I should try it on my wife. I did so, and to our utter astonishment she commenced improving at once, and three bottles, costing only $3, effected an entire cure. It is wonderfully quick in action."

D. M. MCRAE, Waynesboro, Miss., writes: "My BOILS sister was aflicted with boils which sadly impaired her health, and she lost flesh and strength each day. One bottle of B. B. B. acted like magic and produced a complete cure." (9)

PISO'S CURE FOR
TWENTY-FIVE CENTS
Piso's Cure for Consumption is also the best
Cough Medicine.
If you have a Cough without disease of the Lungs, a few doses are all you need. But if you neglect this easy means of safety, the slight Cough may become a serious matter, and several bottles will be required.
CONSUMPTION
PISO'S REMEDY FOR CATARRH gives immediate relief. Catarrhal virus is soon expelled from the system, and the diseased action of the mucous membrane is replaced by healthy secretions.
The dose is small. One package contains a sufficient quantity for a long treatment.
CATARRH
A Cold in the Head is relieved by an application of Piso's remedy for Catarrh. The comfort to be got from it in this way is worth many times its cost.

WOMAN'S WORLD.

PLEASANT LITERATURE FOR FEMININE READERS.

Social Distinctions.

In almost all nations of the world—even in Oriental countries—women of the lower class do rough or menial work, and are paid money for it, but they are looked down upon accordingly. In the half-mediæval Portugese colony of Fayal the poorest families try to keep one daughter from working in the orange-groves; she lives in-doors, goes shrouded in a deep capote, and never ventures into the streets without her mother, and if she earns a living by embroidery at home the world does not know it. Even the higher forms of industry among ourselves were long held to be socially ignoble. Bookkeeping, clerkship, typewriting, are still liable to this criticism if pursued by women; and when Lady Amberley, the daughter-in-law of Earl Russell, was in this country, and desired to meet some women physicians, a lady in the best society of Philadelphia brought on herself some sharp criticism by inviting two of this then proscribed class to meet her ladyship at a large entertainment. It must always be remembered, however, that even in case of men it has taken long for common sense to prevail against this old-time hierarchy of employments. A century ago Dr. Samuel Johnson described actors and musicians as "amusing vagabonds," and defined an English merchant as "a new species of gentleman." To this day it is considered in England a matter of social discredit to be "in trade," as many American women have found to their cost after marrying English merchants. One of this class cannot yet be presented at court. This seems to us absurd in a country which owes so much of its greatness to its commerce, and which has been called "a nation of shop-keepers;" but it is no more absurd than the distinction still prevailing in one of our larger cities, where a wholesale merchant, on however small a scale, is admitted to what is called "society," and a retail dealer, though he may handle millions, is excluded.—Argonaut.

Dress of a Japanese Woman.

The dress of a Japanese woman of the upper classes begins with the yumoji, a rectangular piece of stuff wrapped around the loins and reaching to the knee, like the towel of a shampooer. Over this comes a beautiful garment called the jaban, a robe like a perfectly simple bath-gown with square sleeves, fitting closely to the body, and generally made of delicate and pale colored silk crape. In winter an additional garment called the shitagi goes over this—all the garments of a Japanese woman after the first petticoat are identical in shape and fit into one another like a nest of boxes. In summer over the jiban comes the outer dress, called for either man or woman the kimono. This may be made of pretty cotton stuffs or cotton crape for the household wear, or of silk crape or silk, or the richest embroidery and brocade for full dress and ceremonial occasions. It is tied at the waist with a long sash of soft silk crape, called the hoso-obi, wound around several times. Round the wearer's waist, above this, is worn, that most striking feature of Japanese female costume, the obi. This is a piece of the thickest silk or brocade about twelve feet long and thirty inches wide, and may cost anywhere from $5 to $500. It is the pride of the Japanese woman, and a magnificent obi is the Japanese equivalent for the conventional diamonds which a lover gives his sweetheart with us. The tying of an obi is a very difficult task, and reveals the taste and cultivation of the wearer almost as much as the throw of the himation did in Greece. Indeed, a woman can hardly tie her obi properly without assistance. The stuff is folded lengthwise, giving it a breadth of about fifteen inches, then wound very tightly twice round the waist, with the folded edge downward, thus making a deep and handy pocket in the fold. One end is measured to the left knee and left loose, then the long loose end behind is turned round at a right angle and left fall into an enormous bow, then the bottom of this bow is gathered up into a smaller inner bow, the short loose end is turned back upon the end of this, and a flat elastic silk band, called the obi-dome, is stretched over this to hold both ends and both bows in place, brought round to the front, and the two ends hooked together in a little gold ornament of some kind. This description is doubtless unintelligible, but the process is difficult enough to follow, to say nothing of describing it. The costume is completed by a pair of tabi, white boots with a separate place for the great toe, like Dr. Jaeger's digitated stockings, the sole made of thick woven cotton and the upper part of white silk. Sometimes a chemisette, or han-yeri, of delicately worked or embroidered silk is worn under the kimono to show a pretty edge round the open neck and to keep the chest warmer as well.—Washington Star.

Fashion Notes.

Triple capes are a feature on long redingotes worn as capes.

There is a decided tendency to lengthen the skirts of walking dresses.

Gray in the daintiest possible tints, is said to be again the rage abroad, both in fine wools and silks.

Golden olive, the mushroom tints and fawn brown are popular colors just now with well dressed ladies.

The close fitting Princess surtout, made of rough surfaced English tweeds, is a favorite traveling cloak for brides.

The choicest tailor-made dresses are of smooth Australian broadcloth, trimmed with two shades of soutache in applique.

Old fashioned fringes are steadily gaining in popular favor, also the spiked fringes with open passementerie heading.

The bodices of tulle or gauze dresses are almost invariably made of velvet, and draped with the more transparent material.

For evening wear there are shown fillets of ribbon to put on the hair in Greek-fashion, and this has become a very popular addition to the revival of the pseudo-classic styles of the directoire.

Blue or gray and white flannel sailor suits are excellent schools dresses for girls, even of thirteen or fourteen years, being neat and serviceable—qualities more desirable at school than costliness.

The orange buds and blossoms are not the only flowers chosen for bride's wear this season. The small white bridal roses, tea roses, white lilacs, lilies of the valley, and other white flowers are given them for garniture.

Lace boas are being worn. A Parisian fancy with fur boas is to attach them at the back of the bonnet with which they are worn, bringing them over the left shoulder, around the throat, and over the same shoulder again.

Muffs have not yet made their appearance on the streets, but the dealers in furs are showing them in two sizes; one very large and long, to be worn with directoire costumes, and the other extremely small, for ordinary wear.

Wasps Battle with Their Enemies.

"A story which appeared a few days ago concerning a fight between a wasp and a spider reminded me of a similar battle which I witnessed a short time ago. I was walking across a field when I saw a spider's web on the grass and noticed that a wasp had just been caught in its meshes. The spider was on the watch, and showed unmistakable delight as its victim buzzed and struggled in the vain endeavor to set itself free. The ugly creature sat at the bottom of the web, holding the ropes that were to bind its prey. When the wasp ceased to struggle the spider approached. But the winged insect had not given up. As it saw its captor it showed fight and exerted itself to the utmost to get near enough to use its sting. The spider retreated a little, but apparently only for the purpose of tightening the strings that held the prisoner.

"A moment later the wasp was turned over and bound more firmly than ever. It seemed as if the spider took advantage of each movement of its adversary to wind another rope about its legs and tie them yet more firmly. The skill displayed was a revelation to me—I had no idea insects knew so much. Finally, when the wasp was so bound that it could neither kick nor sting, the spider jumped upon it, killed it almost instantly by biting, and then proceeded to feast upon its carcass.

"At another time I witnessed a fierce struggle between a large hornet and a colony of wasps which had built a nest in the window of an old shop. The hornet crawled up the glass toward the nest, and when the wasps saw him they formed in battle array to defend their home. The intruder moved onward, when a wasp darted from the ranks to sting him. But the courageous little fellow hardly seemed to touch his enemy before falling dead upon the window sill. At this the wasps retreated in a body to the other side of the nest to lay plans for battle, sending out a spy now and then to reconnoitre. As the hornet came closer all suddenly rushed toward him in a body. A large wasp stepped out of the ranks, flew over the hornet and alighted behind him. The invader halted, and the little army also stood still, watching him. The unequal forces eyed each other for some time, when suddenly it appeared as if the large wasp gave a signal, and his companions rushed forward, making quick work of the enemy. Several wasps fell dead before the hornet was conquered, and the survivors did not venture to approach their prostrated foe until he had been dead several minutes."

The above tales were told to a Dispatch reporter by an intelligent Pittsburg mechanic, for whom the study of insect life seems to have a peculiar fascination.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Be Cautious With Carbolic Acid.

The number of cases of poisoning by carbolic acid is notably on the increase, and this naturally provokes inquiry as to the cause and also to the possibility of control. This substance is very rarely taken with suicidal intent, although the ease with which it may be procured, and the relatively low price, might afford some temptation were it not for the peculiarly painful results produced by it. Mostly the poisoning is purely accidental. From its color the acid is liable to be mistaken for beer, and this mistake is favored by the carelessness ordinarily displayed in storing it in bottles of any and every kind. Carbolic acid is now so largely used that it is difficult to suggest any measure likely to prevent these frequent accidents. Careful labeling is, of course, one essential, but it would be still better to discard the employment of old wine or beer bottles in favor of vessels of any peculiar form which would direct attention to the injurious properties of their contents. The value of carbolic acid as an antiseptic is sufficiently well known to render any restrictions upon its sale undesirable; but something must certainly be done speedily to check the frequency of these fatal accidents.—Lancet.

Anarchist Schools for Children.

The executive committee of the newly-organized local anarchist society of Chicago, known as the "Arbeiter Bund," has issued a circular calling a large mass meeting for the purpose of devising means by which to found anarchist schools throughout the city. The circular has been freely distributed. It invites all anarchists to investigate the society's Sunday-schools, of which there are six in Chicago, each situated in the rear or in the basement of saloons.

In one of the schools in the back room of a saloon on Lincoln avenue, there were 120 children, ranging from five to fourteen years of age. They were listening intently to a teacher's description of Johann Most. The teacher told the children that Spies and Parsons had been murdered by the capitalists, and referred to the dead anarchists as martyrs.—Commercial Advertiser.

AGRICULTURAL.

TOPICS OF INTEREST RELATIVE TO FARM AND GARDEN.

Use of Leaves.

The importance of leaves to the horticulturist is almost incalculable. It is self-evident that without abundance of healthful foliage we need expect no bountiful crop of fruit. But it is of leaves in a matured and decaying state that I write, as comparatively few gardeners are aware of their value. Without entering into a dissertation on the scientific aspect of the question, it may confidently be asserted that there is a small amount of nutrition in their elements, but for lightening up soils, and rendering them porous, leaves in the form of mould are highly beneficial.

Decayed leaves form the basis of an excellent potting soil, and, with old sods, suit the requirements of almost all forms of plant life. Some genera are especially partial to this compost, as, for instance, all the ericaceæ, as well as ferns, lycopodiums, etc. Perhaps their value as a mulch has been overestimated on account of their rapid decomposition, which soon becomes a sour mass, but for a single season they answer an excellent purpose, especially for all manner of native wild flowers. All fallen leaves about our grounds should be raked up and composted with soil for future use.—New York Tribune.

A Rat-Proof Cellar.

A New York farmer gives the following advice in regard to keeping rats out of cellars. He says: "The foundation of the cellar wall should be made of broken stone, firmly rammed into a trench one foot wider than the wall on the outside, and the top of the broken stone should be covered with a layer of cement. This forms a sort of shelf around the building which rats never work around, and the vermin may run around the building but will never find a way in. It also serves as a drain for the foundation." My plan of keeping rats and moles out of a cellar has been to make a hollow wall in this way just inside of the foundation. The moles or rats burrowing under the foundation rise and get into this trap and will go all round the building until they go out where they came in. The hollow will never be passed and the cellar will never be entered by the vermin. At least my cellar, made twelve years ago, has never yet had a rat or mole in it, and not more than two or three mice, which came in at the open door at times, but were caught immediately, having no place to hide in.

A farmhouse may be kept free from mice by flooring over every floor with hemlock boards close up to the studding, or nailing the studding upon this close floor. Every story is thus cut off from another and the space between every two studs is impassable every way. The attic floor is laid in the same way before the rafters are put up. A house thus built is mouse and fire proof, for fire cannot spread, but will be confined to the room in which it begins and is easily extinguished.—New York Times.

Warm Water for Dairy Cows.

A test was made during the winter of 1887–88 at the experiment station of the Agricultural College of Michigan for the purpose of determining how milk and butter products would be affected by warming the water drunk by dairy cows. The Holstein cow Mac was chosen for the test, which began January 10, 1888, and lasted eight weeks. For the first month the cow was fed bran, ensilage and corn stalks. Half the amount of bran and ensilage fed daily was given in the morning and the remainder at night. The stalks were fed at noon. The second month Mac was fed ensilage, bran, cornmeal and ground oats mixed; the daily ration was divided into two feeds, while hay was fed at noon. The first week and every alternate week during the test, water warmed to sixty degrees F. was given the cow to drink. On the second week and alternating weeks cold water was given her.

A study of the table shows that the milk and butter product was but little affected by the temperature of the water drunk. In the last two weeks of the test the balance is in favor of cold water. The amount of butter made the last week on cold water was one pound seven ounces more than the preceding week when warm water was given. This holds true in no other case, there being a slight balance in favor of warm water during the entire period. The week when more butter was produced with the use of cold water sixteen and one-half pounds less of milk was given than during the previous week when warm water was drunk.

In the total results there is a balance in favor of warm water, there having been forty-five and a half pounds more of milk produced during the entire period when warm water was given than during the time cold water was drunk. The balance in favor of warm water in butter was ten ounces, which indicates a greater relative gain in milk than in butter. Mac drunk 585 pounds more of warm water than of cold. The results are not as pronounced in favor of warm water as was expected. The difference is so slight as scarcely to pay for warming the water.—New York World.

Farm and Garden Notes.

A neglected farm proves that the owner is not up with the times.

Better to have a surplus of hay than not enough. You cannot foretell how severe the winter may be.

Do not suddenly increase the feed of horses because of suddenly increased labor, but rather lessen it at first.

Swedish turnips, parsnips, and carrots are all excellent for fattening hogs. They will be relished better cooked than raw.

A plant must be well fed if the best results are expected. Poor soil will produce poor quantity and quality of plant growth.

To be successful as a gardener, you must do more than raise large crops—you must gather up the fragments and turn them to account.

The farmer should take active interest in the condition of the roads of his town. Their excellence increases the value of the farm.

Equal parts of clover hay and straw, either wheat or oats, together with a small quantity of bran, forms a food equal to the best timothy hay and at a cheaper rate.

Make pets of your colts. Make friends of your horses. Treat them kindly, and you will not be troubled with unsafe and unruly horses. It is but the humane way to treat them anyway.

Good hickory ashes are said to be excellent for expelling worms from the bowels of young horses. Mix them with them with the feed, a couple of tablespoonfuls once or twice a week.

HOUSEHOLD MATTERS.

Johnny Cake.

Take a cup of corn meal,
And the meal should be yellow,
Add a cup of wheat flour,
For to make the corn mellow;
Of sugar a cup, white or brown at your pleasure,
The color is nothing—the pint is the measure;
And now comes a troublesome thing to indite,
For the rhyme and the reason they trouble me quite.
For after the sugar, the flour and the meal,
Comes a cup of sour cream, but unless you should steal
From your neighbors, I fear you will never be able
This item to put upon your cook's table;
For "sure and indeed," in all towns I remember,
Sour cream is as scarce as June bugs in December,
So here an alternative nicely contrived
Is suggested your mind to relieve,
And showing how you without stealing at all,
The ground that seems lost may retrieve.
Instead of sour cream take one cup of milk,
Sweet milk, what a sweet phrase to utter;
And to make it cream-like put, into the cup,
Just three tablespoonfuls of butter;
Cream of tartar one teaspoonful rules dietetic,
How nearly I wrote it down tartar emetic,
And so the alternative makes itself out.
Of soda the half of a teaspoonful add,
Or else your poor corn cake will go to the bad;
Two eggs must be broken without being beat;
Then of salt a teaspoonful your work will complete,
Twenty minutes of baking are needful to bring
To the point of perfection this awful good thing.

—Mrs. J. Webster, in Sunshine.

A Use for Old Carpets.

A good way has been found to utilize old carpets. Cut them into strips three-quarters of an inch in width, sew them together and send to a carpet weaver. Have him weave this material in breadths as long as you wish your rug to be. Tell him to leave five inches in the warp at each end for fringe. Sew the breadths together; knot the fringe and the result will be a very pretty rug for the living-room.—Housewife.

Cheap Cuts of Meat.

Many of the so-called cheap cuts of meat are preferable; for instance, the shoulder of mutton is much more delicate than the leg, and, as most persons know, the price is low. The English, who of all people know what good mutton is, always give the leg to the household and save the shoulder for guests or first table. However, meat is not the only thing you must learn to choose. Every housewife does not know that a delicious stew may be made of round steak, which costs a mere trifle compared with the choicest sirloin and porterhouse steaks. First pound the round steak, then cut it into small pieces and proceed as with any meat stew.

How to Polish Steel.

Small steel and iron articles in the house are very difficult to keep bright. They easily become oxidized and always want continual polishing. One way, and a very simple one, is to pickle them. First of all plunge the articles into a boiling solution of caustic soda or potash for a few minutes. This removes all the greasy matter on them. Then place them in a weak pickle of sulphuric acid, mixing about half a pound of acid to a gallon of water. Let them remain in this pickle for about half an hour. This will loosen the scale. Then rinse the articles and afterward dip them, by means of a perforated stoneware basket, into a strong solution of nitric acid. Only let them remain in this acid for an instant and the black oxide will be immediately removed. After removing the basket from the nitric acid plunge it into cold water. The articles can then be coppered, silvered or gilded very easily or left bright.—Mail and Express.

Recipes.

ESCALOPED TOMATOES.—One half can or one pint of tomatoes, a little pepper, salt, butter and bread crumbs. Bake one half hour in a baking dish; sprinkle bread crumbs on top.

COTTAGE SOUFFLE.—One egg beaten separately; one scant cupful of sugar; two tablespoonfuls of melted butter; one heaping cupful of flour, one of water; one tablespoonful of baking powder; bake one half hour.

SAUCE.—Rub one tablespoonful of butter with two of pulverized sugar (in a bowl); place the bowl in a pan of boiling water, stirring in two tablespoonfuls of cherries and juice or any canned fruit you have opened that is tart.

POTATO BALLS.—One pint of cold mashed potatoes, one egg beaten light; roll the potatoes in small round balls, dip in egg, then bread crumbs; fry in a deep kettle of hot lard; have ready brown paper to absorb grease; serve in a napkin.

ROAST CHICKEN.—Singe the chicken and split down the back; wipe dry, dredge well with salt and pepper; cover with softened butter and dredge both sides with fine dry bread crumbs; place in a pan inside down; bake in a hot oven forty minutes; serve with celery leaves or parsley.

CELERY SOUP.—One pint of milk and a little over a pint of boiling water; rub together one tablespoonful of butter and two of flour; stir into boiling milk until smooth; add one teaspoonful of salt and one of celery extract; use one half a bunch of celery, boiled (leaves and all) in the water given in the receipt; boil one hour.

FRIED APPLES AND BACON.—Core and slice round, without paring, some tart, well flavored apples. Cut into thin slices some middlings of excellent bacon or pork, and fry in their own fat almost to crispness. Take out the meat and keep hot while you fry the apples in the fat left in the pan; add a little sugar to taste. Drain and lay upon the slices of meat.

CHEESE STRAWS.—Grate three tablespoonfuls of any kind of cheese; add three tablespoonfuls of flour, a little red pepper and salt; add to dry ingredients one tablespoonful of melted butter, one of water, and the yolk of one egg. Roll thin as for cookies, cut in strips five inches long and one half inch wide. Bake fifteen minutes. Serve on plate and fringed doily. Build the straws up like a log cabin. They are delicious with salad.

A Russian Horse Census.

The report of the haras of the Russian Empire states that there are 22,000,000 horses in that country, not including Finland and the Caucasus. In the six State haras there were last year 2249 horses (81 stallions, 755 mares, and 1607 foals), and 470 horses were sold from them for 79,407 rubles. There are sixty-two hippodromes in Russia, and the prizes run for amount to 700,000 rubles, of which the State contributed 70,000 rubles. There were seventy-seven horse exhibitions during the year, and of 11,828 exhibited 2042 were sold. The total expenses of the haras amounted to $360,000.

Furious Fight with a Wounded Buck.

"Talking about lively times with game," said Andrew McKenna, an Adirondacks hunter to a New York Times correspondent, "I think the liveliest time I have had in five years was with a buck that I brought down up on the Oswegatchie in the month of October. When you want a real lively time just tackle a wounded buck. When you do that you have got a job on hand that throws a hugging match between a man and a bear clean into the shade. If I were to choose between fighting a wounded and ugly buck or a black bear I would take the bear every time. I have got several big scars on my body that are the result of wounds inflicted by that buck in the early part of last month, and I will never take any chances on a scrimmage of that kind again. The way it all came about was that a party of fellows from down East were up in the woods after deer and I was along to help them get one. We had a dog that was true blue. When you got him started on a runway, and he struck the scent he was good for all day if the deer's wind held out. Well, we got our party properly scattered through the woods for a hunt one day, and I took the dog out to start the game. Deer were very plenty up there this year, and we soon had one up. After I had let the dog loose I put myself in a good place, and waited for a shot. The rest of the fellows in the party were rather green at deer hunting, and none of them managed to get a shot at the game we were after. I had watched the runway for four long hours before I was rewarded with a shot; then I got it, and it was a fine one. The woods where I stood were rather open and the timber was large, so I could see for a long distance. The deer was about thirty rods away when he first came in sight, and I saw at once that he was one of the finest bucks I had ever laid eyes on. He would have passed within one hundred yards of me if I had let him, but when he came up I fired, intending to hit him back of the fore shoulder. The shot brought him down, but did not kill him as I supposed it had. When I went up to the animal he gave me a big surprise by staggering to his feet and attacking me savagely.

"I was taken so suddenly that I could do nothing to defend myself. In less time than it takes to tell it the animal had given me two or three good cuts with his sharp hoofs and was in a fair way to do me up permanently. Of course the only thing I could do was to grab the brute by the horns and try to keep my feet. I could hear the dog coming, and I made up my mind that if I held my own for a short time I would have his help. Those were business moments you can bet, for that buck was doing his best to down me, and I had to do some lively dodging as he crowded me around among the trees. The dog came up and helped me out of that scrape in good shape. If he had not put in an appearance as he did, I hardly know what the result would have been. When he came up he fastened his teeth in the buck's throat. This gave me a chance to get my gun in hand and put in a shot that settled the buck for good. My first shot struck him in the shoulder and did not reach a vital part. The rest of the party were so tickled over the capture of the animal that they wanted to buy me a new pair of pants, and to tell the truth about it, I needed them when I got into camp that night."

Hints for the Eyes.

Next to sunlight the incandescent light gives the best illumination for reading, and all notions of the injurious effect on the eyes of the electric light is erroneous.

The vast majority of people who wear glasses can see well without them. They use them to avoid a constant strain on the eyes. The act of focalization is a muscular one and uses up nervous energy.

The oversighted eye, in which the focus comes behind the retina, has to perform this muscular act continually. The results are headaches, irritability and nausea. The only remedy in such cases is to wear glasses.

For the eyes in a healthy state there is but one safe wash—pure cold water. When the eyelids are inflamed the best lotion is a weak solution of salt and water. Never apply poultices to the eyes or use "eyewaters" without the advice of a physician.

Greatest Good to the Greatest Number.

He that maketh two blades of grass to grow where one grew before, is a public benefactor, and the greatest benefactor is he who does the greatest good to the greatest number, with the least ostentation. An instance in view is the good done suffering humanity by Botanic Blood Balm, better known as B.B.B. or the three B's. It can truly be said of this incomparable remedy that it has relieved more physical suffering, and with a less number of bottles, than any five other medicines, much more widely advertised for the same class of diseases. Caheen Declares and Pledges himself to sell Dry Goods and Millinery cheaper than other houses can buy them. Our business has been a grand success, and we truly appreciate the large patronage bestowed upon us. We shall always endeavor to merit a continuance of popular favor by offering such inducements and unexcelled bargains to the people of Birmingham and vicinity, that the crowds of buyers will seek our double store (filled with desirable Dry Goods) in preference to any other. We are not selfish in our dealings, for when our New York buyer ships us our car loads of Dry Goods, bought direct from manufacturers, at the lowest cash prices, we do not ask our customers a double profit, but at once divide the jobbers' profit with our patrons. A practice at Caheen's: QUICK SALES AND SMALL PROFITS.

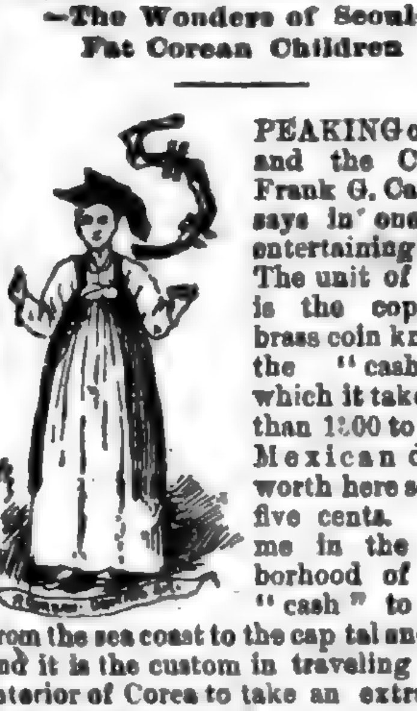
SIGHTS IN COREA.

STRANGE SCENES IN A FAR AWAY COUNTRY.

An Extra Horse Required to Carry Your "Cash"—Corean Women —The Wonders of Seoul— Fat Corean Children



SPEAKING of Corea and the Coreans, Frank G. Carpenter says in one of his entertaining letters: The unit of money is the copper or brass coin known as the "cash," of which it takes more than 1200 to make a Mexican dollar worth here seventy-five cents. It cost me in the neighborhood of 50,000 "cash" to travel from the sea coast to the capital and back, and it is the custom in traveling in the interior of Corea to take an extra pack horse along to carry your money. The people outside of the three sea ports know nothing of silver and gold, and one of the common sights near Fusan, which is the only southern port of the country, is a coolie laden down with a bushel or so of these copper coins, which he carries upon his back. Each coin has a square hole in it, and the common way of putting them up is in strands of hundreds hung on straw cords of about the thickness of a clothes line. Ten dollars is a load for a man, and $30 would break down a mule if the journey was long.

Considering the poverty of Corea one might suppose that the foreigners here had a hard life. This is far from the case. They have comfortable homes at Seoul, and their provisions, which come in large part from China, are plenty and good. They have a pleasant society among themselves, play tennis, have concerts, and as far as I can hear are the most free from social bickerings and strife of any of the foreign colonies of the Western Pacific. Their lives are reasonably safe, except in such outbreaks as that of last June, when some of the anti foreign fanatics among the natives started the story that the foreign devils were feasting on Corean babies. Then for a time it looks squally and the troops had to be called from one of our men-of-war which usually lies in the harbor at Chemulpo. The foreigners keep indoors, the King sends out a proclamation, the Coreans quiet down and it is again all quiet on the river which flows by Seoul.

Speaking of the Corean baby-eating by the missionaries, the King in this case sent out a proclamation asking any one who had known of babies being stolen by foreigners to come forth and make his charge good. He called attention to the fact that foreigners were civilized and asked the question as to how civilized people could eat children. "But," the proclamation went on, "if children are being stolen, let the information be filed before the proper authorities and the offenders will be arrested, and if found guilty by evidence will be punished. A reward of 40,000 cash will be paid to the informant for each person so found guilty, but in case the information is not supported by the evidence the informant shall be fined in a like sum for bringing the charge." This proclamation was signed with the royal seal and was pasted on the gates and on the great bell in the centre of the city. The selling of children is, however, not uncommon in Corea, and I am told that many are exported to China. Good, fat, well disposed babies bring from $5 to to $20 apiece, and a father has a perfect right to sell his children. Babies are sometimes bought for adoption. Slavery exists to some extent in Corea, but it is more a serfdom than slavery.

Corean society is divided into three classes, the King, the nobles and the common people. The latter live in thatched huts and they are the poorest of the poor. The nobles or yang ban are the curse of the country. They own all the lands and live by squeezing the people who till them for them. The better of them dress in gorgeous silks. They never go on the street without having a lot of retainers about them.

There is now one big American firm in Corea, and here at Seoul the foreign colony, which is made up of three or four scores of bright men and women, is almost altogether American. The business firm is at Chemulpo, the port of the capital. Its members are Morse and Townsend, two bright young Bostonians, who have spent years in Japan and Corea and who possess the confidence of the native merchants. Corea does a large part of its buying through its merchant guild and in this way large sales are made at one time. Mr. Townsend tells me he has been shipping cotton here direct from Massachusetts, and that the people who have been accustomed to the poorer and cheaper English goods like our product much better. The average Corean spends all he makes on his back and his stomach, and the people according to their incomes, spend as much upon clothes as any people in the world. Business with them has to be done largely upon the credit system, and they think nothing of forgetting to meet their payments at the time they are due. Interest is here at the rate of from 2 to 5 per cent. a month, and the country is too poor to have banks.

Corean stores are of the size of a large drygoods box. They are arranged around narrow courts with a little platform two feet wide running around their outside and forming a sort of shelf two feet high, going entirely around the court. On to this shelf or porch each store opens, and the merchant sits outside his store and not in it. He has a curtain in front of his goods and he brings out piece by piece as you ask for it. He keeps his hat on while he trades and smokes during the whole transaction. Sitting on his heels, he does not apparently care whether you buy or not, and I am told that he considers that a large order should bring a much higher comparative price than a smaller one. Mr. Townsend wanted, not long ago, to export some small Corean mats to the United States. He asked a merchant the price, and he was told they would be ten cents apiece, and was asked how many he wanted. He replied that he would take 50,000, whereupon the Corean, taking his long pipe from his mouth in astonishment, said: "Oh, if you want so many I shall have to charge you twenty cents apiece! It will be impossible to fill your order at less than twenty cents." And so it is with all business. The more you want the more it costs, and a large order scares the merchant by the thought that you are taking all his stock and he may have trouble in buying more. The coin used in shopping is, of course, the cash, and in buying you always take a servant with you to carry your money-bag for you.

A MAID OF THE QUEEN.

None of the shops of Seoul are, however, large, and the trade of this capital of 200,000 people is made up of what the Yankees would call a whittling business. The loudest-mouthed and most enterprising persons in the whole city seem to be the venders of roasted chestnuts. They are little boys with their hair parted in the middle like girls and braided in one tightly-woven cord down the back. Their stock usually consists of about a quart of chestnuts, and they have a little pan of coals over which they roast them while you wait. Another thriving trade seems to be the cook-shops, where all sorts of Corean dainties, from raw fish to toasted liver, are served up on little round tables a foot high and about fifteen inches in diameter. These have four or five little legs, and if you order a dinner the boy servant of the cook-shop will lift up the table containing the dishes, balance it on his head and walk off with it, with the legs of the table hanging down about his neck. Such dishes as I saw were not at all appetizing, and everything was seasoned highly with red peppers.

The roofs of the country huts are now covered with red peppers, and I see them sold by the bushel in the markets near the wide street of the bell. The Coreans may use them as appetizers. They have, it seems, an ever-present craving for food, and make their stomachs their god. To eat, to smoke, to sleep and to squat is, to all outward appearances, the chief employments of the people, and to be fat in Corea is a sign of wealth. A big stomach is an honor, and the very small children in the country districts are in nine cases out of ten pot-bellied. The skin of their abdomens is stretched like a drum-head, and a leading authority on Corean life says that mothers, in order to increase the size of the stomachs of their children, stuff them day after day with rice, padding them on the stomach to press down the contents and make room for more.

Corean ladies have a place in the back of the house to themselves. Fashion in dress does not change with them and their lives are almost perfect desolation. Those you see on the street are the common women, or servants, and these have green gowns over their heads and their dresses, which, I am told, are cut after the same style as those of the ladies, and consist of a short skirt with a waistband about a foot wide. Over this comes a short jacket with sleeves. The only jewelry I see is in the hairpins, which are in some cases twelve inches long and as big around as your little finger. They are made of silver and jade and sometimes have knobs on them as big as the hand of a two-year-old baby. The servants of the palace wear a peck of false hair on their heads coiled in thick rolls. The Corean ladies are very glad to see foreign ladies, but few of them are able to return the calls. One of them told an American friend of mine that she found it very hard to lead such a secluded life and she longed for the customs of our country. All Corean ladies smoke. They have their polite ways of bowing and their code of etiquette, and not a few of them rule their husbands. The laws of divorce are almost altogether on the husband's side, and widows among the better class do not marry again.

TYPICAL COREAN WOMEN.

The only women who have the right to be seen by men outside their own families are the dancing girls, and these are much like the Geishas of Japan. They are called in at feasts and there are many famous dancers who are employed especially to appear before the King. These girls wear fine dresses of silk, and they whiten their skins with powder and paint. They sing in a sort of a chant, and their dance is a series of posturing, like that of the same class of girls in Japan.

To-morrow we leave the capital and travel by inchairs, each borne by eight collies, to the seacoast at Chemulpo, where we take the Japanese steamer for China.

I feel that I have had but a taste of Corea, but that taste has shown me that there is here a rich meal for the man whose soul longs for things unknown and unwritten.

Little Clara's Grievance.

Oh, how sad it is to know
Little girls must always grow—
Grow in size and grow in years!
Thinking of it brings the tears.
But though I may cry and fret,
Every day I bigger get;
Every day I'm older too.
And there's nothing I could do
That would make me stop a-growing,

Or would keep the years from going.
Now I'm five; soon I'll be six;
Here's a poor child in a fix!
After six comes seven, then
Follow eight and nine and ten.
How I wish that I could stay
As I am this very day—
Always have my hair in curl,
Always be mamma's wee girl!
But I can't; I've got to grow.
Oh, dear me! why is it so?
Very soon I must be six;
Here's a poor child in a fix!

Meadows of Rest.

I remember the beautiful meadows
And their sweet streams purling clear,
With flowers besprent, where my young days were spent,
Where the birds their nurslings rear.
I was sheltered then in the dear home nest,
Where my feet turned oft to the meadows
of rest.

I remember a grave in those meadows,
Where slumbered a laughing-eyed boy;
Death found him at play, he lured him away,
And with him went half our joy.
We molded the turf that his feet had pressed,
And kept his grave green in the meadows
of rest.

I remember a silver-haired father,
Who walked by the river wave
To watch the reeds grow, or the sweet waters flow,
Or to muse by that little grave.
He has passed long ago to the place he loved best,
To the infinite peace of God's meadows of rest.

I wonder if green are those meadows,
If purling and clear are the streams,
If the moon shines as bright, if the stars give such light
As they did in my youth's happy dreams.
O, angel of destiny, heed my request:
Give me back, give me back my dear meadows of rest.

A NUMBER ONE.

BY PATIENCE STAPLETON.

On a weather-beaten board, supported by a creaking iron rod, hung the sign, "Soles Saved Here," which Breckinridge thought so exceedingly funny that it never ceased to attract custom and comment. It had been there ten years, since Jonathan Mender came into the little town in the Rockies and bought out the shoe-repairing business of Caleb Binn.

Mender on this June afternoon sat in the door of his shop, repairing a small and extremely shabby shoe. He was a short, stubby man, with twinkling eyes behind spectacles, and a shock of gray hair standing straight up from his forehead.

Down the trail from Red Mountain, as the afternoon shadows grew long, and night came creeping under the evergreens, galloped a lean broncho at a headlong gait. His rider, a big-bearded miner, glanced around under his bushy eye-brows, and now and then gave a grunt of satisfaction.

"The old place don't see you on more, Bill," he muttered, as the broncho panted up a short incline, "fur you've struck it rich, as a certified check fur 'way up in the thousands kin testify."

He galloped into Breckinridge, left his broncho at the hotel and went along to the shoe shop.

"Same old sign," he smiled. "Ev'nin', Mender."

"Hullo, Bill; thought you was dead. Ain't seen you these three years. Same butes, too, I maid. Wal, I allus done good work."

"You did; but just clap a patch on this one whilst I wait, fur I ain't a-goin' to torture myself ef I hev struck it rich. My feet is liable to swell in the keers. I'll leave ye an order, too, Mender, for butes is good enuff with me. No lace shoes like a jude."

"Who you roped in on the mine, Bill?"

"No one: they'll double what they give me—three hundred thousand—but I ain't no hog; I know when I've got enough."

"Few does," muttered Mender, waxing his thread.

The miner looked around the shop; then his eye fell on that shabby little shoe.

"Beats all what sawed off feet wimmen hes, though I ain't mentioning Norweiguns."

"The Lord made 'em so."

"Prob'ly. An' this now," (turning the shoe over in his big hand) "is a gal's, not a growed woman's!"

"All of twenty-eight, quite a [illegible] about that, too. Three years ago I was settin' here between day and dark, when my door busts open an' in [illegible] what I took to be a gal, but afterward see was a little mite of a growed woman, with bright, bird-like eyes and curly hair. 'Them miners is a follerin' me,' she cries, drops inter thet cheer, an' faints dead away."

"Gosh, this very cheer!" echoed Bill, in an awe-stricken tone.

"Same—set right there. I opens the door, 'B'ys,' I says, 'I've got the drop on ye, an' it's a shame to act like thet, an'—git,' which they done, an' I went back an' give her water, an' she come to an' jest kitched my han' up an' kissed it."

"Lord!" cried the miner.

"An' it wasn't over-clean, fur mendin' ain't over-pertikler wurk. Wal, she hadn't no frens, an' was come here to settle, an' bein' weak an' hystericky, I took her home to Sister Jane. 'Pears to me,' she says to Jane, 'all the troubles of my life is bin caused by men.'"

"They be cunery," said the miner, sympathetically.

"We kep' her a week, an' then she went to wurk sewin', an' insisted on payin' her board, and made Jane the trimmest gowns an' caps, and me a dressin'-gown like I was a female. I wears it to please her, but I allus feels I looks like one of them old patriarks in't. We never arsked her hist'ry, but Jane sed she was bruised from blows, an' I see she trained her pretty curls over a scarce healed scar on her forehead. I calc'lated she was one of them thoroughbreds what will stan' enny amount of drivin', but it's a smash an' a runaway if you hit 'em."

"There's some men as ought to be shot on sight," muttered the miner. "An' thet shoe was hern?"

"Yeah, an' I've got to keer fur her so much thet I've allus been glad I was here 'stid er Caleb; he wa'n't never neighborly. When I come here I says, 'I'll give ye fifteen dollars fur the place.' Says he, 'Take it for fourteen an' a harf.' 'Why?' said I. 'Did you,' says he, 'ever know a man wot become a sewer fur gab? Wal, look at me. Ev'ry crank as has breath enuff ter git up the bank comes in an' talks to me; ev'ry bummer who kin walk staggers in an' vents his rum-soaked remarks on me; ev'ry sunbunnited or shawl-headed female woman comes to tell me her troubles with the old man or the neighbors.' 'Wal,' I says, 'it's comp'ny?' 'Yah, I hate 'em,' growls he. 'Know where I'm going, not you. You're the kind as tells about a gal you loved, named Sairy, wot died fifty year ago. Wal, I'm goin' to be a sheep-herder, where I wunt see one of human kind fur months on a stretch, an' where I kin go bare-footed the year 'round.' So he goes an' I stays."

"When I was in Arizony," said the miner, laying the shoe down, with a sigh, "I boarded to the house of a little woman as could a-wore them shoes. The vittles was awful. Some of the biscuits would a took a blast to open 'em, 'an the pies might a soled them butes, but she wa'n't but a young thing, 'an her husband was the cancriest."

"They allus hes thet name in them cases," suggested Mender, slyly.

"This wa'n't no cases. He never keered, only that the wurk was done, but I did,"—the miner's face saddened—"an' I sold out as good a teaming business as you ever see."

"'Count o' popler sent'ment, I spose?"

"Now, there's queer things in a man's life; an' ef I'd stayed I'd a killed her husband, an' that would a bin no way to git her affection, an' wouldn't a looked fair. Them's my morals. She was his wife an' a good woman. I sold out the biz at a dead loss" (with a sigh) "an' I just wisht her time o' day an' run off like a coward. I starved up here fur ten years, an' I wan't pleased with myself neither when a feller from Fairplay told me he heared she an' him was awful poor, an' she was the wust abused woman he ever see."

It was quite dark in the little shop now, and Mender lit his lamp, leaning low to his bench to see in the light. A [illegible]

"An' me, with all my money, can't make that poor little soul comferble," he sighed.

There was a sound of quick footsteps outside, something like the clatter of slippers down at the heel, then the latch clicked.

"Ain't done, Nelly," called the old man. "I'll wait and finish 'em; they're purty far gone."

There was no answer, only a sort of gasp and a smothered exclamation from the miner, who brought his chair down with a jerk. The old man looked at them.

"I calc'late you two is 'quainted," he grinned.

Bill had forgotten his one stocking foot, even his stern morality, and she, that little, thin creature, with her white, worn face, her sad, tearless eyes, was looking at him so wistfully, so yearningly that he must have known she had not needed his telling her that he cared for her before he ran away. A quick suspicion flashed through his mind. She loved him, and had come to Colorado to find him these three years back. Still his lips had to utter the name in his heart so long.

"Nelly!" he cried, with a sob; and she—she put out her hands like a sleep-walker; then, with a low cry, she ran to him and hid her face on his breast. Still he did not touch her as she clung to him, weeping passionately.

"It aren't right," he muttered, hoarsely. "I sed never should you be as you is now, till it were. You an' me has seen camps, an' knows what wrong love is."

She only clung closer, such a child-like thing, in her shabby black gown, with her short little curls, and her tiny hand clutching his arm.

"I tell you," he cried, passionately, "once my arms meet around you, I shall never let you go."

"Wal, you needn't," said Mender, dryly; but there were tears in his old eyes. "You needn't, Bill—she's a wilder."

"It's only since this mornin'" he continued, as the big arms inclosed the tiny figure, "but it's proper, I calc'late. She'd run away from him, but he tracked her; six weeks ago he come in when we was eatin' supper, an' Jane hove the teapot at him. Vi'lence wa'n't no use; he took Nelly an' her savin's, an' was jest a-goin' to leave town arter losin' all she hed, an' draggin' her along, when the altitude kitched him. I calc'late this place is too nigh heaven fur a creepin' cuss like thet to crawl. I was a mendin' that shoe for his wilder to wear to the funeral."

"I knowed no woman but her could wear 'em," cried Bill, holding the shoe reverently, "an' it shall be set in gold outer my mine."

"It's a mile too big," she said, very blushing and shy, "an' is so horrid."

"Never heered a woman but sed them very words," grinned Mender, beaming on them. "Now, Bill, yourn's done, an' lemme stick a patch on that one, Nelly, fur you don't wanter be a creekin' round in new ones to the funeral, like you was too glad to git him planted."

The next afternoon, when the twilight shadows were falling, Jonathan Mender stood in his shop door and watched the train creep miles above on the mountain on its way to Denver.

"Purty rapid this western country," he soliloquized, jingling the coins in his pocket. "We never miss no time; but there ain't many small wimmen like Nelly as kin bury one husband in the forenoon an' git married to the second in the arternoon, an' I guess Bill don't know the mate to that little shoe he's got stowed away is over on my shelf as a mementommy that little number one—the smallest fur wimmen-kind as ever I see."—[Once a Week.

PEARLS OF THOUGHT.

Now is always the very best time if we make it so.

The best friend is the one who gives the best advice.

The ups and downs of life are better than being down all the time.

The highway of virtue is so little frequented that collisions are rare.

To be really yourself you must be different from those around you.

A little knowledge wisely used is better than all knowledge disused.

Excessive labor is wrong, but judicious labor is the safety valve of life.

Man may growl, grumble and fight, but it has no effect upon natural right.

Falsehood can make the best spurt but truth can do the steadiest trotting.

Instead of complaining of the thorns among the roses, we should be thankful there are roses among the thorns.

The use we make of our fortune determines its sufficiency. A little is enough if used wisely, too much if expended foolishly.

We find it hard to get and to keep any private property in thought. Other people are all the time saying the same things we are hoarding to say when we get ready.

If thy friends be of better quality than thyself thou mayest be sure of two things: the first, that they will be more careful to keep thy counsel, because they have more to lose than thou hast; the second, they will esteem thee for thyself, and not for that which thou dost possess.

Individuality of the Horse.

One thing curious and interesting about the horse is its individuality. This is a characteristic common to all animals, undoubtedly to a greater or less degree, but surpassingly so, we think, in the case of a horse. How this characteristic varies in horses is well known by anyone who has ever intelligently drawn a rein over a good roadster. The individuality of horses varies as much as that of men. Every one has a different mental as well as physical make-up. Some horses seem to possess brains, to have some sense, are quick to understand and obey the least sign, motion or word of their master. Some men drive and use horses for years and yet never realize that they know anything, or that there is any more difference between them than there is between so many barrels or saw logs. Other men who handle horses a great deal, who buy and sell frequently and study much their different characteristics, will tell you how wonderful horses are, how much they will sometimes teach even their drivers. Between a nervous, sensitive, intelligent horse and his considerate owner how large a union of fellowship and sympathy exists. In the stable, on the road, if overtaken by an accident, the cool, sensible man is sure to have a quick sympathy from his faithful horse. He trusts his master as his master trusts him. If the master is quiet the horse will be equally so, knowing that everything is safe. If the master blusters or becomes anxious or exhibits fear, the horse knows it at once and becomes restive likewise. Oh, that men only knew that horses know much more than they give them credit for, and that they would use them more humanely than they do now. Horses are not brutes—they are noble, intelligent, sensible creatures, the most useful animal servant which Divine goodness has given to man.—[New England Farmer.

Two years ago Congress in pursuance of its constitutional power to regulate commerce between the States, enacted the inter-state commerce law. In that measure are incorporated all of the legislative restrictions on the conduct of the railroad business which have ever received intelligent sanction. Nevertheless, the inter-state commission has encountered great difficulty in carrying them into effect, not because of any opposition from the railroads, but because it has been demonstrated that to rigidly enforce them will work hardship not so much to the roads as to their patrons. This fact of itself should be a warning to State Legislatures to go slow and legislate cautiously on this subject. Every bill introduced for the purpose of regulating State commerce, threatens to affect and still further complicate the conduct of inter-state commerce as regulated by the congressional statute. The motto now should be to "Watch closely and do little." When the vexed questions of railroad traffic which have elicited so much discussion, and have received no satisfactory solution, shall be better understood after the practical experience of the national commission, it will be time enough for definite and positive legislation. Just now agitation is likely to do more harm than good.

OVER THE COUNTY.

Neighborhood News Gathered by Our Correspondents.

Stanton Notes.

The Rev. Mr. Gornell, of the Selma M. E. Church, preached two able sermons to large and appreciative congregations here Sunday.

The Stanton Literary Society intend having some tableaux and charades soon for the benefit of the church.

Gardening has commenced and we hope soon to have home made vegetables on our tables.

The Stanton Institute must admit that Bro. Ruffin beats us three in numbers, but how about the grades? We have 10 Latin scholars, 3 in geometry, 3 in physics, 1 in surveying and civil engineering, 10 in music, 4 in art, and nearly the whole school in English grammar, arithmetic and geography.

We regret to state that the mumps is raging in our midst. Mrs. Crum, a most worthy lady of Dixie, is quite sick with it.

The Sunbeam Society, composed of the children of Stanton, made their quarterly report yesterday and found that they had made $9,55. Well done little ones! Your efforts should bring the blush of shame to the cheeks of many grown up children.

Our little town is now frequently visited by drummers who save our merchants many a trip to the large cities.

J. A. Harwood, the Stanton Real Est. Agent has several tracks of land for sale. Purchasers are requested to see and examine them.

From Cooper's.

As your readers have not heard from us through your columns in a good while, I am disposed to break the silence and let them know that we are not all dead though this scribe has been very sick.

We regret Harrison's election but we will not secede as long as Mrs. Cleveland and Mrs. Harrison remain so friendly.

The weather has been so nice that farmers are making good headway, sowing oats, fencing, cleaning, repairing and improving generally.

The new bridge between Cooper's and Verbena is quite a convenience. It is a good one. Our estimable neighbor, Mr. K. Wells knows just how to build them.

Rev. W. W. Jones and his niece, Mrs. Ida Estes, have been visiting relatives in this vicinity.

The tax payers here have been discussing the subject of levying a tax to build a courthouse, and we are unanimously opposed to it. Chilton county has just been taxed to build a jail, and the courthouse is a staunch frame, having been recently enlarged, and rendered commodious at a heavy expense to the people, and taking into consideration the hardness of the times, we regard such a tax as onerous, indeed uncalled for.

HARDY JONES.

ED. CHILTON VIEW:—I am glad to note that the subject of amending the existing election laws is receiving some attention by the present Legislature. Your correspondent is of the opinion that the adoption of some measure like that contemplated in the Lawson bill, now pending (the Australian plan I believe it is called), would be a capital good thing and one step at least in the direction of preserving the purity of the ballot box.

Your correspondent begs leave to suggest another amendment, which he humbly believes would be a good long strive toward a very desirable end—that of vesting the elective franchise in the resident citizens and taxpayers where it ought to be. The amendment your correspondent would make is this: repeal existing registration laws, and instead of requiring electors to register before voting in any given precinct let the elector on application to the managers of the election for a ticket present his tax receipt thereby showing that he paid tax in that precinct, or county at least, the preceeding year, provided said elector is not over forty-five years old. If elector is too old to pay poll tax, and owns no taxable property instead of a tax receipt, let him present to the manager of the election on application for a ticket, affidavit, signed by himself, sworn to before and attested by a justice of the precinct, certifying that said elector has been a resident of the county for twelve months immediately preceeding the election, that he is over forty-five years of age, and that he owns no property subject to the State of Ala. This certificate will establish two facts: first, that the elector is a citizen; second, that he is not shirking his duty to the state and county, by avoiding the payment of taxes, but that he is lawfully exempt. It might be a good idea to attach receipt or certificate to the ballot and put it away with the same. Then, in case of a contest each ballot will carry with it a test of its own validity.

The enactment of laws like the above would be productive of good results in several respects. 1. It would place the burden and responsibility of electing officers to administer the affairs of the county, state, and general governments upon the shoulders of those who contribute to their support, the only safe place on which they can rest. As a rule tax payers are patriotic, law-abiding, liberty-loving men. Such men are interested in governmental affairs, because they have something invested in them. They study their country's needs and try to cast their ballots for the common weal. 2. It would inculcate in the minds of young men, the flower and hope of the country, the principle that it is a privilege and honor to be exercised, and not an onerous burden to be shunned, to contribute to the support of the government. Taxes are levied to support the government and enable it to protect its citizens. Associate the duty of tax paying with the privilege of voting and this, the true principle of our republic is at once and ineradicably fixed in the minds of the young citizen and he comes forward cheerfully and pays his part and prizes his receipt as a certificate of the fact that he has attained to the dignity of free citizenship and and that he himself has become a part and parcel of the government, a contributor to her support, a participant in her administration and a recipient of her blessings. Young men so schooled in three fundamental principles naturally become democrats and patriots, lovers of a government of the people, by the people and for the people. 3. It would destroy the germs of anarchy and socialism. Such citizens would never become anarchists. On the other hand they would realize that their liberty and political rights depend on the perpetuity of our republican institutions, and they would stake their lives and their sacred honor on the defense of her principles. Traitors, anarchists, and political malcontents are those who have no interest and give nothing to the support of, and hence are inimical to, the genius of our government. Failing to appreciate her benefits, they denounce her restraints as tyranical and her burdens as oppressive yet they claim her privileges and no thanks to her. Herein is their moral corruption, for no honest man is willing to receive a benefit without rendering in return a just equivalent, at least--an honest man can not receive a favor without a deep sense of gratitude and a desire to reciprocate.

4. It would render illegal voting next to impossible. Your correspondent happens to be in possession of the fact, that nearly if not quite all of the questionable voting done in this county at least, is done by a loafing, tramping hireling class who are floating around from pillow to post, and living from hand to mouth who would not turn on their heels to perpetuate our republican institutions. Their lives are failures and they hate those who succeed and hate the law for protecting men in prosperity. Such men will tell you to your face that the laws are such that no man can succeed in business and acquire property by honest means. Their perverted consciences and the devil lead them to believe that true righteousness consists in opposing those who prosper They hate their employers, of course, and go to the polls and vote because it affords them grim pleasure "to git to vote agin Boss." The measure I suggest would disfranchise such voters, and thus eliminate a dangerous element from the body politic.

The above is not half that could be written but as I am playing an entirely new role, I will desist. "What I have written, I have written." If any thing worthy of its room in your valuable columns, publish; if not consign to the waste basket, and rest assured, that in pursuing either course you will not disturb the equilibrium of Yours truly,

A CHILTON CO. DEMOCRAT.

Jemison, Ala., Jan. 1889.

Fate of the Bill.

The bill to repeal the act creating a court of county revenue for Chilton county was taken up Saturday in the House, and we quote from the proceedings as follows:

The consideration of the House bill 317 was resumed and Mr. Dykes, of Chilton, took the floor in support of the bill.

Mr. Porter wanted to know if there were any race tracks in it. (Laughter.)

Mr. Dykes said "no."

Mr. Hundley wanted to know if there were any moccasin tracks in it?

Mr. Dykes—"may be you mean Dummy Krab tracks?" (Tremendous laughter and applause.)

Mr. White of Dallas said the house had had enough foolishness. He did not want to stick his mouth into another man's business but he had letters in his pocket from leading Democrats of Chilton asking him to look after the measure and ask the Democrats of the Legislature to vote against it. He himself would vote against it and he hoped the other Democratic members would do likewise.

The bill was then supported by Mr. Adams of Bibb who said he believed the bill was the best thing for the people of Chilton.

The bill was lost, ayes 29, noes 39.

On Monday an effort was made to have the vote reconsidered with the following ressult:

Mr. Dark moved to reconsider the vote by which H. B. 317, repealing the act in relation to the county commissioners of Chilton county was defeated in the House on Saturday evening.

Mr. White of Dallas, said he disliked making a party measure out of it, but nothing favorable had yet been heard from the Democrats of Chilton in regard to the bill. The measure was introduced by a man hostile to the Democratic party and who bragged of such hostility on the floor of the House. He moved to table the motion to reconsider the vote defeating the bill. Carried.

The Montgomery Dispatch says: Col. Finley White, of Dallas, squelched Mr. Dykes, the Republican member from Chilton, in the latter's attempt to have the Chilton county bill reconsidered by the house yesterday.

Read Dr. Talmage's excellent sermons which appear in the VIEW every week.

A child of Mr. A. C. Oats died on Wednesday last and was buried at the Clanton cemetery on Thursday.

Our reporter was in error in regard to the sale of the Sartor store house. The sale has not yet been effected.

Mr. Ed. Marsh, of this county died at the insane hospital at Tuskaloosa on Wednesday last. His remains were brought to Clanton for interment.

It will be cheaper for you to borrow money from Jones & Bentley than to pay 25 or 50 per cent for goods, &c., on time.

The men who run over wagons on the side walk in front of the blacksmith shops are complaining of hurts to their knees and shins hence this notice.

The VIEW has several hundred copies of Dr. Kendall's famous book on the horse and his diseases. Any farmer desiring it will be presented with a copy on calling at the office.

A friend at Jumbo writes that things are going on well in his neighborhood and the people are as merry as "forty cats in a wallet." We presume from this the wild-cat stills are running.

A Swindler Exposed.

Our readers may have noticed advertisements over the signature of C. H. Warner, St. Paul, Minn., in The VIEW of last week. The advertisements offered silk goods and plushes at very low prices and directed us to send bill to him and he would remit by check for the advertising. Upon receiving the proposition we at once wrote to a prominent attorney and relative in St. Paul to inquire as to the financial standing of Warner, and we have received two copies of the St. Paul daily Pioneer Press, which contain the following information as to the naughty knave:

The "C. H. Warner" who rented Room 25 in the Union block on the 19th of the present month, and put on foot a gigantic swindling scheme which was fully exposed in the Pioneer Press Sunday morning was arrested yesterday afternoon and is locked up at the county jail. He proves to be Arthur Pomeroy, of Minneapolis, recently located in Chicago and Springfield, Mo. Although well connected and related to some of the most honorable business men in the Twin Cities, Pomeroy has a bad record and is set down as a bad man by those who have had occasion to know him well. The scheme he attempted to work in St. Paul was a boldfaced robbery of country people and when questioned yesterday he made so many contradictory statements and told such an improbable story as to practically convict himself.

The Press further says that Pomeroy was arrested before he could realize anything from his scheme and that monies sent him for goods would be returned to the sender by the postmaster at St. Paul. We trust that none of our readers were "taken in" by the swindler as we were.

Shameful Neglect.

Several months since Shelby and Chilton counties built a bridge across Waxahatchie Creek near T. W. Shrader's. As soon as the bridge was completed, the Chilton authorities cut a good road to the bridge on their side of the creek, but this important measure has been neglected on this side of the creek. As matters now stand the bridge is of no service, and it is said to have cost the county about two thousand dollars. We do not think the matter should be longer neglected.—Shelby Chronicle.

Shiloh's Consumption Cure.

This is beyond question the most successful Cough Medicine we have ever sold, a few doses invariably cure the worst cases of Cough, Croup and Bronchitis, while its wonderful success in the cure of consumption is without a parallel in the history of medicine. Since its first discovery it has been sold on a guarantee, a test which no other medicine can stand. If you have a cough, we earnestly ask you to try it. Price 10 cents, 50 cents, and $1.00. If your Lungs are sore, Chest or back lame, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by A. E. Bivings, Clanton, jan 10

Read This All!

I have purchased the drug business of W. H. Phillips in Clanton, and will continue the business at the same stand.

I shall also keep a stock of extra quality family groceries. I shall handle none but the very best articles, and my customers can rely upon getting pure, fresh goods.

Answer this Question.

Why do so many people we see around us seem to prefer to suffer and be made miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of Appetite, Coming up of the Food, Yellow Skin, when for 75 cents, we will sell them Shiloh's System Vitalizer, guaranteed to cure them. Sold by A. E. Bivings, Clanton.

The White Caps have organized in Maryland, and in giving the object of their mission in that State they say it is for the purpose of suppressing vice, drunkenness, idleness and nuisances generally. Such a society ought to grow.

Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy.

Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy, a marvelous cure for Catarrh, Diptheria, Canker Mouth, and Head-Ache. With each bottle there is an ingenious Nasal Injector for the more successful treatment of these complaints without extra charge. Price 50 cents. Sold by A. E. Bivings, Clanton.

A Good Book.

"Famous Women of the Old Testament" is the title of a most excellent work just issued by E. B. Treat, 771 Broadway, New York. Dr. M. B. Wharton, of Montgomery, is the author of the work. It is a book for all, and no library should be without it. It is a most interesting and instructive work in every chapter. Price $1.75.

A correspondent this week makes a good suggestion in regard to the new election law now under consideration by the Legislature. It is to require the voter to show a tax receipt before he is allowed to cast his ballot. This change has been advocated by the press of the State very generally and there is a crying demand for it among the intelligent tax payers of the State, those who bear the financial burdens of the government. There are too many floating voters in the country who never even pay as much as a poll tax and they should be allowed no voice in selecting officers who are to be paid by the tax-paying citizen. We agree with all our corespondent says on the subject.

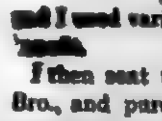
Bringing Gladness

To millions, pleasing their palates and cleansing their systems, arousing their Livers, Kidneys, Stomachs and Bowels to a healthy activity. Such is the mission of the famous California liquid fruit remedy, Syrup of Figs. For sale in 50 cents and $1.00 bottles. jul19

DID YOU KNOW IT?

Did you know catarrh is a blood disease? Well it almost invariably is, and frequently is a symptom of inherited blood poison. The tendency to catarrh may lay dormant in the system half a man's lifetime and then suddenly become active and the disease at once severe and troublesome.

H. C. EDWARDS, Lampasas Springs, Texas writes: "For over four years I have been a great sufferer from a terrible form of Nasal Catarrh. I was greatly annoyed with a constant roaring in my head and my hearing became very much impaired.



The discharge from my nose was profuse and very offensive, and my general health impaired. I tried most all prominent physicians, but they did not cure me and I used various advertised preparations without benefit.

I then sent to the drug store of T. E. Smith & Bro., and purchased B. B. B, and to my utter astonishment and satisfaction, the use of ten bottles has restored my general health, stopped the roaring sensation, entirely healed and cured the nasal catarrh, and I am proud to recommend a blood remedy with such powerful curative properties.

The business men of our town know of my case."

W. A. PEPPER, Fredonia, Ala., writes: "I cannot refrain from telling you what a glorious medicine you have. CATARRH For two years my mother has suffered with a severe Catarrh of the head and ulcerated sore throat. She resorted to various remedies without effect, until she used B. B. B., which cured her catarrh, and healed her sore throat."

R. C. KINNARD & Son, Towaliga, Ga., writes: "One of our neighbors has been suffering from CATARRH catarrh for several years, which resisted all treatment and medicine resorted to. We finally induced him to try the efficacy of B. B. B., and he was soon delighted with an improvement. He continued its use, and was cured sound and well."

PISO'S CURE FOR

Piso's Cure for Consumption is also the best Cough Medicine.

If you have a Cough without disease of the Lungs, a few doses are all you need. But if you neglect this easy means of safety, the slight Cough may become a serious matter, and several bottles will be required.

TWENTY-FIVE CENTS

CONSUMPTION

Piso's Remedy for Catarrh gives immediate relief. Catarrhal virus is soon expelled from the system, and the diseased action of the mucous membrane is replaced by healthy secretions.

The dose is small. One package contains a sufficient quantity for a long treatment.

CATARRH

A Cold in the Head is relieved by an application of Piso's Remedy for Catarrh. The comfort to be got from it in this way is worth many times its cost.

Easy and pleasant to use.

THE BROOKLYN DIVINE'S SUNDAY SERMON.

Subject: "The March Homeward."

TEXT: "Pursue; for thou shalt surely overtake them, and without fail recover all."—I Samuel, xxx., 8.

There is intense excitement in the village of Ziklag. David and his men are bidding good-bye to their families, and are off for the wars. In that little village of Ziklag the defenceless ones will be safe until the warriors, flushed with victory, come home. But will the defenceless ones be safe? The soft arms of children are around the necks of the bronzed warriors until they shake themselves free and start, and handkerchiefs and flags are waved and kisses thrown until the armed men vanish beyond the hills. David and his men soon get through with their campaign and start homeward. Every night on their way home, no sooner does the soldier put his head on the knapsack than in his dream he hears the welcome of the wife and the shout of the child. Oh, what long stories they will have to tell their families, of how they dodged the battle-axe! and then will roll up their sleeves and show the half-healed wound. With glad, quick step they march on, David and his men, for they are marching home. Now they come up to the last hill which overlooks Ziklag, and they expect in a moment to see the dwelling places of their loved ones. They look, and as they look their cheeks turn pale, and their lip quivers, and their hand involuntarily comes down on the hilt of the sword. "Where is Ziklag? Where are our homes?" they cry. Alas! the curling smoke above the ruin tells the tragedy. The Amalekites have come down and consumed the village, and carried the mothers and the wives and the children of David and his men into captivity. The swarthy warriors stand for a few moments transfixed with horror. Then their eyes glance at each other, and they burst into uncontrollable weeping; for when a strong warrior weeps, the grief is appalling. It seems as if the emotion might tear him to pieces. They "wept until they had no more power to weep." But soon their sorrow turns into rage, and David, swinging his sword high in the air, cries: "Pursue, for thou shalt overtake them, and without fail recover all." Now the march becomes a "double-quick." Two hundred of David's men stop by the brook Besor, faint with fatigue and grief. They cannot go a step farther. They are left there. But the other four hundred men under David, with a sort of panther step, march on in sorrow and in rage. They find by the side of the road a half-dead Egyptian, and they resuscitate him, and compel him to tell the whole story. He says: "Yonder they went, the captors and the captives," pointing in the direction. Forward, ye four hundred brave men of fire! Very soon David and his enraged company come upon the Amalekitish host. Yonder they see their own wives and children and mothers, and under Amalekitish guard. Here are the officers of the Amalekitish army holding a banquet. The cups are full, the music is roused, the dance begins. The Amalekitish host cheer and cheer and cheer over their victory. But, without note of bugle or warning of trumpet, David and his four hundred men burst upon the scene, suddenly as Robert Bruce hurled his Scotchmen upon the revelers at Bannockburn. David and his men look up, and one glance at their loved ones in captivity and under Amalekitish guard throws them into a very fury of determination; for you know how men will fight when they fight for their wives and children. Ah, there are lightnings in their eye, and every finger is a spear, and their voice is like the shout of the whirlwind. Amidst the upset tankards and the costly viands crushed underfoot, the wounded Amalekites lie (their blood mingling with their wine) shrieking for mercy. No sooner do David and his men win the victory than they throw their swords down into the dust—what do they want with swords now?—and the broken families come together amidst a great shout of joy that makes the parting scene in Ziklag seem very insipid in the comparison. The rough old warrior has to use some persuasion before he can get his child to come to him now after so long an absence; but soon the little finger traces the familiar wrinkle across the scarred face. And then the empty tankards are set up, and they are filled with the best wine from the hills, and David and his men, the husbands, the wives, the brothers, the sisters, drink to the overthrow of the Amalekites and to the rebuilding of Ziklag. So, O Lord, let thine enemies perish!

Now they are coming home, David and his men and their families—a long procession. Men, women and children, loaded with jewels and robes and with all kinds of trophies that the Amalekites had gathered up in years of conquest—everything now in the hands of David and his men. When they come by the brook Besor, the place where staid the men sick and incompetent to travel, the jewels and the robes and all kinds of treasures are divided among the sick as well as among the well. Surely, the lame and exhausted ought to have some of the treasures. Here is a robe for this pale-faced warrior. Here is a pillow for this dying man. Here is a handful of gold for the wasted trumpeter. I really think that these men who fainted by the brook Besor may have endured as much as those men who went into battle. Some mean fellows objected to the sick ones having any of the spoils. The objectors said: "These men did not fight." David, with a magnanimous heart, replies: "As his part is that goeth down to the battle, so shall his part be that tarrieth by the stuff."

This subject is practically suggestive to me. Thank God, in these times a man can go off on a journey, and be gone weeks and months, and come back and see his house untouched of incendiary, and have his family on the step to greet him, if by telegram he has foretold the moment of his coming. But there are Amalekitish disasters, and there are Amalekitish diseases, that sometimes come down upon one's home, making as devastating work as the day when Ziklag took fire. There are families in my congregation whose homes have been broken up. No battering-ram smote in the door, no iconoclast crumbled the statues, no flame leaped amidst the curtains; but so far as all the joy and merriment that once belonged to that house are concerned, the home has departed. Armed diseases came down upon the quietness of the scene—scarlet fevers, or pleurisies, or consumptions, or undefined disorders came and seized upon some members of that family, and carried them away. Ziklag in ashes! And you go about, sometimes weeping and sometimes enraged, wanting to get back your loved ones as much as David and his men wanted to reconstruct their despoiled households. Ziklag in ashes! Some of you went off from home. You counted the days of your absence. Every day seemed as long as a week. Oh, how glad you were when the time came for you to go aboard the steamboat or rail-car and start for home! You arrived. You went up the street where your dwelling was, and in the night you put your hand on the door bell, and, behold! it was wrapped with the signal of bereavement, and you found that Amalekitish Death, which has devastated a thousand other households, had blasted yours. You go about weeping amidst the desolation of your once happy home, thinking of the bright eyes closed, and the noble hearts stopped, and the gentle hands folded, and you weep until you have no more power to weep. Ziklag in ashes!

A gentleman went to a friend of mine in the city of Washington, and asked that through him he might get a consulship to some foreign port. My friend said to him: "What do you want to go away from your beautiful home for, into a foreign port?" "Oh," he replied, "my home is gone! My six children are dead! I must get away, sir. I can't stand it in this country any longer." Ziklag in ashes!

Why these long shadows of bereavement across this audience? Why is it that in almost every assemblage black is the predominant color of the apparel? Is it because you do not like scarlet or brown or violet? Oh, no! You say, "The world is not so bright to us as it once was," and there is a story of silent voices, and of still feet, and of loved ones gone, and when you look over the hills, expecting only beauty and loveliness, you find only devastation and woe. Ziklag in ashes!

In Ulster County, New York, the village church was decorated until the fragrance of the flowers was almost bewildering. The maidens of the village had emptied the places of flowers upon one marriage altar. One of their own number was affianced to a minister of Christ, who had come to take her to his home. With hands joined, amidst a congratulatory audience, the vows were taken. In three days from [illegible] Christ to [illegible] village. He had [illegible] a week before [illegible]; how he came home [illegible]. The whole church [illegible] him. The [illegible] procession [illegible] salvation. [illegible] to look at him. And some of those whom he had comforted in days of sorrow, when they passed that silent form, made the place dreadful with their weeping. Another village emptied of its flowers—some of them put in the shape of a cross to symbolize his hope, others put in the shape of a crown to symbolize his triumph. A hundred lights blown out in one strong gust from the open door of a sepulcher. Ziklag in ashes!

I preach this sermon to-day, because I want to rally you, as David rallied his men, for the recovery of the loved and the lost. I want not only to win heaven, but I want all this congregation to go along with me. I feel that somehow I have a responsibility in your arriving at that great city. I have on other Sabbaths used other inducements. I mean, to-day, for the sake of variety, hoping to reach your heart, to try another kind of inducement. Do you really want to join the companionship of your loved ones who have gone? Are you as anxious to join them as David and his men were to join their families? Then I am here, in the name of God, to say that you may, and to tell you how.

I remark, in the first place, if you want to join your loved ones in glory, you must travel the same way they went. No sooner had the half-dead Egyptian been resuscitated than he pointed the way the captors and the captives had gone, and David and his men followed after. So our Christian friends have gone into another country, and if we want to reach their companionship we must take the same road. They repented; we must repent. They prayed; we must pray. They trusted in Christ; we must trust in Christ. They lived a religious life; we must live a religious life. They were in some things like ourselves. I know, now that they are gone, there is a halo around their names; but they had their faults. They said and did things they ought never to have said or done. They were sometimes rebellious, sometimes cast down. They were far from being perfect. So I suppose that when we are gone, some things in us that are now only tolerable may be almost resplendent. But as they were like us in deficiencies, we ought to be like them in taking a supernal Christ to make up for the deficits. Had it not been for Jesus, they would have all perished; but Christ confronted them, and said: "I am the way," and they took it.

I have also to say to you that the path that these captives trod was a troubled path, and that David and his men had to go over the same difficult way. While these captives were being taken off, they said: "Oh, we are so tired; we are so sick; we are so hungry!" But the men who had charge of them said: "Stop this crying. Go on!" David and his men also found it a hard way. They had to travel it. Our friends have gone into glory, and it is through much tribulation that we are to enter into the kingdom. How our loved ones used to have to struggle! how their old hearts ached! how sometimes they had a tussle for bread! In our childhood we wondered why there were so many wrinkles on their faces. We did not know that what were called "crow's feet" on their faces were the marks of the black raven of trouble. Did you never hear the old people, seated by the evening stand, talk over their early trials, their hardships, the accidents, the burials, the disappointments, the empty flour barrel when there were so many hungry ones to feed, the sickness almost unto death, where the next dose of morphine decided between ghastly bereavement and an unbroken home circle? Oh, yes; it was trouble that whitened their hair. It was trouble that shook the cup in their hands. It was trouble that washed the lustre from their eyes with the rain of tears until they needed spectacles. It was trouble that made the cane a necessity for their journey. Do you never remember seeing your old mother sitting, on some rainy day, looking out of the window, her elbow on the window-sill, her hand to her brow—looking out, not seeing the falling shower at all (you well knew that she was looking into the distant past), until the apron came up to her eyes, because the memory was too much for her!

> "Oft the big, unbidden tear,
> Stealing down the furrowed cheek,
> Told in eloquence sincere,
> Tales of woe they could not speak.
> "But this scene of weeping o'er
> Past this scene of toil and pain,
> They shall feel distress no more,
> Never, never weep again."

"Who are these under the altar?" the question was asked; and the response came: "These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." Our friends went by a path of tears into glory. Be not surprised if we have to travel the same pathway.

I remark, again, if we want to win the society of our friends in heaven, we will not only have to travel a path of faith and a path of tribulation, but we will also have to positively battle for their companionship. David and his men never wanted sharp swords and invulnerable shields and thick breastplates so much as they wanted them on the day when they came down upon the Amalekites. If they had lost that battle, they never would have got their families back. I suppose that one glance at their loved ones in captivity hurled them into the battle with ten-fold courage and energy. They said: "We must win it. Every thing depends upon it. Let each one take a man on point of spear or sword. We must win it." And I have to tell you that between us and coming into the companionship of our loved ones who are departed there is an Austerlitz, there is a Gettysburg, there is a Waterloo. War with the world, war with the flesh, war with the devil. We have either to conquer our troubles, or our troubles will conquer us. David will either slay the Amalekites, or the Amalekites will slay David. And yet is not the fort to be taken worth all the pain, all the peril, all the besiegement? Look! who are they on the bright hills of heaven yonder? There they are, those who sat at your own table, the chair now vacant. There they are, those whom you rocked in infancy in the cradle, or hushed to sleep in your arms. There they are, those in whose life your life was bound up. There they are, their brow more radiant than ever before you saw it, their lips waiting for the kiss of heavenly greeting, their cheek roseate with the health of eternal summer, their hands beckoning you up the steep, their feet bounding with the mirth of heaven. The pallor of their last sickness gone out of their face, never more to be sick, never more to cough, never more to limp, never more to be old, never more to weep. They are watching from those heights to see if through Christ you can take that fort, and whether you will rush in upon them—victors. They know that upon this battle depends whether you will ever join their society. Up! strike harder! Charge more bravely! Remember that every inch you gain puts you so much further on toward that heavenly reunion.

If this morning while I speak you could hear the cannonade of a foreign navy coming through the Narrows, which was to despoil our city, and if they really should succeed in carrying our families away from us, how long would we take before we resolved to go after them? Every weapon, whether fresh from Springfield or old and rusty in the garret, would be brought out; and we would urge on, and, coming in front of the foe, we would look at them, and then look at our families, and the cry would be: "Victory or death!" and when the ammunition was gone, we would take the captors on the point of the bayonet or under the breech of the gun. If you would make such a struggle for the getting back of your earthly friends, will you not make as much struggle for the gaining of the eternal companionship of your heavenly friends? Oh, yes! we must join them. We must sit in their holy society. We must sing with them the song. We must celebrate with them the triumph. Let it never be told on earth or in heaven that David and his men pushed out with braver hearts for the getting back of their earthly friends for a few years on earth than we to get our departed!

You say that all this implies that our departed Christian friends are alive. Why, had you any idea they were dead? They have only moved. If you should go on the 1st of May to a house where one of your friends lived, and found him gone, you would not think that he was dead. You would inquire next door where he had moved to. Our departed Christian friends have only taken another house. The secret is that they are richer now than they once were, and can afford a better residence. They once drank out of earthen-ware; they now drink from the King's chalice. "Joseph is yet alive," and Jacob will go up and see him. Living, are they? Why, if a man can live in this damp, dark dungeon of earthly captivity, can he not live where he breathes the bracing atmosphere of the mountains of heaven? Oh, yes, they are living! [illegible] Robertson, of Brighton, is as near dead now as he was when, year after year, he slept seated on the floor, his head on the bottom of a chair, because he could find ease in no other position? Do you think that Robert Hall is as near dead now as when, on his couch, he tossed in physical torture? No. Death gave them the few black drops that cured them. That is all death does to a Christian—cures him. I know that what I have said implies that they are living. There is no question about that. The only question this morning is whether you will ever join them.

But I must not forget those two hundred men who fainted by the brook Besor. They could not take another step farther. Their feet were sore; their head ached; their entire nature was exhausted. Besides that, they were broken-hearted because their homes were gone. Ziklag in ashes! And yet David, when he comes up to them, divides the spoils among them. He says they shall have some of the jewels, some of the robes, some of the treasures. I look over this audience this morning, and I find at least two hundred who have fainted by the brook Besor—the brook of tears. You feel as if you could not take another step farther, as though you could never look up again. But I am going to imitate David, and divide among you some glorious trophies. Here is a robe: "All things work together for good, to those who love God." Wrap yourself in that glorious promise. Here is for your neck a string of pearls, made out of crystalized tears: "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." Here is a coronet: "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." O ye fainting ones by the brook Besor, dip your blistered feet in the running stream of God's mercy. Bathe your brow at the wells of salvation. Soothe your wounds with the balsam that exudes from trees of life. God will not utterly cast you off. O broken-hearted man, O broken-hearted woman, fainting by the brook Besor.

A shepherd finds that his musical pipe is bruised. He says: "I can't get any more music out of this instrument: so I will just break it, and I will throw this reed away. Then I will get another reed, and I will play music on that." But God says He will not cast you off because all the music has gone out of your soul. "The bruised reed He will not break." As far as I can tell the diagnosis of your disease, you want Divine nursing, and it is promised you: "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you." God will see you all the way through, O troubled soul, and when you come down to the Jordan of death, you will find it to be as thin a brook as Besor; for Dr. Robinson says that, in April Besor dries up, and there is no brook at all. And in your last moment you will be as placid as the Kentucky minister who went up to God, saying, in the dying hour: "Write to my sister Kate, and tell her not to be worried and frightened about the story of the horrors around the death-bed. Tell her there is not a word of truth in it, for I am there now, and Jesus is with me, and I find it a very happy way; not because I am a good man, for I am not: I am nothing but a poor, miserable sinner; but I have an Almighty Saviour, and both of His arms are around me."

May God Almighty, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, bring us into the companionship of our loved ones who have already entered the heavenly land, and entered the presence of Christ, whom, not having seen, we love, and so David shall recover all, "and as his part is that goeth down to the battle, so shall his part be that tarrieth by the stuff."

A FALL OF 145 FEET.

The Wonderful Escape of a Painter On a High Bridge.

William R. Eckert, a painter on the Manhattan Bridge, over the Harlem River, New York, has had an escape from death that was almost providential. He fell from as great a height as ever did any man before who lived to tell his tale. He is 24 years of age, and has been superintending the painting of the bridge.

"I was at my work as usual Saturday morning," he said, "and was on a scaffolding near the center of the bridge. I called out some directions to men who were working further along, and was about to pass myself around a post when I found my feet go from under me. I had not hold enough on the post to maintain myself, although I had sufficient to swing my body on the scaffold. I remember falling on the scaffold—then a lurching of it because of my weight being all on the outside plank. I could catch nothing but the thin air, for I was lying on the broad of my back. I didn't dare scream as I lay there on the balance, lest the least motion should topple me over. In an instant more my head and shoulders rolled off the plank and I was in the air, 145 feet from the earth, with nothing but Providence between me and an awful death. It makes my blood run cold even now when I recall that sensation of utter helplessness—that feeling that I was being made delirious only to be smashed to death. The descent occupied only a few seconds, but my mind seemed to be on fire—it seemed to travel as quickly as I fell.

"After the first instant the most horrible sensation I ever experienced came upon me. I remember that just below me the river was studded with piling, placed four feet apart. What if I strike one of them! I could see these piles in my mind as I whirled down, tumbling head over heels in my fall (because of the swing given me by the stage uprighting and throwing my feet far out), just as plainly as ever I saw them in my waking senses. I had an inclination to draw myself up in a ball with fear, and then I shut my eyes. The next thing I remember was striking the water, and I felt happy. I went right to bottom, but came up in full possession of my senses and was fished up just as you see me, without a pain, ache, sprain or bruise of any sort. I came home here, changed my clothing and went back to the bridge though not to work. I will go to work some time this week. I don't suppose I was any time scarcely in falling, but it was horrible while it lasted.

"I was almost at the center of the bridge when I fell. It is 147 feet above the water. My fall, measured exactly, was 145 feet. It is the second big fall I have had. Six years ago I fell from a staging in Milton, Pa., a distance of forty-eight feet upon solid stone flagging beneath, and I hit on my feet and didn't even get a bruise. This time my head struck first."

Two Costly Prints.

Among a lot of engraved portraits of George Washington, sold with a collection of rare autographs at Boston recently, was a pair of portraits to which unusual interest attaches from the fact that, so far as is known, they could not be duplicated for love or money. Printed on dingy paper, they are about the poorest specimens of the engraver's art that ever was seen. They represent George and Martha Washington, but they might represent any one else for that matter, for they are hideous in the extreme. Yet these two prints, of no value as works of art, were sold at auction to-day for the round sum of $500, and the fortunate purchaser at that price will hereafter be the envy of every collector of Washingtoniana in the land. The rivalry for their possession was keen.

These portraits were the first of Washington executed by a professional engraver in America, and were engraved by J. Norman, and published in Boston in 1782. Of the Washington portrait only one other copy is known to exist, and that of course is not for sale. The [illegible]

AGRICULTURAL.

TOPICS OF INTEREST RELATIVE TO FARM AND GARDEN.

The Creamery Business.

The advantages of the co-operative system of butter-making are daily becoming more apparent. In those sections where the system has been tried, on right principles, it almost invariably inures to the benefit of the farmer in giving increased returns for his milk-product, and in the enhanced value of farm land on account of increasing its fertility and productiveness by stock-keeping. The removal of much hard labor from the shoulders of the housewife is one great advantage of the system and one too often under estimated. If the farmer could get no more per pound for his butter by selling his cream to the creamery, the saving of labor in-doors is a weighty argument in favor of his patronizing the creamery. A writer in the Western Rural adds testimony on this point, by saying that he esteems the factory as a great blessing to the overworked women of our farms, taking them as a whole. The cream gathering system is the means of greatly blessing our wives, mothers and sisters. One man wrote us some time since that he had given up dairying, because of the burden it imposed upon his wife, and was selling hay. Well, that is a bad plan. Secure the establishment of a factory in the neighborhood, and feed the hay to cows on the farm.—New York Independent.

To Make Poultry Grow.

Nothing will enlarge the capacity of a chicken quicker than a varied bill of fare and a good supply of green food. To chickens in confinement onion tops are especially acceptable, and the tops are relished more than are the bulbs themselves. Beet and turnip tops will be greedily devoured. That they may not be wasted lay them with the tops all one way and weight them down with a stone. Bran and shorts, wheat and oats, table-scraps and meat, with a very little corn, a few sunflower seeds, and a small amount of buckwheat, make an irresistible combination, a combination that will make a chicken grow and thrive in spite of itself. To make pullets trot along toward maturity with a wonderfully accelerated pace, give them every morning a warm feed of bran and shorts and ground oats mixed up with milk or meat stock in which is a little salt. At noon give a feed of meat and at night all the wheat they will eat and a little left to scratch for the next day. In addition to this, provide green food, crushed bones, and pure water, and give each day one heavy feed of broken dishes; they will be eaten with avidity. Feeding pepper often to fowls as a regular appetizer is a bad practice. Although a very little will do no harm, yet the continued use of the condiment is liable to cause liver complaint. Warm feed tends to have the same stimulating effect without possessing the injurious qualities of the cayenne. The only way to make a chicken-house is to build it with a board floor. Where the droppings nightly fall on the ground the soil will become foul and damp, even though it be cleaned out every day in the year. The odors that then arise are unwholesome in the extreme, will cause roup, and in fact nearly all the ills that poultry flesh is heir to. The board floor should then be kept covered with two or three inches of dry soil, which should be repeatedly renewed. The only way to make roosts is to make them on a moveable frame that may be taken out of doors, there to be scalded with boiling hot water in which is a little crude carbolic acid. Make the roosts all on a level and not more than two feet high, thereby preventing much quarreling and the bumble foot.—Chicago Times.

Winter Care of Colts.

The first fall and winter is a critical period with colts. During this time improper care, shelter, or food, or insufficient water, or a lack of exercise, may take a large per cent. from their value when matured. A colt is easily stunted or weakened, and it may even contract disease on account of bad food or improper sanitary conditions. Providing stables or sheds in which colts can barely exist, to make them tough, is both inhuman and unprofitable. Warm quarters not only save food, but aid healthy growth, which should be maintained all winter. The stable should be warm enough to allow the manure to freeze only in the coldest weather, and as in all buildings for domestic animals, draughts of air should be guarded against. Colts coming through in spring time with long hair, prominent ribs and projecting hips, and lousy, are a disgrace to their owners. They are so reduced in vitality, and the basis for the next summer's growth so undermined, that they cannot make nearly so much profit out of pastures as if well wintered.

Since form and quality of the muscles, tendons, and frame are equally as important as size the feeding of colts is even of more importance than that of calves for beef, or pigs for pork. Corn alone has not enough muscle and bone-producing elements, and in the hands of the ignorant feeder is often unprofitable. No one grain food with hay answers the purpose in point of effectiveness, combined with cost, so well as oats. If they cannot be obtained cheaply, a good ration can be made up of 100 parts by weight of bran, fifty of cornmeal and fifty of ground linseed cake, feed with nice hay chopped in the feed cutter. Four to nine pounds of the mixed grain food should be given each colt per day in two to three feeds. It should be mixed with about its weight of cut hay before feeding. No definite amount can be given, as some colts will require more and others less than an average. In several days, or at most a few weeks, an observing feeder will know whether or not the feed for each individual colt should be increased. Colts as well as milch cows, will enjoy water warmed to seventy degrees, and mixing in other foods, for variety's sake, will give tone to the appetite and "condition" to the animal.—Wisconsin Agriculturist.

Farm and Garden Notes.

Kind treatment and warm barns lessen the feed bill.

The parsnip is generally considered the sweeter and better for a little freezing.

No eggs need be expected if the poultry house is not made comfortably warm for the winter.

A good rubbing with card and brush is liked by the cow as well as the horse, and gives equal benefit.

There is nothing like heat for milk-making in winter, and with ensilage for food, there is no reason why the supply of milk should be any less in cold than in warm weather.

It will do no harm to begin feeding the fowls green food now. They will not require so much grain and will keep in better condition if they have a liberal supply of vegetables.

HOUSEHOLD MATTERS.

History of Mustard.

Mustard was little known at English tables until 1720, when a Mrs. Clements, residing in Durham, began to grind the seed in a mill, and to pass the flour through several processes necessary to free it from husks. She kept her secret to herself for many years, during which she sold large quantities of mustard throughout the country, but especially in London. Here it was introduced to the royal table, where it received the approval of George the First. From the circumstance of Mrs. Clements being a resident of Durham it obtained the name of Durham mustard.—Argonaut.

Simple Kid Glove Renovator.

One of the best preparations for cleaning kid gloves that I have ever tried can be bought for a small sum at any drug store. Get one quart of deodorized benzine, one drachm of sulphuric ether, one drachm of chloroform, two drachms of alcohol. Cologne oil can be added if desired. Pour a little of this into a clean bowl, and wash the gloves in it as you would wash anything. After the dirt is nearly out, rinse in more of the clean fluid. Usually one rinsing is enough, but if the gloves were very much soiled rinse the second time. If the gloves are of cheap kid it is better to dry them on the hand, but a nice glove after having been rubbed with a soft cloth to smooth out wrinkles, may be hung on a line to dry. This preparation is an excellent thing to keep in the house, not only for cleaning gloves, but for taking out grease spots from clothing and carpets, and for sponging coat collars and felt hats.—Brooklyn Citizen.

Make Your Own Dyes.

A variety of very useful colors and dyes may be obtained from very common plants, growing in abundance almost everywhere. The well-known huckleberry or blueberry, when boiled down with an addition of a little alum and a solution of copperas, will develop an excellent blue color; treated in the same manner, with a solution of nut-galls, they produce a clear dark-brown tint, while with alum, verdigris and sal ammoniac various shades of purple and red can be obtained. The fruit of the elder, so frequently used for coloring spirits, will also produce a blue color when treated with alum. The privet, boiled in a solution of salt, furnishes a serviceable color, and the over ripe berries yield a serviceable red. The seeds of the common burning bush, "euonemus," when treated with sal ammoniac, produce a beautiful purple red. The bark of the currant bush, treated with a solution of alum, produces a brown. Yellow is obtained from the bark of the apple tree, the box, the ash, the buckthorn, poplar, elm, etc., when boiled in water and treated with alum. A lively green is furnished by the broom corn.—Picayune.

Good Household Recipes.

Hamburg Smoked Beef and Ham: To prepare beef and hams in the celebrated Hamburg style, the salt has to be thoroughly rubbed into the meat while it is yet blood warm. Take one part of saltpeter to three parts of salt; then rub the meat thickly with rye bran, and when quite cold wrap it carefully in paper, and at once hang it up to smoke. With this process failure is almost impossible, and the meat keeps sweet and juicy.

German Potato Pudding: Take three cups of cold boiled and mashed potatoes; put them into a saucepan with a little salt and grated lemon rind; stir over the fire; add butter the size of an egg, a half pint of cream, and two tablespoonfuls of sugar; remove from the fire; flavor with orange flower water; add four beaten eggs and the yelks of four more. Mix all well together and pour into a mold well buttered, and sprinkled with bread crumbs. Bake and serve hot.

Bread and Butter Pudding: This is a good substitute for a plum pudding, when the latter is not desirable on account of its richness. Add to one pint of new milk the flavor of the yellow rind of a small lemon, or of stick cinnamon, if preferred. Simmer from ten to twenty minutes and then mix with a gill of cream. Sweeten with four ounces of white sugar, and stir in slowly, while hot, six well beaten eggs. Have in readiness a buttered pudding dish with three layers of bread and butter alternated with four ounces of currants, and one and a half of finely shredded candied lemon and orange peel. Pour the eggs and milk on by degrees, allowing the bread and butter to absorb it. Soak two hours and bake half an hour in a moderate oven.

Hare Soup: Game is plentiful at this season. In many parts of the country the youngsters of the family may procure a supply merely by the setting of a trap, which is always a pleasure to a rightly constituted boy. Skin and clean a hare or rabbit, and cut it in joints as you would a chicken for a fricassee. Fry a quarter of a pound of salt pork cut in strips; take it out and fry the joints in this. Put all into a soup kettle, and cover with three quarts of boiling water; add two sliced onions, some stalks of celery, a bay leaf, thyme, parsley and a blade of mace. Simmer slowly until the meat is tender, then remove the nice pieces; chop the meat from the inferior portions; strain the soup; return to the saucepan; add the minced meat; boil for ten minutes, and pass all through a sieve. Put the best pieces into the tureen and pour the soup over them.

Boiled Chickens with Celery Sauce: Lay aside the whitest part of a bunch of celery for the table, and chop all the rest except the very green stalks; cook in boiling water until tender. Truss the chicken, and stuff as for roasting, adding some of the stewed celery to the dressing. Add the water in which the celery was boiled to that in which the chicken is to be cooked. It will flavor it deliciously. Brown the chicken in a little hot, sweet dripping; cover with boiling water containing a small sliced onion and carrot, and simmer until tender. Lift out; dredge with flour, and brown in a quick oven. For the sauce, melt in a saucepan a tablespoonful of butter, and stir in a heaping tablespoonful of flour; when smooth and bubbling, add one cup each of hot milk and the water in which the chicken was boiled. Season with salt and pepper, and add the stewed celery. Simmer for five minutes. Send to the table in a boat. Even an old "chicken" may be cooked in this way.—American Agriculturist.

A Voracious Cannibal Fish.

Taking his size into consideration, the blue-fish can take the head of the piscatorial tribe, as a devourer of his kind. Incredible as it may appear, a vigorous, wide-awake five-pounder, can stow away in twenty-four hours a full two and one-half pounds of weight of smaller fishes. Anything is grist to his digestive mill, every blood relationship not affecting his appetite.

REV. DR. TALMAGE.

THE BROOKLYN DIVINE'S SUNDAY SERMON.

Subject: "Slanders Against Religion Answered."

TEXT: "And I took the little book out of the angel's hand, and ate it up; and it was in my mouth sweet as honey; and as soon as I had eaten it my belly was bitter. And He said unto me: Thou must prophesy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings."—Rev. x., 10-11.

Domitian, the Roman Emperor, had in his realm a troublesome evangelist who would keep preaching, and so he exiled him to a barren island, as now the Russians exile convicts to Siberia, or as sometimes the English Government used to send prisoners to Australia. The island I speak of is now called Patmos, and is so barren and unproductive that its inhabitants live by fishing.

But one day the evangelist of whom I speak, sitting at the mouth of a cavern on the hill-side, and perhaps half asleep under the drone of the sea, has a supernatural dream, and before him pass as in panorama, time and eternity. Among the strange things that he saw was an angel with a little book in his hand, and in his dream the evangelist asked for this little book, and the angel gave it to him, and told him to eat it up. As in a dream things are sometimes incongruous, the evangelist took the little book and ate it up. The angel told him beforehand that it would be very sweet in the mouth, but afterward he would be troubled with indigestion. True enough, the evangelist devours the book, and it becomes to him a sweetness during the mastication, but afterward a physical bitterness.

Who the angel was and what the book was no one can tell. The commentators do not agree, and I shall take no responsibility of interpretation, but will tell you that it suggests to me the little book of creeds which skeptics take and chew up and find a very luscious morsel to their witticism, but after a while it is to them a great distress. The angel of the church hands out this little book of evangelism, and the antagonists of the Christian Church take it and eat it up, and it makes them smile at first, but afterward it is to them a dire dyspepsia.

All intelligent people have creeds—that is, favorite theories which they have adopted. Political creeds—that is theories about tariff, about finance, about civil service, about government. Social creeds—that is, theories about manners and customs and good neighborhood. Æsthetical creeds—that is theories about tapestry, about bric-a-brac, about styles of ornamentation. Religious creeds—that is, theories about the Deity, about the soul, about the great future. The only being who has no creed about anything is the idiot. This scoffing against creeds is always a sign of profound ignorance on the part of the scoffer, for he has himself a hundred creeds in regard to other things. In our time the beliefs of evangelistic churches are under a fusilade of caricature and misrepresentation. Men set up what they call orthodox faith, and they rake it with the musketry of their denunciation. They falsify what the Christian churches believe. They take evangelical doctrines and set them in a harsh and repulsive way, and put them out of the association with other truths. They are like a mad anatomist, who, desiring to tell what a man is, dissects a human body and hangs up in one place the heart, and in another place the two lungs, and in another place an ankle bone, and says that is a man. They are only fragments of a man wrenched out of their God-appointed places.

Evangelical religion is a healthy, symmetrical, well-jointed, roseate, bounding life, and the scalpel and the dissecting knife of the infidel or the atheist cannot tell you what it is. Evangelical religion is as different from what it is represented to be by these enemies as the scarecrow which a farmer puts in the cornfield to keep off the ravens is different from the farmer himself.

For instance, these enemies of evangelism say that the Presbyterian Church believes that God is a savage Sovereign, and that He made some men just to damn them, and that there are infants in hell a span long. These old slanders come down from generation to generation. The Presbyterian Church believes no such thing. The Presbyterian Church believes that God is a loving and just Sovereign, and that we are free agents. "No, no; that cannot be," say these men who have chewed up the creed and have the consequent embittered stomach. "That is impossible; if God is a Sovereign, we can't be free agents." Why, my friends, we admit this in every other direction. I, De Witt Talmage, am a free citizen of Brooklyn. I go when I please and I come when I please, but I have at least four sovereigns. The Church court of our denomination; that is my ecclesiastical sovereign. The mayor of this city; he is my municipal sovereign. The Governor of New York; he is my State sovereign. The President of the United States; he is my national sovereign. Four sovereigns have I, and yet in every faculty of body, mind and soul I am a free man. So, you see, it is possible that the two doctrines go side by side, and there is a common-sense way of presenting it, and there is a way that is repulsive. If you have the two doctrines in a worldly direction, why not in a religious direction? If I choose to-morrow morning to walk into the Mercantile Library and improve my mind, or to go through the conservatory of my friend at Jamaica, who has flowers from all lands growing under the arches of glass, and who has an aquarium all asquirm with trout and gold fish, and there are trees bearing oranges and bananas—if I want to go there, I could. I am free to go. If I want to go over to Hoboken and leap into a furnace of an oil factory, if I want to jump from the platform of the Philadelphia express train, if I want to leap from the Brooklyn Bridge, I may. But suppose I should go to-morrow and leap into the furnace at Hoboken, who would be to blame? That is all there is about sovereignty and free agency. God rules and reigns, and He has conservatories and He has blast furnaces. If you want to walk in the gardens, walk there. If you want to leap in the furnaces, you may.

Suppose now a man had a chemical key with which he could open all the jails and it should open [illegible] and the New York Tombs and all the [illegible] on the continent. In three weeks what kind of a country would this be? all the inmates turned out of those prisons and penitentiaries. Suppose all the reprobates, the bad spirits, the outrageous spirits, should be turned into the New Jerusalem. Why, the next morning the gates of pearl would be found off hinge, the linchpin would be gone out of the chariot wheels, the "house of many mansions" would be burglarised. Assault and battery, arson, libertinism and assassination would reside in the capital of the skies. Angels of God would be insulted on the streets. Heaven would be a dead failure if there were no great lock-up. If all people without regard to their character when they leave this world go right into glory—I wonder if in the temple of the skies Charles Guiteau and John Wilkes Booth occupy the same pew! Your common sense demands two destinies! And then as to the Presbyterian Church believing there are infants in perdition, if you will bring me a Presbyterian of good morals and sound mind who will say that he believes there ever was a baby in the lost world, or ever will be, I will make him a deed to the house I live in and he can take possession to-morrow.

So the Episcopalian Church is misrepresented by the enemies of evangelism. They say that church substitutes forms and ceremonies for heart religion, and it is all a matter for liturgy and genuflexion. False again. All Episcopalians will tell you that the forms and creeds of their church are worse than nothing unless the heart go with them.

So also the Baptist Church has been misrepresented. The enemies of evangelism say the Baptist Church believes that unless a man is immersed he will never get into heaven. False again. All the Baptists, close communion and open communion, believe that if a man accept the Lord Jesus Christ he will be saved, whether he be baptized by one drop of water on the forehead, or be plunged into the Ohio or Susquehanna, although immersion is the only gate by which one enters their earthly communion.

The enemies of evangelism also misrepresent the Methodist Church. They say the Methodist Church believes that a man can convert himself, and that conversion in that church is a temporary emotion, and that all a man has to do is to kneel down at the altar and feel bad and then the minister pats him on the back and says: "It is all right," and that is all there is of it. False again. The Methodist Church believes that the Holy Ghost alone can convert a heart, and in that church conversion is an earthquake of conviction and a sunburst of pardon. And as to mere "temporary emotion," I wish we all had more of the "temporary emotion" which lasted Bishop Janes and Matthew Simpson for a half century, keeping them on fire for God until their holy enthusiasm consumed their bodies.

So all the evangelical denominations are misrepresented. And then these enemies of evangelism go on and hold up the great doctrines of Christian churches as absurd, dry and inexplicable technicalities. "There is your doctrine of the Trinity," they say. "Absurd beyond all bounds. The idea that there is a God in three persons. Impossible. If it is one God He can't be three, and if there are three, there can't be one." At the same time all of us—they with us—acknowledge trinities all around us. Trinity in our own make-up—body, mind, soul. Body with which we move, mind with which we think, soul with which we love. Three, yet one man. Trinity in the air—light, heat, moisture—yet one atmosphere. Trinity in the court room—three judges on the bench, but one court. Trinities all around about us, in earthly government and in nature. Of course, all the illustrations are defective, for the reason that the natural cannot fully illustrate the spiritual. But suppose an ignorant man should come up to the chemist and say: "I deny what you say about the water and about the air; they are not made of different parts. The air is one; I breathe it every day. The water is one; I drink it every day. You can't deceive me about the elements that go to make up the air and the water." The chemist would say: "You come up into my laboratory and I will demonstrate this whole thing to you." The ignorant man goes into the chemist's laboratory and sees for himself. He learns that the water is one and the air is one, but they are made up of different parts. So here is a man who says: "I can't understand the doctrine of the Trinity." God says: "You come up here into the laboratory after your death, and you will see—you will see it explained, you will see it demonstrated." The ignorant man cannot understand the chemistry of the water and the air until he goes into the laboratory, and we will never understand the Trinity until we go into heaven. The ignorance of the man who cannot understand the chemistry of the air and water does not change the fact in regard to the composition of air and water. Because we cannot understand the Trinity, does that change the fact?

"And there is your absurd doctrine about justification by faith," say these antagonists who have chewed up the little book of evangelism, and have the consequent embittered stomach—"justification by faith; you can't explain it." I can explain it. It is simply this: When a man takes the Lord Jesus Christ as his Saviour from sin, God lets the offender off. Just as you have a difference with some one; he has injured you, he apologizes, or he makes reparation, you say: "Now, that's all right, that's all right." Justification by faith is this: A man takes Jesus Christ as his Saviour, and God says to the man: "Now, it was all wrong before, but it is all right now; it is all right." That was what made Martin Luther what he was. Justification by faith, it is going to conquer all nations.

"There is your absurd doctrine about regeneration," these antagonists of evangelism say. What is regeneration? Why, regeneration is reconstruction. Anybody can understand that. Have you not seen people who are all made over again by some wonderful influence? In other words, they are just as different now from what they used to be as possible. The old Constellation, man-of-war, lay down here at the Brooklyn Navy Yard. Famine came in Ireland. The old Constellation was fitted up, and though it had been carrying gunpowder and bullets it took bread to Ireland. You remember the enthusiasm as the old Constellation went out of our harbor, and with what joy it was greeted by the famishing nation on the other side the sea. That is regeneration. A man loaded up with sin and death loaded up with life. Redeemed. Your observation has been very small indeed if you have not seen changes in character as radical as that.

A man came into this church one night, and he was intoxicated, and at an utterance of the pulpit he said in a subdued tone: "That's a lie." An officer of the church tapped him on the shoulder and said: "You must be silent, or you must go out." The next night that stranger came and he was converted to God. He was in the liquor business. He resigned the business. The next day he sent back the samples that had just been sent to him. He began to love that which he hated. I baptized him by immersion in the baptistry under this platform. A large salary was offered him if he would return to his former business. He declined it. He would rather suffer with Jesus Christ than be prospered in the world. He wrote home a letter to his Christian mother. The Christian mother wrote back congratulating him, and said: "If in the change of your business you have lack of means, come home; you are always welcome home." He told of his conversion to a dissolute companion. The dissolute companion said: "Well, if you have become a Christian, you had better go over and talk to that dying girl. She is dying with quick consumption in that house." The new convert went there. All the surroundings were dissolute. He told the dying girl that Jesus would save her. "Oh," said she, "that can't be, that can't be! What makes you think so?" "I have it here in a book in my pocket," he replied. He pulled out a New Testament. She said: "Show it to me; if I can be saved, show it to me in that book." He said: "I have neglected this book as you have neglected it for many years, and I don't know where to find it, but I know it is somewhere between the lids." Then he began to turn over the leaves, and strange and beautiful to say, his eye struck upon this passage: "Neither do I condemn thee; go and sin no more." She said: "It isn't possible that is there!" "Yes," he said, "that is there." He held it up before her dying eyes, and she said: "Oh, yes, I see it for myself; I accept the promise: 'Neither do I condemn thee; go and sin no more.'" In a few hours her spirit sped away to the Lord that gave it, and the new convert preached the funeral sermon. The man who a few days before had been a blasphemer and a drunkard and a hater of all that was good, he preached the sermon. That is regeneration, that is regeneration! If there are any dry husks of technicality in that, where are they? All made over again by the power of the grace of God.

A few years ago a ship captain came in here and sat yonder under the gallery. He came in with a contempt for the Church of God and with an especial dislike for Talmage. When an opportunity was given he arose for prayer, and as he was more than six feet high, when he arose for prayer no one doubted that he arose! That hour he became a Christian. He went out and told the ship owners and the ship commanders what a great change had been wrought in him, and scores and scores have been brought to God through his instrumentality.

A little while after his conversion he was on ship off Cape Hatteras in a thick and prolonged fog, and they were at their wits' ends and knew not what to do, the ship drifting about hither and thither, and they lost their bearings; and the converted sea captain went to his room and asked God for the salvation of his ship, and God revealed it to him while he was on his knees that at a certain hour, only a little way off, the fog would lift; and the converted sea captain came out on the deck and told how God heard his prayers. He said: "It is all right, boys, very soon now the fog will lift," mentioning the hour. A man who stood there laughed aloud in derision at the idea that God would answer prayer; but at just the hour when God had assured the captain the fog would lift there came a flash of lightning through the fog, and the man who had jeered and laughed was stunned and fell to the deck. The fog lifted. Yonder was Cape Hatteras lighthouse. The ship was put on the right course, and sailed on to the harbor of safety.

When in seaport the captain spends most of his time in evangelical work. He kneels down by one who has been helpless in the bed for many months, and the next day she walks forth in the streets well. He kneels beside one who has long been decrepit, and he resigns the crutches. He kneels beside one who had not seen enough to be able to read for ten years, and she reads the Bible that day. Consumptions go away, and those who had diseases that were appalling to behold come up to rapid convalescence and to complete health. I am not telling you anything second-handed. I have had the story from the lips of the patients in this very house, those who were brought to health of body while at the same time brought to God. No second-hand story this. I have heard the testimony from men and women who have been cured. You may call it faith-cure, or you may call it the power of God coming down in answer to prayer; I do not care what you call it; it is a fact. The scoffing sea captain, his heart full of hatred for Christianity, now becomes a follower of the meek and lowly Jesus, giving all the time to evangelical labors, or all the time he can spare from other occupations. That is regeneration, that is regeneration. Man all made over again.

"There is your absurd doctrine of vicarious sacrifice," say these men who have chewed up the little book of creeds and have the consequent embittered stomach. "Vicarious sacrifice! Let every man suffer for himself. Why do I want Christ to suffer for me? I'll suffer for myself and carry my own burdens." They scoff at the idea of vicarious sacrifice, while they admire it everywhere else except in Christ. People see its beauty when a mother suffers for her child. People see its beauty when a patriot suffers for his country. People see its beauty when a man denies himself for a friend. They can see the beauty of vicarious sacrifice in every one but Christ.

A young lady in one of the literary institutions was a teacher. She was very reticent and retired in her habits, and she formed no companionships in the new position she occupied, and her dress was very plain—sometimes it was very shabby. After a while she was discharged from the place for that reason, but no reason was given. In answer to the letter discharging her from the position, she said: "Well, if I have failed to please, I suppose it is my own fault." She went here and there for employment, and found none, and in desperation and in dementia she ended her life by suicide. Investigation was made and it was found that out of her small means she had supported her father, eighty years of age, and was paying the way for her brother in [illegible] on his way to the ministry. It was found that she had so [illegible] the bed that winter, and she had no fire on the very coldest day of all the season. People found it out, and there was a large gathering at the funeral, the largest ever at any funeral in that place, and the very people who had scoffed came and looked upon the pale face of the martyr, and all honor was done her; but it was too late. Vicarious sacrifice. All are thrilled with such instances as that. But many are not moved by the fact that Christ paid His poverty for our riches, His self-abnegation for our enthronement, and knelt on the sharp edges of humiliation that we might climb over His lacerated shoulder into peace and heaven.

Be it ours to admire and adore these doctrines at which others jeer. Oh the depths of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable is His wisdom, and His ways are past finding out! Oh the height, the depth, the length, the breadth, the infinity, the immensity, the eternity of that love! Let our earnest prayers go out in behalf of all those who scoff at these doctrines of grace. When the London plague was raging in the year 1665, there was a hotel near the chief burial-place that excited much comment. England was in fright and bereavement. The dead carts went through the streets day and night, and the cry: "Bring out your dead!" was answered by the bringing out of the forms of the loved ones, and they were put twenty or thirty in a cart, and the wagons went on to the cemetery; and these dead were not buried in graves, but in great trenches, in great pits; in one pit eleven hundred and fourteen burials! The carts would come up with their great burden of twenty or thirty to the mouth of the pit, and the front of the cart was lifted and the dead shot into the pit. All the churches in London were open for prayer day and night, and England was in great anguish. At that very time at a hotel, at a wayside inn near the chief burial-places, there was a group of hardened men, who sat day after day and night after night blaspheming God and imitating the grief-struck who went by to the burial-place. These men sat there day after day and night after night, and they scoffed at men, and they scoffed at women, and they scoffed at God. But after a while one of them was struck with the plague, and in two weeks all of the group were down in the trench from the margin of which they had uttered their ribaldry. My friends, a greater plague is abroad in the world. Millions have died of it. Millions are smitten with it now. Plague of sin, plague of sorrow, plague of wretchedness, plague of woe. And consecrated women and men from all Christendom are going out trying to stay the plague and alleviate the anguish, and there is a group of men in this country base enough to sit and deride the work. They scoff at the Bible, and they scoff at evangelism, and they scoff at Jesus Christ, and they scoff at God. If these words shall reach them, either while they are sitting here to-day, or through the printing-press, let me tell them to remember the fate of that group in the wayside inn while the plague spreads its two black wings over the doomed city of London. Oh, instead of being scoffers let us be disciples! "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful."

QUEER BIRDS.

LIVING IN FRIENDSHIP WITH ANIMALS.

A Subterranean Tenantry—The Feathered Friend of the Rhinoceros and the Faithful Channa.

There are few visitors to the country districts of this State who have not been amused by noticing the sedate antics of sundry sun-dried looking little owls who, perched upon the rail fence or near hillocks, bow gravely to the passers by. They are by no means shy, or, perhaps, their apparent want of timidity is due to their poor sight: at any rate they can be easily knocked over. When shot, however, they are found to be very poor game, not much better than carrion. As they stand blinking and ducking by the roadside they look to be quite a decent-sized bird, but when examined after being shot they are found to be 70 per cent. feathers. Worse than that, these feathers are full of lice, and altogether the owl is found to be a very dirty and disappointing game. Another peculiarity to be remarked concerning these birds is that they are always found in localities that are infested by gophers or prairie dogs, and a little patient observation will show that gophers and owls or prairie dogs and owls live together as a hybrid community.

The owl is known as the burrowing owl, and though anything but an attractive creature, is to be commended for the wisdom it has shown in the selection of its home. The hole of the prairie dog is quite a pleasant place, cool in summer and warm in winter, and that of the gopher is very much like it. From the entrance the passage into the mound descends vertically for one or two feet, and is thence continued obliquely downward, until it terminates in the living apartment. It is globular in form, and generally compactly lined with dried grass. What the exact terms of the community are, is not known, but it is evident that the members live on terms of peace and good will. It is certain, too, that the owls live intimately with the rodents, and that they lay their eggs and and bring up their young in the holes. Whether the rodents lay toll on the eggs for rent or the owls occasionally take a nip at the young squirrels or gophers cannot be said, but both suppositions are possible. It is a curious fact that the cry of the owl, cheh, cheh! pronounced several times in rapid succession, is that of the rodent with whom he associates and that some tutoring is evidently going on.

EUROPEAN CUCKOO.

The American burrowing owls are found west of the Rocky Mountains, being especially numerous on the plains of the great plateau. They are strictly diurnal and feed on grasshoppers, crickets and mice.

A much less agreeable bird is the cuckoo. Notwithstanding all the fine things that have been written about the "harbinger of spring," the cuckoo is a dissolute, dishonest and lazy bird. He never builds a nest for himself, but has the singular fashion of laying an egg in the most convenient nest of some other bird, leaving the care of the young one to the foster parents thus selected. Though the egg is rather a small one the young cuckoo grows rapidly and reaches a good size while the legitimate occupants of the nest are still unable to look after themselves. No sooner does the intruder attain its precocious strength than it proceeds to eject the other birdlings from the nest by taking them on its shoulders and throwing them bodily over the side of the nest. Being the sole baby it receives all the support of the family, gets every worm or bug the mother brings home, and soon gets big enough to get out and shift for itself. The nest selected by the cuckoo mother is that of a sparrow, finch or lark, and it is believed by Montague and others that she has the power to retain the egg in the oviduct until she can find a nest suitable for its reception.

The evil practices here related are, it is pleasant to observe, characteristic of the European and not of the American cuckoo, the latter bird building its own nest and rearing its young in the usual manner. It is painful, however, to have to admit that the nest is a very slovenly affair, being flat and composed of a few dry sticks and grass on a horizontal branch of a low tree, and it is still more painful to have to admit that it is given to the [illegible] of [illegible] the eggs of other birds, [illegible] in many respects it is no better than it should be.

Although so much has been written of the cuckoo by poets very little is known yet by naturalists. There are really more than forty well-defined species of the cuckoo, all of them being migratory. The most interesting is the European cuckoo, a bird about fourteen inches long and having a sweep of about twenty-five inches across the wings. The corners of the mouth and eyelids and the inside of the mouth are of an orange color. The plumage of the head, neck, breast and upper parts is a deep bluish gray; the under parts and the auxiliary feathers are white with distinct black bars; the quills are blackish gray; the tail is darker, approaching to black at the end, and often with a dark green gloss, tipped with white, and each feather marked along the shaft with triangular white spots; the feet are yellow and the bill black. The female very closely resembles the male. It arrives from Southern Europe in Great Britain in April, and generally departs in August. It is very generally distributed over Europe, decreasing in numbers toward the north and going southward as far as Africa. The well-known notes of the bird are heard in the breeding season, and very much resemble its name. The song is loud and joyful, confined to the males, and silent before the departure of the birds. The cuckoo's food consists of the larvæ of insects and caterpillars, but before swallowing the latter it cuts the hinder end and frees the body from the intestinal canal by repeated jerks with its sharp bill. The males are more numerous than the females, and are bold and fierce. In autumn they are fat, the ancients killing and eating them at that time, although it would now almost be considered a sacrilege to eat a cuckoo even when at its plumpest.

The American cuckoo is a smaller bird, seldom longer than twelve and one-half inches or wider across the wings than sixteen inches. The general color of the bird's back and wings is a light greenish brown, the under parts being grayish white. They are shy birds, frequenting the dense woods and solitary swamps. The notes resemble the word "Cowcow," repeated several times with increasing rapidity, hence one of its names; it is also called the rain crow and cowcow. Its food consists of caterpillars, insects, wood snails and berries. Its flight is rapid, but its gait on the ground is very awkward. It is found in all parts of the United States, though nowhere in great numbers; but there is another cuckoo, called the mangrove cuckoo, which is rarely seen out of Florida.

SECRETARY BIRD.

Intruder and dishonest as the cuckoo is, he is a positive gentleman beside the crow. The crow is a born thief—a petty larcenist of the worst description. He devours the eggs of the birds as a matter of principle. He murders a weak or wounded bird with malignity. He delights to worry the owl and to tease the opossum or racoon is his daily recreation. Even when brought into domesticity, as it easily can be, it displays considerable intelligence, but it will steal everything it can lay its hands on, from a door-mat to a silver teaspoon. It will eat fresh meat when it is to be had, but when this is not procurable it never hesitates to eat carrion or to begin upon any animal that is soon likely to be. In this respect his habit seems the same in all countries, and there can be nothing more heartless than the way in which he hurries up to the moribund. Whenever he sees an animal lying on the ground he soon collects all his comrades in the vicinity. One of the boldest hops upon the animal's body; hops slowly toward its head and looks inquiringly into its eyes. If the animal is able to defend itself, he removes the dangerous friend by a shake of the head; but if the eyes be dim from disease or wounds, the crow perceives it, and plunging its powerful bill into the eyeball of the sufferer, digs it out and feasts upon his favorite morsel. At his signal the rest join in the attack and are busy at the animal's entrails as quick as one could say Jack Robinson. Like the burrowing owl, the crow is very fond of the society of other animals, his favorite being the sheep and cow. The motives are not the same, however, and it requires but very little watching to find that all the [illegible] is simply [illegible]. The sheep is afflicted with ticks and the cow with skin worms, both nice fat morsels, and master crow is after these. With his sharp, strong bill he digs out the parasite, and with the extent of this crop his interest in Mary's little lamb comes to an end.

It is for no such sordid motives as these that the buphaga has struck up a friendship for that heavy and mischievous beast the rhinocerous. This bird, a small white one, is the best, if not the only friend owned by the thick skinned unicorn. It makes a harsh cry in the ear of the sleeping rhinocerous, which awakening rushes off into the forest to escape the hunter. As the animal scampers off the bird perches on his back, returning when frightened or swept off by the branches, and remains with it all night. Sir Gordon Cumming says he has often shot the rhinoceros at midnight at fountains, and that these faithful birds, imagining their lumpy friend was asleep, would remain until morning, and on his approaching, before taking flight, would try to awaken him from his deep sleep.

AMERICAN BURROWING OWL.

There are two other kinds that entertain a peculiar affection for animals, the screamer and the secretary. The first is naturally a wading bird of South America, so named from the loudness and shrillness of the voice. The screamer to be particularly noticed is that known as the faithful channa. It is nearly three feet long of a blackish lead color. The head is adorned with a circle of erectile plumes, and it possesses the singular power of inflating the skin of the body and legs with air. So puffed up and with the plumes erected it is quite an imposing bird, and as its courage quite bears out its appearance, it is no mean adversary in a fight. The Paraguayans domesticate the channa, and then make of it a shepherd. In this capacity it is of great service, and it is quite capable of driving off a wolf, often laying down its life in defense of the flock.

The secretary bird is a rapacious creature, with a particular aptitude for killing reptiles. The stout wings are armed with a stout spur, the legs scaled, and the general color bluish gray. It takes its name from a long erectile crest on the back of the head, which when depressed looks like a pen stuck behind a clerk's ear. The birds are natives of Africa, are usually seen in pairs, and seem to make a business of devouring serpents. When attacking a snake they approach with one wing extended and acting as a shield to the body, and with the other strike the reptile, wounding it with the spur, and tossing it into the air and safely wearing out the most venomous species. They also eat lizards, tortoises, rats, small birds and large insects. Their voracity is remarkable, Le Vaillant mentioning that he took from the crop of one eleven good-sized lizards, three serpents as long as his arm, eleven small tortoises and a number of insects. The natives domesticate them and place them in the poultry yard, where they watch over the fowls with all the care of a mother tending her chickens.

The Chinese have trained that gluttonous bird, the cormorant, to fish for them, and it will be an interesting task for the amateur student of natural history to add to the list furnished in this article of birds which, contrary to the general custom, are more at home with strangers than those of their kind.—San Francisco Chronicle.

A Wood Splitter.

Mr. W. E. Hathaway, of New Bedford, Mass., has the credit of devising a very ingenious machine for splitting wood. It consists of a knife attached to a heavy vertical bar, which at its upper end is fastened to an eccentric in turn connected by shafting driven by an electric motor. By means of Mr. Hathaway's invention several [illegible] split faster than four men could do it with an ax. In other words, [illegible] an application of the well known [illegible] that lightning splits trees.

The negro captured in Kentucky by Phil Givhan and reporter Cann, of the Age-Herald, turns out to be an important witness in the Hawes murder case. He is still in jail in Birmingham. Six parties have been indicted by the grand jury as accessory to the crime.

The Lawson election bill appears to be the least of two evils. The implication that it is unconstitutional appears absurd. The present system under which we hold elections could be more reasonably attacked upon that score. The present system is pernicious and is in much disfavor in this part of the State.

There is less drunkenness in the professions nowadays than ever before in the world's history. There are fewer drinking clergymen, fewer drinking lawyers, fewer drinking journalists fewer drinking statesmen. Temperance is recognized not only as a virtue but as an element of success in professional life. The young man who tries to accelerate his progress by alchohol makes the greatest mistake of his life.—Atlanta Herald.

Having let the State Fair slip from her grasp, Montgomery is agitating the question of holding a Home Exposition. A local paper says: "Our citizens would no doubt subscribe liberally to a Fair to be conducted on an enlightened plan and in accordance with their views of propriety." This no doubt means that if a fair is hold John Barleycorn will occupy a choice seat in the dress circle.—Coosa Advocate.

The wild Irishman of the Blount county News thus jocosely remarks:

If we judge by the Birmingham newspapers the coming State Fair to be held at Birmingham next October will be a wonderful thing. A little less axaggeration on the part of the press of that city would be commendable and tend to make the outside world less incredulous when matters of fact are laid before it. We say all this in true kindness but we want the people and press of Birmingham to remember that Boston not Birmingham is the hub of the universe.

The Talladega county alliance, at its recent meeting declared:

"From observation and information obtained, we learn that almost without an exception those who raise their own supplies and stock on the farm to do the farm, are prosperous, and they are the men who have the cash to pay when they buy. They who make little else but cotton and corn to rely upon are they who meet with disappointment in their farm management."

The esteemed Linden Reporter joins the Dispatch in the belief that there is a certain class of foreigners that should be kept away from Alabama.

"The negroes do outnumber the whites in central Alabama, and the race question is a serious one, But what would be the result if a large number of puritan fanatics and European socialist were suddenly to settle here among our half civilized and excitable negro population? With whom are these wished-for immigrants to associate and amalgamate? If with the whites what will be our social condition and political status?"

The Courier-Journal says, in reference to the Wallace election law in force in that city that it "is in all its essential features the model of nearly every bill that has received popular or professional endorsement. It denies to no man the right to vote once; it protects the unbought voter from the effects of a purchasable bill; it insures access to the polls to the humblest citizen but the purchaser and bulldozer. * * * At the two elections held under it there was an entire lack of confusion or disorder and as the officers or voters become familiar with it our elections will take on their true dignity. It is evident already that in the matter of suffrage we have taken a long step in advance." This law is on the Australian plan and embodies the same general principles as the Lawson election bill now pending before the Alabama Legislature.

Draw the Lines.

The opponents of the ballot reform measure known as the Lawson bill must be hard pressed for arguments when they resort to so flimsy a subterfuge as the plea that the measure is unconstitutional. The Advertiser of Sunday published a card over the Signature of "A Democrat of Democrats," in which this absurd plea was set up and the paper made editorial reference to the writer as a lawyer of established reputation throughout the State. Nevertheless, the proposition is an affront to common sense and unworthy of men engaged in the discussion of a serious question. If this be the only objection they can muster up they had better fall into line as advocates of the Lawson bill without further ado.

The clause of the constitution quoted by the "Democrat of Democrats" and learned jurist, is this:

"No educational or property qualification for suffrage or office nor any restraint upon the same on account of race color or previous condition of servitude shall be made by law."

Everybody will admit that the Lawson bill does not expressly prescribe any educational or property qualification. Why then is it unconstitutional?

To come nearer home however why not attack the existing election law on the same ground? How can a man who is unable to read be truly said to vote under our present law? He is given a ticket but if he cannot read how does he know whether it is the ticket of his choice? The only reply to this is that he can get some one to tell him; and that of course is what actually happens. But in this event who really does the voting the ignorant man who goes through the form of depositing the ballot or the educated man on the faith of whose assurance he does so?—Montgomery Dispatch.

Benson Points.

Owing to the continued bad weather farmers have done very little farm work.

Prof. A. H. Hunter's school is now full and he is doing a good work for the community.

Rev. D. L. Lindsay occupied the pulpit of the M. E. church at this place last Sunday.

Capt. Tom Rasberry is doing a fine business at his new store.

The many friends of Messrs. Wright and Veasey will be glad to learn they each, since the burning of their large residence, by the assistance of a sympathizing community, have built a nice neat cottage and are now domiciled in them.

The high price of flour has caused several of our farmers to sow wheat and we would like for those who make it their business to corner wheat, coffee, sugar and jute to know that we have a little corner over here and propose to take care of ourselves.

As a good result from the advance in price of guano some of our farmers have determined to make their own fertilizer. One of our energetic farmers, Mr. William Deshazo has handled one hundred loads of top earth and leaves and is composting it for guano, this is a demonstration of pluck and energy. May many of our farmers imitate the example.

Remember farmers that guano is made to sell to you and you can set the price by standing back and not using until it gets in paying reach of you.

Letter from Texas.

CORSICANA, TEX., Jan. 23, 1889.

Mr. W. H. Lawrence: Dear Sir—I have for some time been receiving your newsy paper. You can't tell how much I appreciate our town paper and how I long for its coming. It is like seeing a friend every week from home to tell me what every one is saying and doing.

I will give you a few items of news from this State. Crops here were shorter last year than they have been for ten years. There was a shortage in the cotton crop of about 50,000 bales in this Navarro county. Wet weather prevented planting early, and when planted the worms destroyed it entirely, necessitating a second planting which did not have time to mature before frost.

I suppose you are aware that Gen. R. Q. Mills, the great tariff bill congressman, is a resident of Corsicana. He seems to be in some disrepute here in Texas, among the better class, owing to the part he took in the last election. He was a consistent member of the church and a warm advocate of the W. C. T. U., but finding that he was on the losing side he performed a complete political somersault landing on the other side. He was the principal mourner at the obsequies of prohibtion. He had a coffin prepared marked prohibition and carried it through the streets followed by a crowd of men dressed in woman's apparel in derision of the temperance ladies of the town. It has been raining here terrifically for ten days and every thing is flooded.

Give my compliments to the "devil," and with best wishes for your self and your paper, I remain,

Yours truly,

W. F. M.

The Lawson Election Bill.

[Tallapoosa New Era.]

The Lawson election bill should by all means become a law in Alabama and that at this session of the Legislature. Just such a law is needed in this State to settle the negro in politics, and besides it will go a long way towards putting the counties upon a fair basis of representation in the State conventions. There is nothing in the bill to prevent anybody from voting and under such a law the true voice of the people will oftentener be heard at the polls. Under the Lawson bill no man is allowed to attempt to influence the vote of another at the polls and the voter must fix his own ticket. If he can't fix it, it is his job and no one else is allowed to haul him to the polls and vote him, like driving sheep into a slaughter pen. By all means give us the Lawson bill; if but for the sake of an experiment.

Lawyer—And so you really think Bobby of becoming a lawyer when you grow up?

Bobby—Yes, sir; my Uncle James thinks I ought to be a lawyer.

"Does he indeed? and why does your Uncle James think so—because you are bright and smart?"

"No, sir; because I ask so many fool questions."—Texas Siftings.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

The governor has appointed J. W. Stewart a justice of the peace for beat 8 Chilton county.

The Board of Revenue have a notice in this week's paper which is important to parties having claims against the county.

Mr. W. W. Wilson has opened up a new stock of goods at his store on Main Street in Clanton. We wish him unlimited success.

Messrs. A. D, Bentley and E. V. Jones, of Rockford, were in town Friday and Saturday according to appointment, and were kept busy loaning out their dollars.

Cards are out announcing the marriage of Mr. J. R. Hill to Miss Minnie Givhan at Jemison on the 17th inst. We tender congratulation in advance of the happy event.

The young people of Clanton are anticipating a pleasant time to-night at the valentine party, which will be given at the residence of Mr. W. L. Sampey by the young ladies.

We received a pleasant call Monday from Dr. A. M. Rambo, of Verbena. He has located in our county to practice dentistry and has a card in the VIEW to which the attention of the public is called.

We are sure that our good neighbor, 'Squire Collier, duly appreciates the high compliment paid him by the Alabama Baptist last week. The moral which it was made to point made it all the more creditable to him.

Read the new double column advertisement of Mr. W. H. Burton dealer in fancy and family groceries. Mr. Burton solicits a share of public patronage which we bespeak for him, and trust that it may fall to him liberally.

New Goods.

I have now in stock a fresh supply of clothing at very low prices and also a full line of shoes guaranteed as represented and the prices are not to be beat in this market. A new feature in my grocery department is an open store of the best leaf Lard. Send your cans or buckets and get pure lard, no cotton seed oil and tallow.

W. L. SAMPEY.

Mr. R. C. Duke made a business trip to Birmingham Monday.

The few valentines remaining will be sold cheap to-day. Call and look at them and purchase.

Jno. Smith, the barber, has changed his base of operations again. He carried his restaurant along with him.

Tresslar, the Montgomery Photographer, has renewed his advertising with the VIEW. He is a first class workman, Try him for good pictures.

Among the farmers in town Saturday was J. R. Kemp, of Kincheon. He is one of the kind that doesn't want to and doesn't have to borrow money. We wish the county was full of that sort.

Dentistry.

A. M. Rambo, resident dentist at Verbena will visit Clanton on Monday, 18th inst., prepared to practice dentistry in all departments.

There are twins at Duke's mill three weeks old weighing 2656 pounds. They are the largest twins we ever saw. They are as polite as you please, and are bowing and nodding all the time. Go and see them.

One of the negro burglars brought down from Jemison charged with robbing two stores at that place has been given a preliminary hearing and discharged for want of evidence to convict. The other is still in jail.

The Courthouse Bond Bill.

The county board of revenue met Monday and were also in session Tuesday. We learned from members of the board that the court house bond bill introduced in the Senate by Senator Parker is not a project of the board of revenue, and that the board has no idea of imposing a tax for building a new court house now. They thought the bill a good one to act under in the future. In the event of burning of the court house, such a law would give the board of revenue authority to act in the emergency, and by extending the bonds over a period of ten years would enable a new court house to be built without the increased taxation being seriously felt by the tax payers. There is now no provision for such an emergency. The bill is evidently a wise measure and ought to become a law. Any early increase of taxation under it is not probable.

Bringing Gladness

To millions, pleasing their palates and cleansing their systems, arousing their Livers, Kidneys, Stomachs and Bowels to a healthy activity. Such is the mission of the famous California liquid fruit remedy, Syrup of Figs. For sale in 50 cents and $1.00 bottles. jul19

The Shelby county board of revenue sent a member to Clanton with a claim against Chilton county for $500 as our pro rata for building the new bridge across Waxahatchie creek on the county line. The Chilton board of revenue forthwith sent a member to inspect the bridge and report upon its condition and value. The report to be received at the next meeting of our board in April.

The "devil" that we have stationed at our office is undoubtedly the "biggest case" this side of the Texas Siftings office. He is only 11 years old and sets type amazing, chews tobacco, eats dirt, tells lies to subscribers, and in fact is an all round do as you please devil. We need him in our business and he can't be bought for any price.—Abbeville Times.

A man who wanted to learn what profession he would have his son enter put him in a room with a Bible, an apple and a dollar bill. If he found him when he returned reading the Bible, he would make a clergyman of him if eating the apple, a farmer; and if interested in the dollar bill, a banker. When he returned he found the boy sitting on the Bible with the dollar bill in his pocket, and the apple almost devoured. He made a politician of him.—Greensboro Watchman.

I have purchased the drug business of W. H. Phillips in Clanton, and will continue the business at the same stand.

I shall also keep a stock of extra quality family groceries. I shall handle none but the very best articles, and my customers can rely upon getting pure, fresh goods.

Legislature.

A bill to repeal an act to amend section 1544 so far as it applies to the counties of Blount, Cullman, Cleburne, Washington, Coosa, Autauga, St. Clair, Elmore, Marshall, Dale and Chilton approved March 1, 1881; so far as it relates to beat 1, Chilton county was read and lost.

The bill has reference to the sale of liquor. The section of the code (1544) prescribes that a majority of the householders and freeholders of a beat shall sign a petition asking for license to sell liquors before a license can be granted. The present legislature is evidently in favor of temperance and prohibition.

Senator Parker has introduced in the Senate the Chilton county court of revenue bill. It is not known whether he will support the bill.

The bill has passed creating a new supreme court judgeship for the State.

The bill for the election of County Superintendents of Education by the people has become a law.

We have a speedy and positive cure for Catarrh, Diptheria, Canker Mouth, in Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. A Nasal Injector free with each bottle. Use it if you desire health and sweet breath. Price 50 cents. Sold by A. E. Bivings, Clanton, Ala.

Let us Hear from the Teachers.

ED. CHILTON VIEW:—There seems to be a great interest just now on the school subject in our county. Do you think it of enough importance to allow the County Superintendent, Township Superintendents, Teachers, and others interested in education a column in your paper through which to reach the people? I think our county paper the best medium; and that through it the people can be inspired to better and longer schools. Let us use it for the general good and not as an advertiser for local communities.

TEACHER.

O, What a Cough.

Will you heed the warning. The signal perhaps of the sure approach of that more terrible disease, Consumption Ask yourselves if you can afford, for the sake of saving 50 cents, to run the risk and do nothing for it. We know from experience that Shiloh's Cure will cure your cough. It never fails. This explains why more than a million bottles were sold the past year. It relieves croup and Whooping Cough at once. Mothers do not be without it. For lame back, side or chest, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by A. E. Bivings, Clanton.

Dyspepsia and Lver Complaint.

Is it not worth the small price of 75 cents to free yourself of every symptom of these distressing complaints, if you think so call at our store and get a bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. Every bottle has a printed guarantee on it, use accordingly, and if it does you no good, it will cost you nothing. Sold by A. E. Bivings, Clanton.

SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT.

When physicians fail to give relief in cases of chronic ailments, resulting from poison blood, how gratifying to the sufferer to obtain at last the right remedy. Where every other treatment miserably fails to cure, Botanic Blood Balm invariably gains a victory.

SAN SABA, TEXAS, February 9, 1882.

AGRICULTURAL.

TOPICS OF INTEREST RELATIVE TO FARM AND GARDEN.

To Pit Potatoes.

First clean the ground and pile up the potatoes in a cone; then place rye straw on the cone with butts on the ground; then dig a trench all round the pile and put the earth on the straw till you get to the top of the cone; then leave a small part without earth for ventilation through the tops of the straw where they meet together. Place straw on the earth, and put straw ropes on to hold it in place. Over all put a straw cap, made by putting a band on a bundle of straw near the butt and putting it on the cone, fixing it in place with straw ropes. To make the ropes a wisp of straw is put round the end of a hand rake, turn the rake, spin the rope, and when long enough take the loop off the rake and peg it to the ground. Pass the rope round and over the cone. The potatoes always keep well.—New York Herald.

Butter Packed in Brine.

Last season we packed our surplus butter on the following plan and found when we sold in December, when the butter was unpacked for sale, it came out just as fresh and well tasted as it was when packed. We adopted the following method: Bought new pork barrels, scalded them thoroughly with boiling water three different times, the last time covered the barrel with a cloth to keep in the steam. Let stand until the water cools, then rinse out the barrel with cold water and the barrel is ready for use. We made a strong brine by boiling that would float an egg, skimmed off any scum that was on top and let it stand over night. In the morning the brine would be as clear as crystal. Butter was salted in the usual way, one ounce to the pound. Made into five to six pound rolls, wrapped carefully up in cheesecloth and tied with cotton wrapping twine to keep the cloth in place. The rolls were then packed into the barrels and covered with the brine and kept covered. The air was not allowed to come in contact with it again until unpacked. And my opinion is, right here is where the secret lies; in keeping the air excluded no foul odors can get to it. Some might think the butter would get too salty in such strong brine. Not one bit of danger if the butter has been properly handled before going into the barrel. We make our butter on the granular plan and press it solidly together. As I informed you in my article on butter-making last season, we packed several barrels in this way, and it was in the brine four or five months, and not a fault found to a pound of it. I have no doubt that butter packed in this way can be shipped to any market in the United States or Europe if ordinary care is taken not to let it lie exposed to the hot sun. Butter can be packed in this way in firkins or any vessel that will hold the brine.—Hoard's Dairyman.

A Study of Shingling.

In my youth I helped to take down a barn which my father inherited from his mother, and which had stood forty years without reshingling. The shingles were of a style long gone out of use, 4 ft. 4 in. long, laid 2 ft. to the weather, with a narrow edge lap, and fastened with only one nail to each shingle upon narrow hewn ribs, 2 ft. apart, from centre to centre. The shingles were shaven thin, except the lap-edge of the exposed portion, and the roof, when new, was not over about half an inch thick in the thickest parts. But these shingles, after forty years of exposure, still shed water well, and were almost as sound as when laid, except immediately upon the ribs. This experience led to a sort of life-long study of roofs. I have seen shingles laid upon closely-matched boards; into freshly-laid mortar; over paper; over old shingles upon very narrow ribs, and all the way from three thicknesses to more than four and a half. My belief is that shingles laid upon narrow ribs, so as to expose the under side of them to the free circulation of air, and just as much to the weather as is possible and properly cover all the joints, will last longer and do better service than those laid by any of the more expensive methods. I believe there is a double economy in thin roofs.

Reshingling by laying new shingles over the old ones is a not infrequent practice, but false economy. In sight of where I sit is a building so treated, but the entire roof went to rapid decay and was removed in a very few years. During the past year an article on "laying shingles" was widely published and met with much approval, evidently because of the learned manner in which the writer, a Michigan man, makes it as clear as mud that by laying 18-inch shingles only 4 inches to the weather a very large saving is effected. Of course, if three courses of shingles are laid in place of two the roof must be 50 per cent. thicker and must cost 50 per cent. more for shingles, nails and labor. How anybody but a shingle-maker or dealer can figure an economy out of that is beyond my comprehension, but the writer claims to do it, and many people claim to be able to see it. In laying 18-inch shingles 6 inches to the weather, with well-broken joints, every joint in the exposed course has two thicknesses of shingles under it, and I never knew such a roof to leak a drop. The extra 50 per cent. of shingles is not only a needless waste but it causes a more rapid decay of the shingles, and more frequent reshingling becomes a necessity.—New York Tribune.

Farm and Garden Notes

Roup and diphtheria are much the same—the result of colds.

A dairy cow must be made comfortable or you will get but little milk.

There is no question but that fecundity can be increased by breeding and selection.

In winter skim milk is good for the calves after they have past their second month.

One bushel of shelled corn is equal to two cubic feet of good, sound, dry corn in the ear.

An application of dry manure, it is said, will stop the bleeding of wounds on stock.

A small dish of charcoal placed in your meat larder will keep the articles sweet and wholesome almost as well as ice.

A box containing a peck of freshly-burnt lime, placed in a damp cellar, will absorb the moisture and keep the cellar dry.

If water will freeze in your hen-house it is too cold and you cannot make your hens profitable for their eggs this winter.

A dairyman whose object has been to make "butter as good as it could be made" without reference to cost or any other consideration, testifies that it has paid him a remarkable profit.

Large numbers of ducks are now raised in small yards with no water but that in the drinking vessels, and they thrive and do wonderfully well. The Pekin is the most popular variety for this purpose.

HOUSEHOLD MATTERS.

Rice Cooked to Perfection.

Rice should be cooked in a milk boiler, then there is no danger of scorching. There are many methods of cooking this, and it is often served as a vegetable. We have found the easiest way the following: Wash one cup of rice and put on to cook with two cups of cold water and a level teaspoonful of salt. Cover and keep constantly cooking, and at the end of one hour it is ready for the table, every kernel perfect and soft. Do not stir it; it breaks the kernels. It is a good plain dessert, especially for delicate stomachs, with or without sugar and cream and raisins.—New York Observer.

Sovereign Food for Invalids.

Milk is the sovereign food upon which physicians depend to nourish their patients through serious illness. Go into the room of the average patient, and you will find somewhere in it—on a chair, at the head of the bed, on the "window sill," or a convenient table—milk which has been standing in its glass for a longer or shorter time, possibly for some hours. To leave milk in the sick room is one of the worst habits a nurse can have, and only the most slovenly are ever guilty of it. When your patient wants milk, go to the chest, or suitable place where it is kept, and pour out into a glass made as clean as possible, the quantity which you think is needed—no more. Let him take what he wants, and then at once throw what remains away, and wash out the glass. Never leave it in the sick room a minute. The same rule hold good with all invalid food.—Brooklyn Citizen.

Starching Clothes.

Prepare the starch for the linen by allowing one tablespoonful of good starch to each shirt, collar and pair of cuffs to be starched, and dissolving it in a little cold water. Add a little dissolved blueing and a small piece of laundry wax. A favorite substitute for the wax is made by melting together equal parts each of spermaceti, white wax and paraffine into a cake, and adding a small piece of this. It at once prevents the polishing-irons from sticking, and aids in securing a polish.

Stir this dissolved starch, and pour boiling water over it until it is clear but stiff. Make this starch much thinner by the addition of water, for starching dresses, skirts, aprons and laces.

To starch shirts, collars or cuffs, lay the piece to be starched on a clean, smooth board, and rub in all the stiff starch it will absorb. Rub off superfluous starch on the right side and hang up to dry, as free from wrinkles as possible, either in the sun or near a hot fire. —Youth's Companion.

A Model Kitchen.

It is possible nowadays, says an authority, by spending money lavishly, so to build a kitchen that the most ingenious of servants cannot keep it otherwise than clean. One need not waste upon her unappreciative soul the costly tiles with which one lines the bath room, but may substitute for them the glazed bricks that are as highly polished, and that will make the floor, the chimney, the walls, if desired, and even the ceiling, as easy to clean as a breakfast plate. Once built, no whitewasher and no painter would be needed for such a room, no smoke need cling to its walls for an instant, and no odor of cooking would be perceptible in it, even if it were used for generations. And the temperature of such a room need not reach the great height unavoidable with plastered walls, which permit the warmth of the chimney to be perceptible through their surface, and thus both the good health and the good temper of the cook would be maintained. As for coloring, such a kitchen may be precisely what one pleases, for the bricks are made in all hues, and they may be laid in patterns or in wide surfaces of one tint from floor to ceiling. Lastly, as such a room would be fireproof, a sliding or swinging iron door would so isolate it that no kerosene-quickened fire and no careless upsetting of lard could bring destruction to the room itself of which a little water would not clear it.—Scientific American.

Recipes.

GINGER COOKIES.—Two cups of molasses, one cup of melted lard, one of boiling water, three spoonfuls of ginger, with flour enough to make a stiff dough. Roll thin and bake in a quick oven.

MUFFINS.—One pint of milk, two beaten eggs, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, two teaspoonfuls of cream tartar, one teaspoonful of soda, flour enough to make a batter that will drop from the spoon.

BROWN BREAD.—Two cups of molasses, two cups of buttermilk, two cups of corn meal, one and one-half cups of white flour, three cups of brown flour, two heaping teaspoonfuls of soda. Cover up as air tight as possible in a mold, and boil hard for three hours.

HASHED POTATOES.—Cut some cold boiled potatoes into small slices, butter a shallow baking dish, put in potatoes about half an inch deep, sprinkle with pepper, salt and bits of butter, pour enough milk over to cover them all and bake in a brisk oven till quite brown.

WHITE MOUNTAIN CAKE.—Two cups of sugar, one cup of butter, one cup of sweet milk, four eggs, four cups of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Cream butter and sugar together, add the beaten yolks, then the milk, flour with the baking powder sifted through it, and last the beaten whites. Flavoring. Bake in one loaf.

BROWNED CAULIFLOWER.—Beat together two eggs, a little salt, four tablespoons of sweet cream, and a small quantity of grated bread crumbs well moistened with a little milk, until of the consistency of batter. Steam the cauliflower until it is tender, but not fallen to pieces. Separate it into small bunches, dip each top in the prepared mixture, and place in nice order in pudding dish. Brown in an oven, and serve hot.

STEAMED SPINACH.—Wash well and put it into a saucepan, after it has been well drained. Add no water but cover the pan closely and cook until done. Then take it from the pan, chop fine, adding half a cup of cream or milk, and a tablespoonful of butter; return to saucepan and cook three minutes longer adding a little ham essence, if you have it. If not it is quite good without. Serve and garnish with hard-boiled eggs cut in slices.

MASHED POTATOES WITH BACON.—Cut into a saucepan, in small pieces, one-quarter of a pound of bacon and an onion and place over the fire. Tie together several branches of parsley, one of thyme, two bay leaves, placing within a couple of cloves, and when the onion commences to color place these in the saucepan and pour in one pint of water. Wash, peel, and cut in quarters eight potatoes, season with a pinch of pepper and nutmeg, and add these to the contents of the pan. When the potatoes are thoroughly cooked remove the parsley with its seasoning, mash the potatoes well in the pan, and this dish is prepared.

WOMAN'S WORLD.

PLEASANT LITERATURE FOR FEMININE READERS.

Education of Japanese Women.

The better class of Japanese women are by no means uneducated. They receive, I am told, a better training than the women of any other Oriental nation, and they are better treated than those of any other Asiatic nation. The Japanese girl can, as a rule, read and write Japanese. She learns all about household matters, and she takes the whole charge of the household. This is her sphere, and she is known as the honorable mistress of the household. Her husband has no right to be meddling with the cooking stove. She pays the servants and the market bills. In the case of the poorer merchants she often acts as one of the clerks in the stores and takes the place of the husband when he is not present. In the country you will find her often working in the fields, and at Nikko I saw great numbers of women who acted as the leaders of pack horses carrying copper and goods up and down the mountains. Still, I think the women here have an easier time than those of the lower classes of Germany or Holland, and you see fewer labor-hardened faces among the other sex here than you do in many of the countries of Europe.

The wife is, however, after all but little better than a servant of the husband, and the ties of marriage and divorce are here so loose that he can dispense with her at pleasure Marriage in Japan is not attended with the solemnity and religious ceremony of the American wedding. It is a civil contract and the negotiations for it go on, as a rule, through the parents. The young man and woman have no preliminary courtship, and the seeing one another for one or two times is the only chance they have of deciding whether there is any compatibility of temperament.—Frank G. Carpenter.

Successful American Women.

About ten years ago a family consisting of mother and three daughters came to Paris from the United States for the purpose of educating the girls and giving them special advantages in the work which they had undertaken. The mother was American, the father, then deceased, a German, but the daughters, who were very young at this time, were thoroughly American in pluck, and in their determination to get on and make the most of their opportunities. I will pass over the years of trial and struggle this brave little family endured before they began to experience the benefit of their many sacrifices, or before they began to meet with the recognition their talents deserved. To-day, however, one daughter is a rising artist with a much praised picture in last year's salon, for which she received "honorable mention;" the second daughter is the only woman physician in France who has been admitted to the most famous surgical hospital here in Paris, and is now the wife of a distinguished young scientist, who takes her name with his own. The third girl —a charming young woman she is, too —chose astronomy for her profession, and is at this moment the only woman employed at the observatory here; in fact, the only one of her sex who has been intrusted with the responsible position of an "observing" astronomer regularly employed by the Government. This is an uncommon record for one family, especially so in a country where the progress of women in the higher professions is still viewed with surprise, and any advance outside of the beaten tracks thought revolutionary, not to say unfeminine, in the extreme.—Boston Herald.

Nature's Cosmetic.

No surer preventive of wrinkles or a worn-looking skin can be obtained than sleep at the proper times or at odd moments, but of course this does not apply to the sleep obtained by artificial means. Healthful and natural slumber is of all remedies for a skin prematurely old the best, and the society belle who has the good of her complexion at heart will contrive a regular rest daily, if possible at a stated hour. One of the most famous beauties of the day, the wife of a well-known artist, and whose social life is not altogether one of inclination, since there are actual duties involved in it, told me that she made it a rule to sleep daily after her afternoon exercises from six to seven, arising refreshed and ready for the duties of the evening, while she was certain that the delicate texture of her skin had been preserved by this means. Certain it is that at forty years of age this woman has the peculiar bloom of a girl of twenty. "Beauty sleep" is only so-called because among the women of the Orient the practice of early sleep at night was cultivated, and in Paris there are few belles who do not take a siesta before attending a ball. Of course, the busy houskeeper will smile at suggestions which her home and often her nursery make impossible, but I am inclined to think that with a little effort even such a one could contrive a brief period of rest which might recuperate not only the complexion but the spirits of the governing head of the house.—Philadelphia Times.

Fashion Notes.

Only black crocheted buttons are used.

Twisted wire bracelets are again in vogue.

Cloth is a favorite material for day dresses.

Large silver waist buckels are a fancy of the hour.

Parisiennes are again wearing long pendant earrings.

India cashmere in white or some light tint is a favorite cloth.

Velvet by the yard is a good substitute for galloons and appliques.

Pale almond-colored brocade, made up in conjunction with golden-brown velvet, is a late French fancy.

A tasty cloak is of white and gold brocade lined with pink plush and adorned with pink marabout bands.

Black furs are much used on wraps, cloaks, jackets, and redingotes of Roman red, moss green, terra cotta, or reseda.

Dinner gowns are made in various fashions, with low jackets and sleeves, with V-shaped bodices and with the classic draperies.

Quilting is being largely introduced into children's garments, especially the old-fashioned patterns, such as the diamond medical wool.

The fancy for green extends to dinner costumes, many of the handsomest being of that color, or combining green with copper red, Venetian pink, old rose or black.

The richest black costumes are made of brocaded silk, in combination with faille peau de soie, or plain velvet. The plain material is always used for the lower skirt.

The large, square knee buckles of the olden time are utilized as belt buckles by young ladies who are so fortunate as to gain possession of these ornaments of their ancestors.

America's Finest Aqueducts.

Up to the present time the finest aqueduct in use in America is the Croton; but this will be surpassed by the new aqueduct now in course of construction on lines parallel with it. The Croton aqueduct was begun in 1837 and finished in 1842, at a cost, including the means of distribution, of $10,875,000. The length of the conduit from the impounding to the receiving reservoirs in the Central Park is 38½ miles, for 88 of which the conduit is built of stone, brick and cement, arched above and below, is 8 feet and 5 inches high, 6¼ feet wide at the bottom and 7½ at the top. The water crosses Harlem River in two cast-iron pipes 3 feet in diameter, and one wrought iron pipe 7 feet 6 inches in diameter laid upon High Bridge in magnificent granite arcades 1460 feet long and 114 high. High Bridge comprises fifteen arches, seven of which have fifty feet span and eight of those over the river eighty feet span. The greatest capacity of the aqueduct is 115,000,000 gallons per day, but for the first six years after its completion the water used was only 18,000,000 gallons per day. Twelve years ago the daily supply had risen to 88,000,000 gallons and at the present time it is between 95,000,000 and 100,000,000 gallons. It has long, however, been inadequate to the demands of the city, with its ever growing population, and about four years ago work was commenced on the new aqueduct, which is now nearly completed. The trouble up to the present time has been not so much with the Croton aqueduct as with the supply of water. The supply is drawn from Croton River, a stream that flows into the Hudson a short distance above Sing Sing. The river was arrested by a dam forty feet high, and made to form what has since been called Croton Lake. For the purpose of the new aqueduct, it has been decided to collect the entire water supply of the Croton water-shed, and for this purpose three more dams are building across the Croton and subsidiary valleys. The length of the new aqueduct from the impounding reservoirs to the receiving reservoirs is thirty-three and one-eighth miles, and the water, instead of being carried over the Harlem River by a bridge, as in the case of the old aqueduct, is carried under the river by a siphon. At its lowest point the conduit is over 300 feet below the surface of the earth. The conduit has an inside area equal to that of a circle fourteen feet in diameter and its capacity will be 250,000,000 gallons per day. This will give, with the old aqueduct, a total water supply of over 350,000,000 gallons per day. The actual cost of the new aqueduct, up to May 1, 1888, was $17,-16 ,000, and it is expected that an expenditure of $1,500,000 more will be required to complete it. This is exclusive of the cost of the dam yet to be built. The aqueduct proper is finished, and only the finishing touches remain to be put on. It will be opened for use next summer.

Other notable aqueducts in this country are the Washington aqueduct and the Cochituate of Boston. The former supplies the cities of Washington and Georgetown with water from the Potomac. Its capacity is 70,000,000 gallons per day. It was constructed by the United States Government at a cost of $3,000,000, and has several fine arcades, of which the most notable is the one across Cabin John Creek, which is a single granite arch 100 feet high and 220 feet long. The cities of Chicago and Milwaukee obtain their water supply from the lake. The water of Lake Michigan is brought into each city by a tunnel from a sufficient distance off shore to insure its being pure, and is then pumped up into surface reservoirs, whence it is distributed in the usual manner. The Chicago tunnel is three miles long, that of Milwaukee is shorter. Arrangements have recently been made to increase the water supply of Chicago. —San Francisco Chronicle.

Gigantic Transportation Company.

A gigantic river transportation company has been formed in Pittsburg by wealthy capitalists, with the intention of entering into competition with railroad companies for the freight business of the West and the Lake Superior iron trade, so far as the quantities used by Pittsburg mills are concerned. The company will put on a line of powerful steamers and will own several barges. At St. Louis it will co-operate with the "Diamond J." line of Mississippi River steamers plying between that city and St. Paul. At the latter place it is intended to erect large ore docks. Ore will be brought from the ore mines overland and loaded into barges at St. Paul and will be brought by river to Pittsburg. By this means, it is claimed, ore can be brought to Pittsburg much cheaper than by lake. There is less handling than by the old route, and the difference of time will be in favor of the new route.

The company also expects to be able to bring Alabama and Tennessee ore in successful competition with other ore, thus opening up a new supply territory for Pittsburg. It expects to have traffic arrangements with one or two roads west of St. Louis, which will enable it to receive freight for inland western points. Later on it may also bid for the transportation of grain from the West to the seaboard, and traffic arrangements can be made from this point East.—New York Times.

Evarts' Fad.

The administration of the grandson of "Old Tippecanoe" is to have a pleasant surprise. It is the inauguration of a "log cabin and hard cider" social campaign by Senator Evarts. Mr. Evarts purchased a beautiful tract of land on the Maryland side of the Potomac, just north of the old bastion and casemated granite Fort Washington, almost opposite Mount Vernon, and eleven miles from the capital. The cabin is sixty feet long, twenty-five feet wide and twelve feet between the joints. It is fashioned after the Tippecanoe campaign order of architecture of forty odd years ago. It is built of logs hewn in the forest of the estate and raised and chinked in the olden style. It has the characteristic chimney and fireplace, 4x7 feet, capable of receiving hickory logs cut on the estate to that traditional and historic length. The interior arrangement is suggestive of hospitality and good cheer, the dining room, which is 30x25 feet, being the salient feature of the plan. A sitting room and library and sleeping rooms occupy the rest of the space. The commodious kitchen, with great fireplace and cranes and spits and servants' quarters, occupies an adjunct to the main structure. Overhead is a loft which will be rendered accessible by an automatic hoist and can be utilized as a stowaway for any of the guests who may grow fatigued or stumble by the way. The interior of the cabin, unlike the primitive originals, will be finished in native woods from the place, worked in oil. The native products of the estate are wild ducks from the estuarys, possums among the gum trees of the forest, coons in the hollows and sweet potatoes and peanuts on the uplands.

Footprints of Amphibians.

Professor Bickmore, in his lecture on "The Period of Reptiles and Mammals," in the Museum of Natural History, New York, presented on a screen illustrations of the foot-prints of one of the amphibians of the coal period. The illustration was a drawing from the great slab of blue stone which belongs to the museum, and was taken from the stone quarry at Turner's Fall, Mass. The animal itself, Mr. Bickmore explained, was one of those which roamed in great numbers along the Connecticut valley during the carboniferous period. This one had left its footprints in the mud, and the impression having been subsequently filled with sand, the cast was preserved when the clay became hardened into stone.

From fossils of the animal, which have been obtained in other portions of the valley, it appears to have had an elongated body, about fourteen feet long, on four legs. It moved mainly on the hind feet, the forelegs being shorter, and lived partly in the water and partly on the banks of the stream. At that time and until a later period in the age of mammals, the lecturer showed by the drawings of the coast survey, the coast of New York extended fully 100 miles into the ocean south of its present line. The ocean steamers of to-day, in approaching the Narrows, follow the old channel of the Hudson River, which, previous to the subsidence of the land, as shown by the sea-soundings, flowed into the sea through a deep valley and over a steep cliff of great height, and must have formed a magnificent cataract. —N. Y. Tribune.

GEORGE MILLER, the preacher actor, is at present in Australia, endeavoring to create more or less excitement by discussions on the relative morality of the clergy and the stage. He manages to get himself in the papers occasionally, and when he does, his acquaintances in this country are deluged with copies of the papers containing the paragraphs.

When disease racks the frame, when sores cover the person, when aches are in every joint, when the muscles are soft and flabby, when the least exertion gives fatigue, when the mind is filled with gloom and despondency, what is there in life worth living, and yet many eke out just such a miserable existence, living only for those who love them. When it is generally known that Brown's Iron Bitters will cure the above disorders how many hearts will be made glad! How many homes made happy.

It is easy to mislead suffering humanity, and yet too often the best literary talent is prostituted to further the sales of some worthless patent medicine. Theory and logic exert a great influence upon a superficial thinker, but the earnest seeker after truth concerning the merit of a remedy demands experimental knowledge, and to him the plain words of former sufferers come with more force than all the theory and all the logic that can be presented. Read the following truths:

REV. DR. TALMAGE.

THE BROOKLYN DIVINE'S SUNDAY SERMON.

Subject: "Joy! Joy! Joy!" (A Jubilee Sermon.)

[This jubilee sermon was preached by the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., at an especial communion for the reception of 240 persons, making the present communicant membership of the Brooklyn Tabernacle 4408. This was also moving day in that church. The annual rental of pews had just occurred and many of the congregation occupied new places. The pews brought higher premiums this year than ever before, and the income of the church this year will be $33,-804. But both plans are observed in the church. A vast space is kept free from all expense and only a part of the building is mapped off for rent. Dr. Talmage took his text from Luke, xv., 23: "Bring hither the fatted calf and kill it."]

Joy! Joy! Joy! We banquet to-day over this accession of a multitude of souls.

In all ages of the world it has been customary to celebrate joyful events by festivity—the signing of treaties, the proclamation of peace, the Christmas, the marriage. However much on other days of the year our table may have stinted supply, on Thanksgiving Day there must be something bounteous. And all the comfortable homes of Christendom have at some time celebrated joyful events by banquet and festivity.

Something has happened in the old homestead greater than anything that has ever happened before. A favorite son whom the world supposed would become a vagabond and outlaw forever has got tired of sight-seeing and has returned to his father's house. The world said he never would come back. The old man always said his son would come. He had been looking for him day after day and year after year. He knew he would come back. Now, having returned to his father's house, the father proclaims celebration.

There is a calf in the paddock that has been kept up and fed to utmost capacity so as to be ready for some occasion of joy that might come along. Ah! there never will be a grander day on the old homestead than this day. Let the butchers do their work, and the housekeepers bring into the table the smoking meat. The musicians will take their places, and the gay groups will move up and down the floor. All the friends and neighbors are gathered in, and extra supply is sent out to the table of the servants. The father presides at table, and says grace, and thanks God that his long-absent boy is home again. Oh! how they missed him; how glad they are to have him back. One brother indeed stands pouting at the back door and says: "This is a great ado about nothing; this bad boy should have been chastened instead of greeted; veal is too good for him!" But the father says: "Nothing is too good, nothing is good enough." There sits the young man, glad at the hearty reception, but a shadow of sorrow flitting across his brow at the remembrance of the trouble he has seen. All ready now. Let the covers lift. Music. He was dead and he is alive again! He was lost and he is found! By such bold imagery does the Bible set forth the merry-making when a soul comes home to God.

I. First of all there is the new convert's joy. It is no tame thing to become a Christian. The most tremendous moment in a man's life is when he surrenders himself to God. The grandest time on the father's homestead is when the boy comes back. Among the great throng who in the parlors of this church professed Christ one night was a young man who next morning rang my door bell and said: "Sir, I cannot contain myself with the joy I feel. I came here this morning to express it. I have found more joy in five minutes in serving God than in all the years of my prodigality, and I came to say so."

You have seen, perhaps, a man running for his physical liberty and the officers of the law after him, and you saw him escape, or afterward you heard the judge had pardoned him, and how great was the glee of that rescued man; but it is a very tame thing that, compared with the running for one's everlasting life—the terrors of the law after him, but Christ coming in to pardon and bless and rescue and save. You remember John Bunyan in his great story tells how the Pilgrim put his fingers in his ears, and ran, crying: "Life, life, eternal life!" A poor car-driver in this city some years ago, after having had a struggle to support his family, suddenly was informed that a large inheritance was his, and there was joy amounting to bewilderment; but that is a small thing compared with the experience of one when he has put in his hands the title-deed to the joys, the raptures, the splendors of heaven, and he can truly say: "Its mansions are mine, its temples are mine, its songs are mine, its God is mine!"

Oh, it is no tame thing to become a Christian. It is a merry-making. It is the killing of the fatted calf. It is jubilee. You know the Bible never compares it to a funeral, but always compares it to something bright. It is more apt to be compared to a banquet than anything else. It is compared in the Bible to the water—bright, flashing water; to the morning—roseate, fire-worked, mountain-transfigured morning. I wish I could to-day take all the Bible expressions about pardon and peace and life and comfort and hope and Heaven and twist them into one garland, and put it on the brow of the humblest child of God in this assemblage, and cry: "Wear it, wear it now, wear it forever, son of God, daughter of the Lord God Almighty." It is the joy of the new convert! Oh, the [illegible] of the Christian service!

You have seen sometimes a man in a religious assembly get up and give his experience. Well, Paul gave his experience. He arose in the presence of two churches, the church on earth and the church in heaven, and he said: "Now this is my experience: sorrowful, yet always rejoicing—poor, yet making many rich—having nothing, yet possessing all things." If the people in this house this morning knew the joys of the Christian religion, they would all pass over into the kingdom of God the next moment. When Daniel Sandeman was dying of cholera his attendant said: "Have you much pain?" "Oh," he replied, "since I found the Lord I have never had any pain except sin." Then they said to him: "Would you like to send a message to your friends?" "Yes, I would; tell them that only last night the love of Jesus came rushing into my soul like the surges of the sea, and I had to cry out: 'Stop, Lord, it is enough; stop, Lord, enough!'" Oh, the joys of this Christian religion!

Just pass over from those tame joys in which you are indulging—joys of this world—into the raptures of the Gospel. The world cannot satisfy you; you have found that out—Alexander longing for other worlds to conquer, and yet drowned in his own bottle; Byron whipped by disquietudes around the world; Voltaire cursing his own soul while all the streets of Paris were applauding him; Henry II. consuming with hatred against poor Thomas a Beckett—all illustrations of the fact this world cannot make a man happy. The very man who poisoned the pommel of the saddle on which Queen Elizabeth rode, shouted in the street: "God Save the Queen!" One moment the world applauds and the next moment the world anathematizes. Oh, come over into this greater joy, this sublime solace, this magnificent beatitude. The night after the battle of Shiloh, and there were thousands of wounded on the field, and the ambulances had not come, one Christian soldier lying there a-dying under the starlight began to sing:

"There is a land of pure delight,"

And when he came to the next line there were scores of voices uniting:

"Where saints immortal reign."

The song was caught up all through the fields among the wounded, until it was said there were at least ten thousand wounded men reuniting their voices as they came to the verse:

"There everlasting spring abides,
And never-withering flowers;
Death like a narrow stream divides
That heavenly land from ours."

Oh, it is a great religion to live by, and it is a great religion to die by. There is only one heart-throb between you and that religion this morning. Just look into the face of your pardoning God, and surrender yourself for time and for eternity, and He is yours, and heaven is yours, and all is yours. Some of you, like the young man of the text, have gone far astray. I know not the history, but you know it, you know it. When a young man went forth into life, the legend says, his guardian angel went forth with him, and getting him into a field the guardian angel swept a circle clear around where the young man stood. It was a circle of virtue and honor, and he must not step beyond that circle. Armed foes came down, but were obliged to halt at the circle—they could not pass. But one day a temptress with diamonded hand stretched forth and crossed that circle with the hand, and the tempted soul took it, and by that one all grip was brought beyond the circle and died. Some of you have stepped beyond that circle. Would you not like this day by the grace of God to step back? This, I say to you, is your hour of salvation. There was in the closing hours of Queen Anne what is called the clock scene. Flat down on the pillow in helpless sickness she could not move her head or move her hand. She was waiting for the hour when the Ministers of State should gather in angry contest, and, worried and worn out by the coming hour, and in momentary absence of the nurse, in the power, the strange power which delirium sometimes gives one, she arose and stood in front of the clock, and stood there watching the clock when the nurse returned. The nurse said: "Do you see anything peculiar about that clock?" She made no answer, but soon died. There is a clock scene in every history. If some of you would rise from the bed of lethargy and come out from your delirium of sin and look on the clock of your destiny this morning, you would see and hear something you have not seen or heard before, and every tick of the minute, and every stroke of the hour, and every swing of the pendulum would say: "Now, now, now, now!" Oh, come home to your Father's house. Come home, oh, prodigal, from the wilderness. Come home, come home!

II. But I notice that when the prodigal came there was the father's joy. He did not greet him with any formal "How do you do?" He did not come out and say: "You are unfit to enter; go out and wash in the trough by the well, and then you can come in; we have had enough trouble with you." Ah! no. When the proprietor of that estate proclaimed festival, it was an outburst of a father's love and a father's joy. God is your Father. I have not much sympathy with that description of God I sometimes hear, as though He were a Turkish Sultan, hard and unsympathetic, and listening not to the cry of His subjects. A man told me he saw in one of the eastern lands a King riding along, and two men were in altercation, and one charged the other with having eaten his rice; and the King said: "Then slay the man and by post-mortem examination find whether he has eaten the rice." And he was slain. Ah! the cruelty of a scene like that. Our God is not a Sultan, not a Czar, not a despot, but a Father—kind, loving, forgiving, and He makes all heaven ring again when a prodigal comes back. "I have no pleasure," he says, "in the death of him that dieth."

If a man does not get to heaven it is because he will not go there. No difference the color, no difference the history, no difference the antecedents, no difference the surroundings, no difference the sin. When the white horses of Christ's victory are brought out to celebrate the eternal triumph you may ride one of them, and as God is greater than all, His joy is greater, and when a soul comes back there is in his heart the surging of an infinite ocean of gladness, and to express that gladness it takes all the rivers of pleasure, and all the thrones of pomp, and all the ages of eternity. It is a joy deeper than all depth, and higher than all height, and wider than all width, and vaster than all immensity. It overtops, it undergirds, it outweighs all the united splendor and joy of the universe. Who can tell what God's joy is?

You remember reading the story of a King, who on some great day of festivity scattered silver and gold among the people, and sent valuable presents to his courtiers; but methinks when a soul comes back, God is so glad that to express His joy He flings out new worlds into space, and kindles up new suns, and rolls among the white-robed [illegible] of the redeemed a greater hallelujah, while with a voice [illegible] among the mountains of frankincense and is echoed back from the everlasting gates, He cries: "This, my son, was dead, and he is alive again."

At the opening of the Exposition in New Orleans, I saw a Mexican flutist, and he played the solo, and then afterward the eight or ten bands of music, accompanied by the great organ, came in; but the sound of that one flute as compared with all the orchestra was greater than all the combined joy of the universe when compared with the resounding heart of Almighty God.

For ten years a father went three times a day to the depot. His son went off in aggravating circumstances, but the father said: "He will come back." The strain was too much, and his mind parted, and three times a day the father went. In the early morning he watched the train, its arrival, the stepping out of the passengers, and then the departure of the train. At noon he was there again watching the advance of the train, watching the departure. At night, there again; watching the coming, watching the going for ten years. He was sure his son would come back. God has been watching and waiting for some of you, my brothers, ten years, twenty years, thirty years, forty years, perhaps fifty years—waiting, waiting, watching, watching; and if this morning the prodigal should come home, what a scene of gladness and festivity, and how the great Father's heart would rejoice at your coming home. You will come, some of you, will you not? You will, you will!

III. I notice also that when a prodigal comes home there is the joy of the ministers of religion. Oh, it is a grand thing to preach this Gospel. I know there has been a great deal said about the trials and the hardships of the Christian ministry. I wish somebody would write a good, rousing book about the joys of the Christian ministry. Since I entered the profession I have seen more of the goodness of God than I will be able to celebrate in all eternity. I know some boast about their equilibrium, and they do not rise into enthusiasm, and they do not break down with emotion; but I confess to you plainly that when I see a man coming to God, and giving up his sin I feel in body, mind and soul a transport. When I see a man who is bound hand and foot in evil habit emancipated, I rejoice over it as though it were my own emancipation. When to-day in our communion service such throngs of young and old stand at these altars, and in the presence of heaven and earth and hell attest their allegiance to Jesus Christ, I feel a joy something akin to that which the apostle describes when he says: "Whether in the body I cannot tell, or out of the body I cannot tell: God knoweth."

Oh, have not ministers a right to rejoice when a prodigal comes home? They blew the trumpet, and ought they not to be glad of the gathering of the host? They pointed to the full supply, and ought they not to rejoice when souls pant as the hart for the water-brooks? They come forth saying: "All things are now ready;" ought they not to rejoice when the prodigal sits down at the banquet?

Life insurance men will all tell you that ministers of religion as a class live longer than any other. It is confirmed by the statistics of all those who calculate upon human longevity. Why is it? There is more draft upon the nervous system than in any other profession, and their toil is more exhausting. I have seen ministers kept on miserable stipends by parsimonious congregations who wondered at the dullness of the sermons, when the men of God were perplexed almost to death by questions of livelihood, and had not enough nutritious food to keep any fire in their temperament. No fuel, no fire. I have sometimes seen the inside of the life of many of the American clergyman—never accepting their hospitality, because they cannot afford it; but I have seen them struggle on with salaries of five and six hundred dollars a year—the average less than that—their struggle well depicted by the Western missionary who says in a letter: "Thank you for your last remittance; until it came we had not any meat in our house for one year; and all last winter, although it was a severe winter, our children wore their summer clothes." And these men of God I find in different parts of the land, struggling against annoyances and exasperations innumerable; some of them week after week entertaining agents who have maps to sell, and submitting themselves to all styles of annoyance, and yet without complaint, and cheerful of soul. How do you account for the fact that these life insurance men tell us that ministers as a class live longer than any others? It is because of the joy of their work, the joy of the harvest field, the joy of greeting prodigals home to their Father's house.

We are in sympathy with all innocent hilarities. We can enjoy a hearty song, and we can be merry with the merriest; but those of us who have toiled in the service are ready to testify that all these joys are tame compared with the satisfaction of seeing men enter the kingdom of God. The great eras of every minister are the outpourings of the Holy Ghost, and I thank God I have seen eighteen of them. Thank God, thank God!

IV. I notice also when the prodigal comes back all earnest Christians rejoice. If you stood on Montauk Point and there was a hurricane at sea, and it was blowing toward the shore, and a vessel crashed into the rocks and you saw people get ashore in the life-boats and the very last man got on the rocks in safety, you could not control your joy. And it is a glad time when the Church of God sees men who are tossed on the ocean of their sins plant their feet on the rock Christ Jesus.

Oh, when prodigals come home just hear those Christians sing. Just hear those Christians pray. It is not a stereotyped supplication we have heard over and over again for twenty years, but a putting of the case in the hands of God with an importunate pleading. No long prayers. Men never pray at great length unless they have nothing to say and their hearts are hard and cold. All the prayers in the Bible that were answered were short prayers: "God be merciful to me a sinner." "Lord, that I may receive my sight." "Lord, save me or I perish." The longest prayer, Solomon's prayer at the dedication of the Temple, less than eight minutes in length, according to the ordinary rate of enunciation.

And just hear them pray now that the prodigals are coming home. Just see them shake hands. No putting forth of the four tips of the fingers in a formal way, but a hearty grasp, where the muscles of the heart seem to clench the fingers of one hand around the other. And then see those Christian faces, how illumined they are. And see that old man get up and with the same voice that he sung fifty years ago in the old meeting-house, say: "Now, Lord, lettest Thou Thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen Thy salvation." There was a man of Keith who was hurled into prison in time of persecution, and one day he got off his shackles and he came and stood by the prison door, and when the jailer was opening the door, with one stroke he struck down the man who had incarcerated him. Passing along the streets of London, he wondered where his family was. He did not dare to ask lest he excite suspicion, but, passing along a little way from the prison, he saw a Keith tankard, a cup that belonged to the family from generation to generation—he saw it in a window. His family, hoping that some day he would get clear, came and lived as near as they could to the prison house, and they set that Keith tankard in the window, hoping he would see it; and he came along and saw it, and knocked at the door, and went in, and the long-absent family were all together again. Oh, if you would start for the kingdom of God to-day, I think some of you would find nearly all your friends and and nearly all your families around the holy tankard of the holy communion—fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters around that sacred tankard which commemorates the love of Jesus Christ our Lord. Oh, it will be a great communion day when your whole family sits around the sacred tankard. One on earth, one in heaven.

V. Once more I remark, that when the prodigal gets back the inhabitants of heaven keep festival. I am very certain of it. If you have never seen a telegraphic chart, you have no idea how many cities are connected together and how many lands. Nearly all the neighborhoods of the earth seem articulated, and news flies from city to city, and from continent to continent. But more rapidly go the tidings from earth to heaven, and when a prodigal returns it is announced before the throne of God. And if these souls this morning should enter the kingdom there would be some one in the heavenly kingdom to say: "That my's father," "that's my mother," "that's my son," "that's my daughter," "that's my friend," "that the one I used to pray for," "that's the one for whom I wept so many tears," and one soul would say, "Hosanna!" and another soul would say, "Hallelujah!"

"Pleased with the news the saints below
In songs their tongues employ;
Beyond the skies the tidings go,
And heaven is filled with joy.

"Nor angels can their joy contain,
But kindle with new fire;
The sinner lost is found, they sing,
And strike the sounding lyre."

At the banquet of Lucullus sat Cicero the orator, at the Macedonian festal sat Philip the conqueror, at the Grecian banquet sat Socrates the philosopher; but at our Father's table sit all the returned prodigals, more than conquerors. The table is so wide its leaves reach across seas and across lands. Its guests are the redeemed of earth and the glorified of heaven. The ring of God's forgiveness on every hand, the robe of a Saviour's righteousness adroop from every shoulder. The wine that glows in the cups is from the bowls of ten thousand sacraments. Let all the redeemed of earth and all the glorified of heaven rise, and with gleaming chalice drink to the return of a thousand prodigals. Sing! sing! sing! "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive blessing and riches and honor and glory and power, world without end."

My Sweetheart.

Oh, my sweetheart!
Not coy is she.
Each morning
She gets in bed with me.
She makes a little dash,
And though I sleep as sleep the dead,
She wakes me as she pounds my head
And pulls at my mustache,
And gives me many a shake.
"You dear old uncle, wake!"
Then I move slightly, with a great pretense
Of drowsiness and dull indifference,
And then she gives another shake—
"You dear old uncle, wake!"
And then I make a sudden, mighty start,
And laugh and draw her down beside my heart
(Gulp down the thought that comes that I'm alone—
Try to forget that one life's had its wreck),
And feel a soft cheek laid against my own,
And small, warm arms wound tightly round my neck,
And it's "Oh! and Oh!
I love you so!"
And then I cuddle her and say how sweet
She is, and that I've half a mind to eat
Her bodily, and still it's "Oh, and Oh!
I love you so!"
And thus we make great love,
Oh, my sweetheart!

The Blacksmith and the Daisy.

Among the daisies she nestled down,
And plucking one tiny bud,
She peeped through her lashes of hazel brown
At its beautiful crimson hood.
Then shaking the dew from its bonny head
She lifted it up to her lips,
And whispered his name with a cheek as red
As the bloom on its fragrant tips.

"I love, I love!" and her voice grew bland
As the breeze from the gentle south;
"I love, I love!"—but a strong brown hand
Was laid on her smiling mouth.
"You love, you love!" and the brown hand twined
Through the waves of her sunny hair.
"They love, they love!" sang the tell-tale wind,
Through the locks of the whispering pair.

The shy wee daisy was borne away
From the fluttering girlish breast,
And the rough smith smiled as it coyly lay
In the crease of his open vest,
As though it were gracing the loneliest place
In the forge where he gayly toiled;
It smiled through the smoke with its sweet round face,
Till its leaves were all smeared and soiled.

Up went his sledge with a right good will,
Then down with a merry clang;
Louder and louder, and louder still,
As he whistled the tunes she sang.
He tossed his crisp locks as he fondly cried:
"How happy this toiling will be,
When you, love, are tending our own ingle-side,
And waiting, my darling, for me!

"Through the lights and shadows of forty years
I see you with wrinkled brow;
Ah, lovelier far! though your face appears
More grave and more thoughtful than now.
I steal to the window, and softly tap,
While you smile in your low rush chair,
In your modest kerchief, in your snow white cap,
And your halo of dear gray hair."

A rush of wind, and the daisy lay
'Mid the dust on the smithy floor,
Never to welcome the sad-eyed day
Or the song of the blackbird more.
But the blacksmith lifted the faded thing,
Saying: "Little I thought that this,
The most common flower of the field, could bring Such a vision of perfect bliss."
—[Chambers' Journal.

A DOMESTIC TYRANT.

"Things is happening quite providential this year," said Mr. Proul, piously, as he closed his bank-book, put it into his table-drawer and turned the key on it. "Apples has gone up a quarter of a dollar on a barrel, and I've kept my hay long enough to bring the best market prices."

Chloe looked earnestly up from the stockings she was darning, on the other side of the tallow candle.

It seemed to her as if circumstances were auspicious for a demand which had long been in her mind.

"Don't you think, Uncle Peter," she hazarded, "that I might have a new dress?"

Mr. Proul put on his glasses and viewed his niece with a stern and solemn gaze.

"A new—dress!" he repeated. "A new dress? Didn't you have one in the spring?"

"Yes, Uncle Peter; but that was six months ago; and it was only a calico!"

"There's the dress I bought at Widow Salisbury's auction and give you. What's become of that?" questioned Mr. Proul, without varying the glasses one-sixteenth part of an inch, until poor Chloe felt as if she were being scorched by a pair of baleful suns.

"Girls don't wear black bombazine, Uncle Peter!" timidly pleaded his niece. "And, besides, it was so tender that it was all dropping to pieces. A calico, now—"

"Hold your tongue, Chloe!" gruffly spoke up the old man. "Your dress is good enough. It's a deal better than anything I wear. But you've inherited every drop of your mother's extravagant blood, that's very plain to see!"

Chloe winced visibly. A slur on her mother's memory was to her a keener insult than any reproach addressed to herself.

"I wouldn't so much mind it, Uncle Peter," said she, "if we were here by ourselves; but I am ashamed to sit at the table when Mr. Cresson comes in, my clothes are so faded and patched."

"You needn't worry!" satirically spoke up Uncle Peter. "It ain't no way likely that Mr. Cresson takes much notice of you, or of what you've got on. He's got something of more importance to think of!"

Once more Chloe crimsoned, but she made no further response, and went on with her work, while her uncle took up the poker and pulled the hickory logs forward, so that they should not burn away too fast.

Mr. Cresson was late that evening. He was the agent at the little railway station in the woods, and there was always extra freight on Wednesday nights to attend to. But when at last he did come in, he had a new magazine and a little roll of story papers for Chloe.

"The train boy had something new to-night," said he to Chloe. "I thought perhaps you would like a little reading."

Uncle Peter scowled under his shaggy brows.

"The Bible and the cookery book is enough reading for women-folks," said he, "according to my ideas."

The next day, when Chloe had finished her churning, got the dishes washed and the floor scrubbed, and the chicken stewing in the pot for dinner, she looked around for her magazine and newspapers. They were gone.

She ran out to the barn, where Mr. Proul was putting up new manger-boards.

"Uncle Peter," said she, "where is my magazine—the one Mr. Cresson brought me?"

"Your magazine?" slowly repeated Mr. Proul, turning his foot-rule this way and that. "Oh, yes! I sold it to Mary Ann Burtis this morning for ten cents when she came for a quart of vinegar. Mary Ann she sort o' took a notion to it. And I give her the papers; there're short o' newspapers for fire-lightin' at Burtis'. Now you needn't say a word, Chloe; I ain't goin' to have you foolin' away your time over story books when there's all them carpet rags to be sewed and the house work to do, and me needin' a new set o' work shirts. There!"

Chloe obeyed. She did not say a word. She turned away and went slowly back into the house.

"There is no slave in all this world worse treated than I am!" she cried to herself. "I will endure it no longer! For all that I do in this house I receive neither credit nor wages."

When Mr. Proul came into dinner the chickens were still stewing away, emitting savory odors from under the pot-lid; but the table was not spread, and Chloe was not there.

Chloe had packed her little bag, and left the house.

The station agent arrived, as usual, on the stroke of twelve, and to him, Uncle Peter Proul confided his sorrows.

"I don't wonder," said Mr. Cresson. "I only wonder that she had not run away long ago."

"I've been a father to her," whined Uncle Peter.

"A tyrant, if you please," said Cresson, shrugging his shoulders. "A tyrant who ruled her with a rod of iron—a ruthless overseer, who allowed her neither rest nor recreation. If this be paternal treatment—why, then you are right."

"Eh?" gasped Uncle Peter, as he slowly ladled out the chicken stew. "So you and she've cooked it up together, have you?"

"I beg your pardon," said the station agent, with freezing politeness. "You are entirely mistaken. I did not know that Chloe thought of leaving home; nor do I know where she is. And if you are going to make any more such conjectures, I shall go elsewhere to board."

"Don't do that!" gasped Uncle Peter overwhelmed at the prospect of losing a paying boarder—"don't think o' no such thing, Mr. Cresson. I didn't mean no harm; I won't do it ag'in. The fowl's very nice, and I ain't no hand at cookin' myself. We'll get along somehow, until Chloe comes back. 'Twon't be long, I guess."

But the days passed on and Chloe did not return.

The coarse-handed maids whom he hired only made matters worse, and he wrung his hands over their lack of economy and piteous mismanagement of affairs.

But the worst of all was yet to come. He crept down stairs, one day, with an ashen face.

"My money!" he gasped—"my money! I put it, for safe keeping, in the pocket of that old bombazine gown o' Widow Salisbury's, that I gave Chloe, from the auction. And it's gone! She took it away with her things; and I dunno where she's gone!"

"Was it much?" said the station agent.

"A hundred dollars!" said Mr. Proul. "In one clean, new bill. A hun-dred dollars!"

"Don't fret yourself," said Mr. Cresson. "I heard, yesterday, that Chloe was helping Mrs. Mason with the bakery that she has opened in Unionville, two stations further up the line. I can easily get word to her tomorrow."

But instead of sending word by the express-agent on the train, Mr. Cresson left his duties in charge of the freight-master, and went to Unionville himself.

"That old dress!" cried Chloe. "Why, I gave it to Grandmother Mason, yesterday, to make into a wadded chair cushion. It was fit for nothing else."

"Pocket and all?" said Mr. Cresson.

"Yes, pocket and all," nodded Chloe. But I'll go and get it at once."

Grandmother Mason, fortunately, had not as yet put scissors in her new inheritance, and the crisp bill was folded safely away in the pocket of the dilapidated bombazine gown, just where Mr. Proul had stored it.

"Is Uncle Peter very lonesome?" said Chloe, wistfully.

"No more than he deserves to be," said the station agent. "Betsey Brook has burned a hole through the bottom of the new wash-boiler, and Edna Jones flung out a silver spoon to the pigs, yesterday."

"You ought not to laugh!" appealed Chloe.

"No, I know I oughtn't to," said Mr. Cresson, "but I can't help it. Did I tell you that he wants you to come back?"

"I don't know but that it is my duty to do so," said Chloe, twising and intertwining her fingers together.

"My dear little Chloe, that's all nonsense!" said Mr. Cresson. "Hasn't he ground you deeply enough into the earth already?"

"Ye-es; but—"

"Now, listen to me," said Mr. Cresson. "I boarded at the old farm-house with you and your uncle for three months. All the while I was in love."

"Yes, I thought you were," faltered Chloe. "I was sure of it. I often wanted to ask you who she was, but I hadn't the courage. And now you're going to be married, I suppose! Is—is she pretty?"

"Very pretty!"

"I should like to know her," said Chloe.

"Would you?" said Cresson, his eyes sparkling with mischief. "That is easily accomplished. For the little maid who has stolen her way into my heart is no other than yourself, Chloe! Kiss me, darling! Tell me that you will be my wife!"

So Uncle Peter got back the hundred-dollar bill which, like an elderly magpie, he had hidden away in the Widow Salisbury's bombazine pocket, and Stanford Cresson got Chloe herself, the most precious treasure of all. And Uncle Peter is yet in the slough of despond as regards the "hired-help" question.

Perhaps he deserves it. At least that is the opinion of Mr. Cresson, who keeps house in a pretty little cottage close to the station.—[Saturday Night.

The Legislature will adjourn next Saturday, February 23d, and the members will return home both sick and famous, and the people will breathe freer.

The Montgomery Dispatch thinks the Lawson election bill has been pigeon-holed in the committee room to die. We are disposed to think that the Chilton county courthouse bond bill is in the same predicament.

The Montgomery Dispatch republishes a squib from the VIEW on the Lawson election bill and credits it to the Coosa Advocate. If the Dispatch is sure that our friends of the Advocate coincide with us in the views expressed it is all right with us.

Mr. John B. Harris, of Eutaw, Ala., has invented a window burglar guard, an invention destined to put half a dozen iron spikes through a burglar who tries to come in at the window. A good thing no doubt; but what the women of this country most want is an invention that will send a like number of spikes through a man who after slipping in at the door tries to crawl under the bed.

This from the Fort Payne Journal is old but is still good: "The defects in our criminal system must be glaring indeed when a prominent lawyer like Col. Troy not only recognizes them but admits that the profession is responsible for them. The root of the trouble is that our whole legal system is turned over body and soul to the lawyers; they make the laws, construe them and administer them, and being only human beings, it is too much to expect of them that with unlimited power in their hands, they will not use that power for their own benefit." The editor of the Journal being a practicing attorney it is to be presumed that he writes with the lights all before him.

There is too much of this nauseous toadyism. It has expanded into a disgrace. It belittles Alabama and her people. Surely we can be hospitable and courteous to those who visit us without incurring their contempt and forgetting our own self-respect. We are drifting into methods that resemble nothing so much as they do the methods of the "original Cohens" in New York's Baxter street. Instead of realizing the fact that capitalists come here because the advantages attract them and they expect to profit thereby we act as though every investor were an annointed philanthropist sacrificing himself for our welfare and entitled to our humble thanks. If a party of gentlmen, supposed to be capitalists and suspected of investment, visit Birmingham, for instance they are met with a violent ostentation of rapture; their privacy is scattered to the four winds of Heaven; they are followed about as though they were a circus, they are oppressed with heavy corporation festivities and deafened with dull oratorical flatulence and finally as they escape by way of the railroad they see the community waving them fond farewells and wagging its very hind legs off in a crowning paroxysm of servility.—Dispatch.

The Alliance Exchange.

The bill granting a charter to the Farmer's Alliance Exchange has passed the General Assembly. This is a very important measure to the farmers of the State, and to every other industry as for that matter. It is to be earnestly hoped that this new enterprise on the part of the farmers may prove successful. A large sum has been raised for the purpose among the farmers of Alabama, an amount so large that it would be a serious loss to them as well as to the sections of the State from whence the money came should the project not prove successful. Those farmers with whom we have conversed on the subject seem confident of its success. It is certainly a plucky undertaking and on that score as well as on the score of mutual and general interest it will no doubt meet with success. The Exchange proposes to purchase goods for the farmer at a minimum per cent. over actual cost to the manufacturer. It will have capital to the amount of $25,000 with which to buy, and with the cash in hand may able to accomplish all that it aims at.

There have been some doubts expressed even among members of the Alliance writing to our exchanges as to the outcome of the undertaking, and there has been some hesitation in sending in the money called for in some sections of the State. It is too true that not everything succeeds that deserves success. But we are all interested in some undertakings, and this is one of that universal character, not merely because it deserves success, but its failure might result so detrimentally to the financial interests of the farming community in particular and every other interest in general. There are some parts of the State that even now very sensibly feel the drain made upon their exchequers for the establishment of the Exchange.

The powers granted the Exchange under the charter are as follows, showing the scope and character of the enterprise:

It provides that said Exchange shall have power to conduct a general merchandise business, act as agents for the purchase and sale of all kinds of produce, to erect and control cotton and tobacco warehouses, stock, goods, grain elevators, packing establishments, to manufacture guano or other fertilizers, and all other enterprises beneficial to them. In addition to this they are to conduct a limited banking business in which they can receive deposits and make discounts. Its capital stock is two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, in shares of one hundred dollars each to be taken by primary Alliances.

Legislative.

Representative Dykes refused to vote at all on the amendment repealing the local option law in beat 1, but seemed happy when the bill was defeated, so says the Montgomery Dispatch.

Hon. Chas. Ratteray, the representative from Cherokee county in the Alabama Legislature, is a one-armed Federal soldier, having lost his arm fighting against the Confederacy. He made an able, scholarly and patriotic speech favoring the bill appropriating $5,000 to the Confederate monument at Montgomery. Among other things he said:

"I came to this House, not to ask myself when duty called, Is it popular? but to stare responsibility in the face and act accordingly.

I thank God that all cold prudence and all worldly selfishness have gone down the stream of time with me, and like driftwood in a river flooded with new rain from heaven.

I would not be a slave to popularity—to fan it when it sleeps and to tremble when it wakes, for all the gifts that sycophancy craves. I was pained when I listened to the remarks of the gentleman from Clark, reminding us that there was something else than sentiment in the bill, a question of five thousand dollars. He reminded me of the wretched miser, who when the wife who helped him accumulate his wealth had died, concluded there was no necessity to furnish her with burial clothes or coffin and threw her in a ditch."

The representative in the lower house of legislature from Chilton county gets sat down upon on all occasions. Being elected to said position in opposition to the regular democratic nominee he has few if any political friends in the house and publicly boasts on the floor of the house, his opposition to democracy. He had as well remain at home, for the good he may expect to accomplish in the Alabama legislature will all come to naught.—Tuskaloosa Gazette.

The same advice might well be given to every Independent in the Legislature. None of them have any more influence than a real "kinky head."—Tuskegee News.

The above shows how our county is now being ridiculed over the entire State. Perhaps our representative likes it all very well, but we know of a good many whose county pride makes them feel mortified on reading such comments. Not for the man but for the county.

For relief of parties whose land has been sold for non-payment of taxes and purchased by the state prior to January 1st, 1887, was read and passed.

For the better suppression of gambling was read and passed. The bill prohibits the sale of pools on races or other events taking place outside of the state.

The Senate has passed the house bill to declare void and of no force the sale of land for taxes made by the collectors in this state previous to the 1st of January, 1881, when such lands were bid in for the state, and have not been redeemed by owners or other persons entitled under the laws of this state to redeem such lands or have not been sold or transferred by the state under any law governing the sale or transfer of any lands sold for taxes and to revise, release and quit-claim all the title of the state therein to the owner thereof.

The Merchants and the Alliance.

The Constitution has held that the chief trouble with the Alliance is the adjustment of its commercial relations. Many of its leaders think it had better go further than urge its members to come down to a cash basis and with the cash let each man buy where he could get the best terms. It seems to us the Alliance ought to go one step further. When it is ascertained what quanity of a certain article it needed, a single order at wholesale will often get better figures than a hundred orders at retail. We do not believe it is a good policy for the Alliance to select one store in a town or county to the exclusion of others or to attempt to run its own stores. There might be an exchange for handling special articles. But the great merchantile business of the farmer will be done by merchants and competition between these merchants will give him the very lowest prices for cash that are consistent with safe trading and even lower. The first thing is by economy by a change of method by small husbandries to get out of debt and start on a cash basis. The cash buyer is a king and no sort of co-operation can give the credit buyer anything like the advantage the cash buyer has!—Alliance Advocate.

Cold Weather Rules.

Never lean with the back upon anything that is cold.

Never begin a journey untill the breakfast has been eaten,

Never take warm drinks and then immediately go out into the cold.

Keep the back, especially between the shoulder blades well covered; also the chest well protected. In sleeping in a cold room establish a habit of breathing through the nose, and never with the mouth open.

Never go to bed with cold or damp feet.

Never omit regular bathing, for unless the skin is in condition the cold will close the pores and favor congestion and other diseases.

After exercises of any kind, never ride in an open carriage or near the window of a car for a moment it is dangerous to the health or even life.

When hoarse, speak as little as possible until the hoarseness is recovered from else the voice may be permanently lost or difficulties of the throat be produced.

Merely warm the back by the fire and never continue keeping the back exposed to the heat after it has become comfortably warm. To do otherwise is debilitating.

When going from a warm atmosphere into a cooler one keep the mouth closed so that the air may be warmed in its passage through the nose ere it reaches the lungs.

Never stand still in cold weather especially after having taken a slight degree of exercise and always avoid standing on ice or snow or where a person is exposed to cold wind.

The grand Jury of Jefferson county, on the 8th inst., returned indictments of murder in the first degree against Fannie Bryant and Albert Patterson both of which indictments are worded alike and read as follows: "The grand jury of Jefferson county charge that before the finding of indictment, Albert Patterson unlawfully and with malice aforethought killed Emma Hawes by choking her, or by strangling her, or by smothering her, or by throwing her in water whereby she was drowned or by striking and beating her with some stick or substance unknown to the grand jury or by some means of violence to the person of said Emma Hawes the character of which is unknown to the grand jury."

The indictment against Fannie Bryant reads the same.

Providence Notes.

We live beyond way back, but don't wish to be forgotten.

The farmers in this vicinity are making rapid progress for the new crop.

J. M. Robinson's new residence on his farm is near completion. M. Aldridge killed a pig a few days ago weighing 390 lbs.

We have a Coosa River Alliance in successful operation here.

Some of our farmers haven't sold their cotton yet. They speak of carrying it to market this week.

We have preaching at our church on the 3d Saturday and Sunday in each month by the Rev. Mr. Bone, of Coosa.

Our Mr. M. Robinson will be on hand court week and will probably give you the rest of the news.

Success to our county and the VIEW.

It seems from reports that Guano is getting a "bad odour" with the Alliance. A farmer that has been using it for several years came to Athens some days since to buy his usual amount but when told of the advances in the price he angrily remarked to the agent. LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Jones and Bentley will be in Clanton 4, 5 and 6 of March.

Mrs. C. M. Reid, of Montgomery, visited her daughter here this week.

Capt. John A. Caldwell, of Tuskaloosa, has been visiting relatives in Clanton.

A good cottage residence in Clanton for sale or rent. Apply at this office.

Mr. P. D. Wilson, of Birmingham, is down on a visit to relatives this week.

The M. E. children's missionary society will meet the first and third Sunday's in each month.

Remember the date 4, 5, and 6 of March.
E. V. JONES &
A. D. BENTLEY.

All kinds of commercial and legal printing done at the VIEW job office in excellent style and at low prices.

Mr. White, the Presbyterian Evangelist, will preach in the Baptist church Thursday, the 28th, at 7½ P. M., also Friday 11 A. M., at which time he will organize a Presbyterian church and will also preach Friday night.

If you want money bring your land deeds and call on Jones & Bentley when you come to court.

One of our best subscribers threatens to burn his copy of the VIEW every week hereafter as soon as he has finished reading it. He says he wants to give a gentle hint to some of his borrowing neighbors who often get the paper from his house before he has read it and he never sees it afterwards. Be not a borrow or a lender, but a subscriber.

New Goods.

I have now in stock a fresh supply of clothing at very low prices and also a full line of shoes guaranteed as represented and the prices are not to be beat in this market. A new feature in my grocery department is an open barrel of the best leaf Lard. Send your cans or buckets and get pure lard, no cotton seed oil and tallow.
W. J. SAMPEY.

The rainy weather of the past week has been a back-set to farmers and saw mill men alike.

Col. R. M. Williamson has returned from Wetumpka, where he has been attending court as one of the attorneys for Judge Lancaster, ex-Probate Judge of Elmore, who was tried on a charge of embezzlement and acquitted.

Drowned.

We learn with regret of the accidental drowning of Mr. D. H. Davenport, familliarly known as "Doc" Davenport in a creek near Strasburg neighborhood. It is supposed that he was very much intoxicated and fell into the creek.

Serious Accident.

Terry Fraser, a freight train brakeman had a foot run over and cut off by a freight train on Wednesday evening. This will prove a sad misfortune to the sufferer and we sympathize with him. He is now with his family near town and considering his injuries is getting along very well.

A debate at the Clanton High School on last Friday on the question "Are our school days the happiest?" was won by the affirmative. The debaters were: Louis DeJarnette, Essie Herbert and Ada Goodgame for the affirmative; Leroy Watts, Jodie Edwards and and Frenchie Evans for the negative.

Dr. A. M. Rambo, of Verbena, has made a contribution to the cabinet at the VIEW office of a sea bean which is considerably larger than a silver dollar in circumference. The collection now in our cabinet is both unique and conglomerate embracing bits of bric-a-brac from a hymn book printed in 1767 and a revolutionary powder-horn down to twin heneggs laid last month.

Another little one-horse circus proposes to stop at Clanton during court, and Sheriff Hayes proposes to be on hand and make things warm for the thieving concern should anything irregular turn up. We would like to see the entire gang put at hard work for the county by the court which would then be in session. This would be only justice to the county should any swindling games of chance be run in connection with the concern. The Sheriff will not neglect his duty in the matter, and every good citizen will uphold him.

Answer this Question.

Why do so many people we see around us seem to prefer to suffer and be made miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of Appetite, Coming up of the Food, Yellow Skin, when for 75 cents, we will sell them Shiloh's System Vitalizer, guaranteed to cure them. Sold by A. E. Bivings, Clanton.

Beautiful Wedding.

Mr. J. R. Hill and Miss Minnie Givhan were married at Jemison on the 17th inst., Rev. A. E. Burns officiating in the performance of the beautiful ceremony. Mr. Hill is one of the foremost business men of our county, and also has extensive business interests at his former home, Columbiana. The lovely bride is a graduate of the Judson, and a young lady of high attainments, and of rare loveliness of person and character. A number of friends and relatives of the contracting parties from Shelby were present on the occasion.

Bringing Gladness

To millions, pleasing their palates and cleansing their systems, arousing their Livers, Kidneys, Stomachs and Bowels to a healthy activity. Such is the mission of the famous California liquid fruit remedy, Syrup of Figs. For sale in 50 cents and $1.00 bottles. jul19

Benson Points.

The farmers are hard at work.

Rev. A. E. Burns preached to the delight of his hearers at the Baptist Church on the 10th.

We are not in favor of a new courthouse right now.

We suppose that a large majority of our citizens are in favor of the proposed change in the election law. The Lawson plan is a good one and we are heartily in favor of it. PAT.

The Farmer's Alliance.

The following is a declaration of the principles and purposes of the farmers' alliance:

We, the farmers feeling the importance of a closer bond of union between us in order to a better regulation of our financial and home interests, mutually agree to form ourselves in to an association to be called the Farmers' Alliance.

1. We believe in the existence of a supreme Being, who rules and governs the universe.
2. We believe the Bible to be the book of truth, and adopt it as a way bill through life.
3. We believe in and assert the dignity of agriculture.
4. We aim to bring about the adoption by our class of more improved methods of farming.
5. We believe in the acquirement, by all who can, of a knowledge of scientific agriculture.
6. We labor for higher education of our class generally.
7. We favor the adoption of labor saving implements and machinery in farm work.
8. We labor to adorn and beautify our homes; and render farm life more attractive.
9. We labor to bring about among our class a better feeling of society.
10. We labor for the education of our class in the science of economic government, in a strictly non-partisan spirit.
11. We believe in the enactment of but few laws, and these laws to be faithfully executed.
12. We believe in the principle of equal rights to all and special favors to none.
13. We believe in the principle of letting the office seek the man and not the man the office.
14. We are unqualifiedly averse to anarchy, socialism, communism and agrarism in whatever form it presents itself.
15. We believe it essential to free government for every man who can to own a permanent interest in the soil.
16. We are naturally opposed to all monopoly as contrary to our institution and dangerous to the liberties of the people.
17. Lobbying we believe to be against the welfare of the people and by law shall be punished.
18. Dealing in futures in agricultural products, we believe greatly demoralizing to the country, damaging to all just values, and should by law be stopped.
19. We aim to inaugurate among ourselves a system of co-operation in buying and selling and to try by all just means to better our condition financially.
20. We believe in the doctrine "pay as you go," and urge upon the farmers the abandonment of the credit system as speedily as posible.
21. We wage no war upon any other class except extortioners, but recognize the right of all to better their condition by just and honest methods.
22. We believe it the right of every man to acquire as much money as he can, honestly, provided, he does not use it to the injury of another.
23. It is against the spirit of this order for one of our members to go to law with another; but all disputes should be settled amongst themselves or failing in this by arbitration.
24. We labor to suppress all personal, local and sectional prejudices, all unfriendly rivalry and all selfish ambition.
25. We labor to create a better understanding for sustaining our civil officers in maintaining law and order.
26. We strive to secure entire harmony and good will among mankind and brotherly love among members.
27. We adopt the motto "In things essential, unity—in all things charity."
28. Our imperative commands are to visit the sick comfort the distressed, relieve the wants of a brother or sister bury the dead, care for the widow, educate the orphan, exercise charity towards offenders, construe words and actions in their most favorable light granting to others honesty of purpose and good intention, and to protect and defend the principles of the Farmers' Alliance until death.

Our law is founded on reason and equity; our cardinal doctrines inspire purity of thought and life; our intentions are "On earth peace, good will to men."

A lady teacher of music inserted her professional card in one of the country papers. It was seen by an old "lover," in Chicago, who at once hunted her up, explained his absence of a quarter of a century and then married her. And still we find "soft people." of the "mossback persuasion" who say that advertising does not pay.—Exchange.

A RUINED HOME.

Our house is on fire! Our home is burning up!! What cry so piercing to the soul! Fire, indeed, is terrible when it destroys inanimate things we love, but how much more terrible when it destroys the living tissues of the flesh! Fire in the blood, how cruel in its effect! Covering the fair skin with spots and blemishes. Twinging the limbs and joints with aches and pains, creating ulcers and running sores. Singeing the very roots of the hair and causing it to fall dead away. Cramping the functions of the liver and kidneys with internal swellings and sores. Disfiguring form and feature. Thank Heaven, in the midst of such fearful contemplation a

QUICK CURE

CURE, safe, sure and QUICK in its effect, comes to mind. It is Botanic Blood Balm, made in the beautiful city of Atlanta, Ga. An illustrated "Book of Wonders" sent free by the Blood Balm Co., Atlanta, Ga., is filled with most convincing proof of its remarkable merit.

☞ Robert Ward, Maxey, Ga., writes: "For twelve or fourteen years I have been a great sufferer from a terrible form of blood poison. My head, face and shoulders became almost a mass of corruption, and finally the disease commenced eating away my skull bones. I became so horribly repulsive that for three years I absolutely refused to let people see me. I used large quantities of most noted blood remedies and applied to nearly all physicians near me, but my condition continued to grow worse, and all said that I must surely die. My bones became the seat of excruciating aches and pains; my nights were passed in misery; I was reduced in flesh and strength; my kidneys were terribly deranged, and life became a burden to me. I chanced to see an advertisement of Botanic Blood Balm, (B. B. B.) and when eight or ten bottles had been used I was pronounced sound and well. Hundreds of scars can now be seen on me, looking like a man who had been burned and then restored. My case was well known in the county."

Lew Johnson, Belmont Station, Miss., writes "My ears and scalp were covered with sores and all my hair came out. I lost my appetite and became a mere skeleton. I am now taking B. B. B., and the sores are going away and my strength is coming back." (3)

Piso's Cure for Consumption is also the best
Cough Medicine.
If you have a Cough without disease of the Lungs, a few doses are all you need. But if you neglect this easy means of safety, the slight Cough may become a serious matter, and several bottles will be required.

CONSUMPTION.

PISO'S REMEDY FOR CATARRH gives immediate relief. Catarrhal virus is soon expelled from the system, and the diseased action of the mucous membrane is replaced by healthy secretions.
The dose is small. One package contains a sufficient quantity for a long treatment.

CATARRH

A Cold in the Head is relieved by an application of Piso's remedy for Catarrh. The comfort to be got from it in this way is worth many times its cost.

H. W. ALLEGER,

A BOX FACTORY.

SIGHTS SEEN IN A BIG CITY ESTABLISHMENT.

Where They Make Receptacles for Hats, Candy, Neckties, Shoes, Etc.—Lights and Shadows of a Great Industry.

They wear [illegible] knots like any one else. To see them on the street one would never guess what their work is. There are at least 200 of them, and they have their little airs and graces just as other young women do. It is only he who watches the door of the great box factory on Michigan avenue at 6 o'clock at night who knows that they are box-makers.

Six stories high is the factory, and 800 souls—counting the boys and men—work in it. At each end of the long rooms the light falls in on the heads of the busy girls—girls who are too busy to talk or laugh or sing. Girls who work by the piece and count their piles of boxes by fifties. The smell of the paste is over them all, the belting keeps up a merry dance above their heads, the dull rumble of the cutting machines shakes the floor, the fingers fly with dizzy speed, and the great river of canvas that carries the pasted papers flows on like Tennyson's brook.

CUTTING BY HAND.

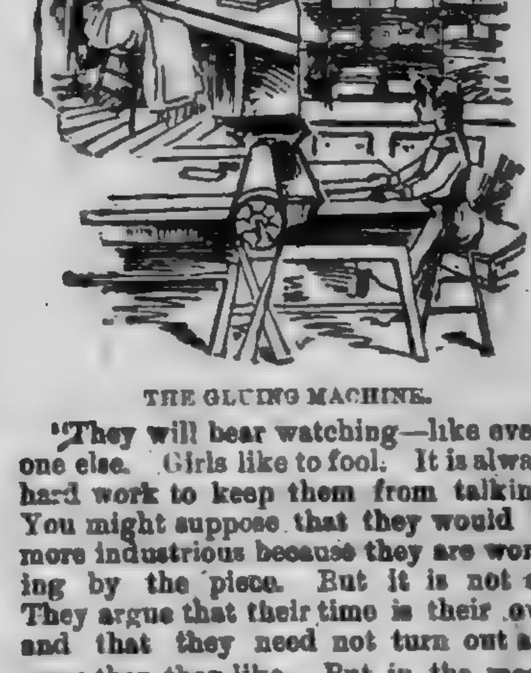
The girls look quite different here. They have taken off the tidy street dresses and put on dark calico gowns. The sides of the gowns show where the sticky fingers have been wiped. It is the most difficult thing imaginable to keep the fingers clean. There must not be a mark on the dainty boxes—if there is the wages are "docked" Saturday night. So the 3000 fingers in the factory are kept very clean indeed, and a piece of clean cloth is kept constantly in reach to wipe the moisture on.

The long benches run up and down the rooms, and the great piles of paper loom up in the center, conveying the information, by the most effective of object lessons, that the work has not run out and that there will long be plenty a-doing. That is very pleasing intelligence. Whether you earn $1.80 a week, as the little girls do, or $7, as some of the larger girls do, or $10, as the fore "ladies" do, it is a good and a comfortable thing to know that the work is plenty and no one will be laid off. There are a great many reasons for this. A large ratio of the girls have to aid in the support of a mother or sister, or perhaps a family of little ones. There is a deal of friendliness among them all. If any one is sick, or if there is an accident or a death, the scant purses are promptly opened. Sometimes $10 is raised, sometimes $50. It depends upon the need and upon the condition of the work.

It is very easy to have an accident in a box factory. The knives that cut the strawboard—what the uninitiated call cardboard—are deadly sharp and they come down relentlessly. Sometimes a few fingers are cut off with the strawboard, and sometimes an arm is carelessly tossed up and caught in the cogs of a cutting machine.

"I am always glad," said the proprietor, "when a boy or girl gets the knuckles scraped enough to make the blood come. Then there is much less likelihood of a finger being lost. A warning of that sort is needed. The children will never learn to be careful around machines until they have had an experience of that sort. We have a superstition here that our accidents always go in threes. If we have one accident we watch with anxiety until we have had three, and are very thankful indeed if they are slight. I am not so much afraid of the large machines as of the little ones. Those small affairs look harmless, and are therefore all the more dangerous. The large ones appear so formidable that they are handed with caution."

"The girls seem to be faithful workers," was observed.



THE GLUING MACHINE.

"They will bear watching—like every one else. Girls like to fool. It is always hard work to keep them from talking. You might suppose that they would be more industrious because they are working by the piece. But it is not so. They argue that their time is their own and that they need not turn out any more than they like. But in the meantime the job which I have promised to be done at a certain time is being delayed and I am having my profits endangered. So we find it necessary to watch them closely and to insist on a certain amount of work every day. The quickest work we ever had done was two weeks ago. Two girls working together turned out 2600 boxes. That was the best work we ever had here."

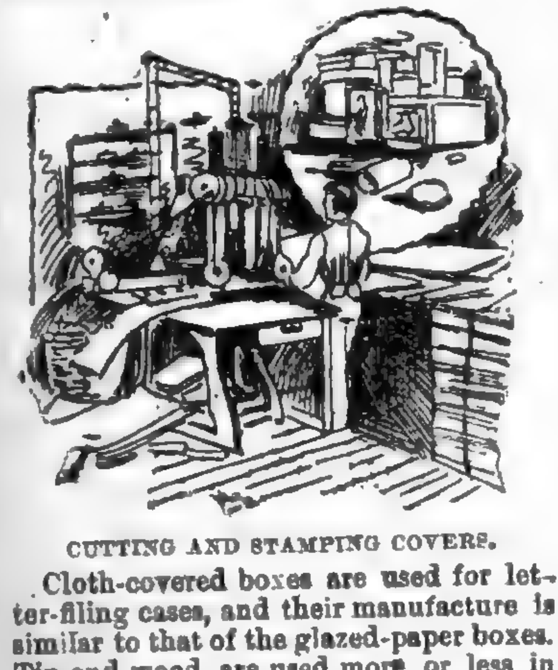
There were some sweet girls there in the dim room—dim with the early winter twilight. One had a fluff of light hair about her face and blue eyes that would insist upon dancing in spite of the monotony. She sat pasting tiny gilt strips of paper on the edge of some dainty wee boxes. They had eight sides to them and were decorated by paper lace. These boxes are entirely made by hand and bring a high price, though they will hardly measure two inches across. There were slatternly girls, too, but they were in the minority. American, Irish, German, Scotch, Bohemian and Swedish, all bore the marks of their nationality. A few looked ill, but most of them seemed healthy, and all who were questioned agreed that they liked the work. Most of them were pleasant, but some of the smaller ones were irritable. They looked cross and disgusted as they sat feeding paper into the machines.

But it is not the girls but the boxes that it is the intention to write about. All boxes in common use are made of straw board. The straw board comes in large sheets, and the cheapest boxes are manufactured from the rough material. In making fine boxes the straw board is first run through a machine that neatly covers it with glazed paper. The sheets are then cut into the desired sizes and subjected to a scoring machine. The scoring machine marks the places where the board will be bent to form the boxes. The corners are then cut out, and the corner-cutters are very rapid and ingenious machines. Girls stand ready to bend the straw board into shape, and where strength is required the corners are staid with heavy manilla paper. Boys generally run the corners. A curious machine pastes and cuts the little strips of paper, so that the youths who do the "cornering" have work that is purely automatic and free from mental strain.

There must be something infectious in the constant whirl of the machinery, for every boy seems to have acquired a peculiar motion of the jaw—chewing-gum is free to all who deftly fashion "Tolu" and "Yucatan" boxes—and for every corner pasted there is a rotary and emphatic chew that is bewildering to one unaccustomed to such combinations of submaxillary and mechanical powers.

The sides of the boxes are covered first. A machine cuts the glazed paper into ribbons, pastes or glues it, and cuts it off. When guided by the skilled hands of the girl who understands her work, and at the same time remembers some dependent one at home, hundreds of boxes pass under these machines every day. The newest and least expert girls stand ready to turn down the side covering, enough of which has been allowed for a neat border around the top of the box. Long strips of canvas, revolving upon rollers, form a part of the machines that glue the pieces of glazed paper intended for the lids and bottoms of boxes. Lines of girls stand at the smooth, wooden tables that are placed on both sides of the canvas. As the pieces of paper of varying sizes and shapes are carried along—with the glue-covered side up—each girl chooses what belongs to the box she happens to be finishing. With a dexterous movement the paper is nicely fitted to the box, a brush is hastily passed over it, and it is placed with the pile that awaits counting.

The finest boxes often receive a narrow border of gilded paper along the edges. These gilt trimmings are put on in various styles, and there are machines that make this decorative process very rapid. Dextrine, a clear glue, is used in the manufacture of all fine boxes, as it does not blister the paper nor warp the boxes. There is a great demand for what are called paper cans—round boxes used in the grocery trade.



CUTTING AND STAMPING COVERS.

Cloth-covered boxes are used for letter-filing cases, and their manufacture is similar to that of the glazed-paper boxes. Tin and wood are used more or less in combination with straw board, and now and then boxes with glass tops are demanded for the display of some articles of merchandise. The drug trade demands an endless number of little boxes of fine make. The sale of cigarette boxes is enormous, and few men who smoke the little paper pipes realize that the box they carelessly throw away has passed through sixteen different hands in the process of manufacture. Necktie boxes play no unimportant part in the box trade. They demand careful work, and only experienced hands can be trusted to cover and adjust the tiny wooden frames in the dainty boxes intended for the future display of dudes' four-in-hands. The sale of men's attire also demands collar and cuff boxes, shirt boxes, hat boxes and suit boxes.

The dry good trade demands the largest boxes. Dress and cloak boxes are made in several sizes, and prominent houses buy them by the hundred. In the shoe business every kind of foot gear intended for women is now put into boxes. After all, there is nothing that appeals to a woman like a pretty box, and merchants recognize the fact. Therefore, women's corsets, handkerchiefs, jewelry, china, hosiery, underwear, gowns, bonnets and everything she wears, is presented to her in a box. That the husband incidentally gets in a financial box is neither here nor there.—Chicago News.

Confiding Financiering in India.

The people of India are honest. They have to be. The English prisons in that land are more dreadful than were the tortures of the bastile.

I had another chat with Mr. Davis, the gentleman who had conceived the idea of abducting Arabi Pasha from his place of exile in Ceylon for the purpose of showing him under a tent to the Americans. He said what I have put in the opening paragraph and the remark had led him into his bureau of recollections.

"I was generally well supplied with money," he said, "but like the best of men I occasionally got into a financial strait. I always had money in a bank somewhere in that country. As a rule my employers kept a large fund in English coffers in the city of Bombay. But I was in the interior of the country most of the time, and as gold is the circulating medium I could not carry much of it with me. A certified check is not worth any more in India than the word of the man who carries it.

"On one occasion I made a purchase which required the immediate output of $2,000. I was 500 miles from Bombay. I called upon an East India merchant, told him who I was and what I wanted. He never saw me before and I know he had never heard of me. But in less time than I could get the same amount on good collateral from any national bank in Chicago the merchant handed me the money. Then I gave him a check on the bank in Bombay. But mind you, this was an after consideration. I had told him that there were funds there to my credit, but nothing had been said about a check, nor had he any evidence other than my word about my finances."—Chicago Times.

POPULAR SCIENCE.

The surface of the earth is thirteen miles nearer to the sun at the equator than it is at New York.

The steam pipe is not as innocent as it looks, and care should be taken to surround it with proper safeguards.

It has been computed that the power required to drive the tenpenny nails contained in a full keg would draw a wagon load with a ton of coal fifty-two miles.

A London physician says that no two lives are alike. One man must be temperate and steady to live fifty years, while another may be ever so reckless and live to be eighty.

It is reported that all the materials needful for the manufacture of the genuine Portland cement have been discovered in Utah, and a factory for its production is to be established.

Most of the buhach grown in California is raised around Stockton. From it Dalmatian insect powder is made, which retails at $1 per pound. The Fresno Republican advises the farmers of California to pay more attention to its cultivation.

The yellow fever germ probably gains entrance into the body by the respiratory or alimentary tracts, or through the surface of the body, or it is possible that it multiplies in insanitary localities and develops a volatile poison which contaminates the air.

When the rosewood tree is first cut, the fresh wood exhales a very strong, roselike fragrance, which soon passes away, leaving no trace of the peculiar odor. There are several varieties of rosewood trees. The best, however, are those found in South America and the East Indies and neighboring islands.

The American Analyst has a valuable article on "Refrigerating Risks." It points out that not only is the flavor of many articles of food injured by being kept at too low a temperature, but that some, eggs especially, are rendered positively injurious, without showing any obvious change, by being preserved for a length of time in a low temperature.

Opium eaters take the drug in every variety of form. In the crude state the gum is eaten or smoked. In the liquid preparations the tincture is the most popular; but paregoric is a favorite form, especially with women, while the elixirs are also largely used. Morphia holds sway over a large proportion of consumers, either by the stomach or hypodermically.

The latest method of increasing the speed of vessels is a screw which is so designed that the center lines of two following blades from spirals running in opposite directions. The blades are so curved that one has its leading part near the periphery, the other has it near the center, so that each blade cuts into the water in advance of the following. It is claimed that greater speed results.

The pneograph is a novel instrument devised by Dr. Mortimer Granville, an English physician. It consists of a delicately suspended and counterpoised half disc, with an arrangement for moving smoked paper under a tracing needle. When held over the mouth, the half disc rises and falls with the breath. The needle is thus made to trace a wavy line on the moving paper, and the character of this line indicates the force, continuity and duration of the expiration. The tracings in diverse conditions of the lungs show very marked and apparently significant differences.

Merry Knights of the Pestle.

Drug clerks are merry dogs and chaff among themselves at poor sick people. It is of little use watching a drug clerk's face to seek sympathy. He never gives any. He may know that the doctor's giving you a "fill," so to speak, and dosing you with harmless stuff that is kept for people who only think they're sick, or he may know it is dangerous, your complaint. But he never gives either you or the doctor away. But a drug store clerk can lie in private conversation to an extent only equaled by a politician or a member of the Geographical Society. In the quiet evening when the trade is dull, the drug clerk has friends who drop in and sit at the back of the store, drinking what is marked distilled water but smells like gin, or or some liquor with burnt sugar in it that smells like some of those empty bottles that one sees behind a bar, and telling stories. They were talking of "judgments" and things, a curious subject for drug clerks.

"I don't much believe in judgments," said the drug clerk. "I went once out with a party on a night trip. We had a mule and a mule-driver, and you know how a mule-driver can swear. You've heard of the fellow who wasn't equal to to the occasion, and the other fellow who fired off his revolver as the only possible display that could express his feelings. They weren't a circumstance to this mule-driver. There came on a terrific thunder-storm, and the lightning was playing around very lively. The mule got scared; but the mule-driver was equal to the occasion, and he even addressed strong language to the sky. He was blasphemous indeed. One of the party was a Quaker. He remonstrated with the mule-driver. He asked him if he wasn't afraid the lightning would strike him. There was a big tree close by; but the Quaker preferred to keep out in the open and stand the rain rather than risk the tree.

"'Afraid?' said the mule-driver. 'I'll get under that tree—I'll get under that tree and give 'em a chance.'

"The Quaker, he stood out in the open and was watching the mule-driver get under the tree. Just then there came a terrific flash of lightning and——"

"Killed the Quaker!" said one of the listening friends eagerly.

"No; the mule-driver got it and went down."—San Francisco Chronicle.

Sealskin Sacques.

The best sealskins, and the majority of them, come from Alaska. The seals are caught near shore, and driven to pens on the land. Here they are kept and fed for a time like other cattle until killing time. They are not allowed to be killed until they are two years old, nor after they are four. The skins of baby seals are too tender, and the old seals are kept for breeding. When they are killed the skins are all packed in brine and sent to London. It seems odd that sealskins which are obtained within the United States have to be sent out of it and carried over the long journey from Alaska to England to be cured and dyed, and then brought back to the United States for sale. Such is the fact, however. The best and about the only place for preparing sealskins is in London itself, on the banks of the Thames, and the dirty waters of the Thames is used for the purpose. Several attempts have been made to establish places in the United States, but they have all failed, even when the skilled workmen were brought over from the English establishment. It may be the climate or it may be the dirty Thames water which affects the skins peculiarly. Whatever it is, the same skins cannot be prepared here anything near as successfully as they can in London.—Boston Herald.

THOSE OCEAN TRAVELERS.

What It Takes to Supply the Wants of a Steamship One Voyage.

The big steamships which ply between New York and Europe carry on each trip across the Atlantic a little city of people. Two thousand persons sometimes are stored away on board these floating palaces. To appease the sea-sharpened appetites and assuage the thirst of this horde requires a great deal of solid and liquid food. The steward of a certain liner took on at Liverpool for the last round voyage 1,000 bottles of champagne, 9,000 of claret, 6,000 of ale, 9,500 of porter, 5,000 of mineral water, and 700 of spirits. They used last year on their line of steamers 8,639 quarts and 17,613 pints of champagne. The Americans drink the greater part of the champagne. They call for five quarts of it to one of any other nationality.

They also used on that line last year 13,941 quarts and 7,310 pints of claret. This had the largest sale among the French travelers, and indeed all the passengers from the continent preferred claret.

The Britishers drank the greater part of the year's supply of ale and porter, in all 480,000 bottles. This, with 176,000 bottles of mineral water, made enough liquid to float one of their ships in. Pretty good showing, that, in the way of wet goods, isn't it?

The other vices weren't neglected. The steward says their line used last year 35,000 pounds of tobacco, 65,000 cigars, and 57,000 cigarettes; the lemons used on shipboard averaged two apiece every day, apples the same, oranges leading with three apiece every day.

The steward says: We sailed from Liverpool with 547 cabin passengers and 300 in the crew. We had on board when we started 12,500 pounds of fresh beef, 700 pounds of corned beef, 5,000 pounds of mutton, 850 pounds of lamb, 350 pounds of veal, 350 pounds of pork. There were beside 2,000 pounds of fresh fish, 600 fowls, 300 chickens, 100 ducks, 50 geese, 80 turkeys, 200 brace of grouse, 15 tons of potatoes, 30 hampers of vegetables, 280 quarts of ice cream, 1,000 quarts of milk, 11,500 eggs.

"In the dry groceries there were 850 pounds of tea, 1,200 pounds of coffee, 1,600 pounds of white sugar, 750 pounds of pulverized sugar, 1,500 pounds of cheese, 2,000 pounds of butter, 3,500 pounds of ham, and 1,000 pounds of bacon. You can form from that list of figures what it costs to victual the vessel for every voyage.

"My figures are not done yet. This line uses 20,000 tons of ice every year and an average of 1,000 tons of coal every day. They use 104,000 gallons of engine oil for one item and an average of 4 pounds of meat a minute, or over 2,000,000 pounds a year. They use 22 tons of raisins and currants, over 1,000,000 eggs, the average being one every minute. They use 1½ tons of mustard, 13 tons of peas, 17 tons of rice, and 460 tons of flour, exclusive of the 50,000 loaves of bread. They use 15 tons of cheese and 10 of yellow soap, not counting the toilet soap. These are only the figures of one line, and there are many. Here's one more little item, which is that they break $500 worth of crockery every round trip."—Indianapolis News.

Killing Whales with Cannon.

Steamers hunt the whales. The harpoon is made with four umbrella-like ribs, which is fired from a cannon on the ship into the whale's body. Pressure makes it open up and take a wider and firmer hold, and the whale pulling sets off some nitro-glycerine confined in the cone or front part of the harpoon. With all this the whale sometimes runs for miles, drawing after it the ship, often at the rate of sixteen knots an hour, and marking its course with blood. Two thousand feet of heavy rope are fastened to the harpoon, but this, as indicated, does not allow sufficient play for the great monster, which is often seventy to eighty-five feet long, and weighs 100,000 pounds. Afterward, when the whale is dead or nearly so, an iron chain is put around its body and towed into the harbor of the fishing company.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

When He Registered.

Eccentric Fred Eliot has just died in Boston, aged 88. He had lived at the Quincy House for thirty years. On one occasion it is related that the old man stepped up to the cashier's window, where stood a brand-new cashier, to settle his monthly bill.

"What name?" inquired the cashier.

"Eliot," was the reply; one E, one L, one O, one T."

The transient list did not contain the name Eliot, and, looking up, the cashier gravely put the question:

"When did you register, sir? I don't find your name on the list."

The old man drew himself together, and, giving the young man a withering glance, replied: "Wal, as near as I can figure it, it was about twenty-seven years ago."—Philadelphia Record.

When you feel yourself gradually breaking down don't wait until you have taken to your bed. While you are still able to be up and about fight the grim monster disease by the use of proper restoratives. The best remedy for malaria, indigestion, weak kidneys, constant fatigue, fits of dizziness, short breath and other complications of a disordered system is Brown's Iron Bitters. Its magic influence in conquering diseases of an exhaustive nature is most astonishing.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is carefully prepared from Sarsaparilla, Dandelion, Mandrake, Dock, Pipsissewa, Juniper Berries, and other well-known and valuable vegetable remedies, by a peculiar combination, proportion and process, giving to Hood's Sarsaparilla curative power not possessed by other medicines.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best blood purifier. It cures Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Boils, Pimples, all Humors, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Sick Headache, Indigestion, General Debility, Catarrh, Rheumatism, Kidney and Liver complaints, overcomes that tired feeling, creates an appetite, strengthens the nerves, and builds up the whole system.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Has met peculiar and unparalleled success at home. Such has become its popularity in Lowell, Mass., where it is made, that whole neighborhoods are taking it at the same time, and Lowell druggists sell more of Hood's Sarsaparilla than of all other sarsaparillas or blood purifiers. It is sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.

A Perfumed Ghost.

A ghost haunts the light-house in Havre de Grace, Md. The keeper of the light-house said, recently: "The head of the man, devil, woman, or whatever it was, appeared to rest against the wire frame around the lantern. The top of the head was covered in black, and the eyes and yellowish-looking inch or so of the forehead above them appeared set in a frame of black. Its eyes were as big as those of a cow, and sparkled just like two big diamonds. There was no expression about them as they moved and quivered in the lantern light." He couldn't look long at them, as they affected his eyes more than the bright, steady flame of the lantern. Where the figure appeared, it left a strong odor of cologne. The place which generally smells strong of oil, was then filled with a perfume like a flower garden.

Frauds in Medicine.

Why will worthless sinners advertise a worthless remedy as a cure for blood disease, that terrible affliction the cause of so much misery to humanity, so positive in its effect, so devastating in its result. Paid for and fictitious certificates are heralded in flaming headlines, and the unthinking read them as true. The Blood Balm Company of Atlanta, Ga., will pay one thousand dollars if any certificate they publish concerning the merit of Blood Balm, better known as B.B.B., is not genuine. Certificates from those who long suffered from sores, rheumatism, scrofula, spring eruptions, scald head, eczema, syphilitic symptoms, salt-rheum, syphilitic iritis, catarrh, weakness, ulcerated sore throat, bleeding piles, indigestion, loss of flesh, nervousness, bone aching, inherited blood poison, weak kidneys, etc., etc., come by mail daily, and can be seen at the Blood Balm Company's office. Send to them for samples of certificates received, and if suffering from the annoying symptoms of blood poison, whether from inheritance or the result of contagion, give Botanic Blood Balm a trial and it will cure you as sure as daylight follows darkness. It has never yet failed to benefit any one who has ever given it a trial, even when a dozen other remedies had given no relief.

REV. DR. TALMAGE.

THE BROOKLYN DIVINE'S SUNDAY SERMON.

Subject: "Our Own Generation."

TEXT: "David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep."—Acts xiii., 36.

That is a text which has for a long time been running through my mind, but not until now has it been fully revealed to me. Sermons have a time to be born as well as a time to die, a cradle as well as a grave. David, cowboy and stone-slinger and fighter and czar and dramatist and blank verse writer and prophet, did his best for the people of his time and then went and laid down on the southern hill of Jerusalem in that sound slumber which nothing but an archangelic blast can startle. "David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep."

It was his own generation that he had served; that is, the people living at the time he lived. And have you ever thought that our responsibilities are chiefly with the people now walking abreast of us? There are about four generations to a century now, but in olden time life was longer and there was, perhaps, only one generation to a century. Taking these facts into the calculation, I make a rough guess and say that there have been at least one hundred and eighty generations of the human family. With reference to them we have no responsibility. We cannot teach them, we cannot correct their mistakes, we cannot soothe their sorrows, we cannot heal their wounds. Their sepulchers are deaf and dumb to anything we might say to them. The last regiment of that great army has passed out of sight. We might halloo as loud as we could, not one of them would avert his head to see what we wanted.

I admit that I am in sympathy with the child whose father had suddenly died and who in her little evening prayer wanted to continue to pray for her father, although he had gone into heaven and no more needed her prayers, and looking up into her mother's face said: "O, mother, I cannot leave him all out. Let me say, 'Thank God that I had a good father once,' and so I can keep him in my prayers.'" But the one hundred and eighty generations have passed off. Passed up. Passed down. Gone forever. Then there are generations to come after our earthly existence has ceased, perhaps a hundred and eighty generations more, perhaps a thousand generations more. We shall not see them, we shall not hear any of their voices, we will take no part in their convocations, their elections, their revolutions, their catastrophes, their triumphs. We will in no wise affect the one hundred and eighty generations gone, or the one hundred and eighty generations to come, except as from the galleries of heaven the former generations look down and rejoice at our victories, or as we may by our behavior start influences, good or bad, that shall roll on through the advancing ages. But our business is, like David, to serve our own generation, the people now living, those whose lungs now breathe and whose hearts now beat. And mark you, it is not a silent procession, but moving. It is a "forced march" at twenty-four miles a day, each hour being a mile. Going with that celerity, it has got to be a quick service on our part, or no service at all. We not only cannot teach the one hundred and eighty generations past and will not see the one hundred generations to come, but this generation now on the stage will soon be off and we ourselves will be off with them. The fact is that you and I will have to start very soon for our work or it will be ironical and sarcastic for any one after our exit to say of us, as it was said of David, "after he had served his own generation by the will of God, he fell on sleep."

Well, now, let us look around earnestly, prayerfully and in a common sense way and see what we can do for our own generation. First of all let us see to it that, as far as we can, they have enough to eat. The human body is so constituted that three times a day the body needs food as much as a lamp needs oil, as much as a locomotive needs fuel. To meet this want God has girdled the earth with apple orchards, orange groves, wheat fields and oceans full of fish and prairies full of cattle. And notwithstanding this, I will undertake to say that the vast majority of the human family are suffering either for lack of food or the right kind of food. Our civilization is all askew on this subject and God only can set it right.

Many of the greatest estates of to-day have been built out of the blood and bones of unrequited toil. In olden times, for the building of forts and towers, the inhabitants of Ispahan had to contribute 70,000 human skulls, and Bagdad 90,000 human skulls, and that number of people were slain so as to furnish the skulls. But these two contributions added together made only 160,000 skulls, while into the tower of the world's wealth and pomp and magnificence have been wrought the skeletons of uncounted numbers of the half fed populations of the earth, millions of skulls.

Don't sit down at your table with five or six courses of abundant supply and think nothing of that family in the next street who would take any one of those five courses between soup and almond nuts and feel they were in heaven. The lack of the right kind of food is the cause of much of the drunkenness. After drinking what many of our grocers call coffee, sweetened with what many call sugar, and eating what many of our butchers call meat, and chewing what many of our bakers call bread, many of the laboring classes feel so miserable they are tempted to put into their nasty pipes what the tobacconist calls tobacco, or go into the drinking saloons for what the rum sellers call beer. Good coffee would do much in driving out bad rum. Adulteration of food has got to be an evil against which all the health officers and all the doctors and all the ministers and all the reformers and all the Christians need to set themselves in battle array. How can we serve our generation with enough to eat? By sitting down in embroidered slippers and lounging back in an arm chair, our mouth puckered [illegible] of the best bread [illegible] seek out some family who through sickness or conjunction of misfortune have not enough to eat and do for them what Christ did for the hungry multitudes of Asia Minor, multiplying the loaves and the fishes. Let us quit the surfeiting of ourselves until we cannot choke down another crumb of cake and begin the supply of others' necessities.

We often see on a small scale a recklessness about the welfare of others which a great warrior expressed on a large scale, when his officers were dissuading him from a certain campaign, saying: "It would cost two hundred thousand lives," replying with a diabolism that can never be forgotten: "What are two hundred thousand lives to me?"

So far from helping appease the world's hunger, there are those whom Isaiah describes as grinding the faces of the poor. You have seen a farmer or a mechanic put a scythe or an ax on a grindstone, while some one was turning it round and round, and the man holding the ax bore on it harder and harder while the water dripped from the grindstone, and the edge of the ax from being round and dull, got keener and keener, and the mechanic lifted the ax glistening and sharp and with edge so keen he must cautiously run his finger along lest while examining the implement he cut his hand to the bone. So I have seen men who were put against the grindstone of hardship, and while one turned the crank another would press the unfortunate harder down and harder down until he was ground away thinner and thinner, his comforts thinner, his prospects thinner and his face thinner. And Isaiah shrieks out: "What mean ye that ye grind the faces of the poor?" It is an awful thing to be hungry. It is an easy thing for us to be in good humor with all the world when we have no lack. But let hunger take full possession of us and we would all turn into barbarians and cannibals and fiends.

I am glad to know that the time is coming, God hasten it, when every family in the round world will sit down at a full table, and it will be only a question between lamb and venison, or between partridge and quail on toast, and out of spoons made out of Nevada silver or California gold the pastries will drop on tongues thrilling with thankfulness because they have full enough. I have no idea God is going to let the human race stay in its present predicament. If the world winds up as it now is it will be an awful failure of a world. The barren places will be irrigated. The pomologists, helped of God, will urge on the fruits. The botanists, inspired of the Lord, will help on the gardens. The raisers of stock will send enough animals fit for human food to the markets, and the last earthquake that rends the world will upset a banqueting table at which are seated the entire human race. Meanwhile, I suppose that some of the energy we are expending in useless and unavailing talk about the bread question should be expended in merciful alleviations.

I have read that the battle field on which more troops met than on any other in the world's history was the battle field of Leipsic, 160,000 men under Napoleon, 250,000 men under Schwarzenberg. No, no. The greatest and most terrific battle is now being fought all the world over. It is the struggle for food. The ground tone of the finest passage in one of the great musical masterpieces, the artist says, was suggested to him by the cry of the hungry populace of Vienna as the King rode through and they shouted: "Bread. Give us bread!" And all through the great harmonies of musical academy and cathedral I hear the pathos, the ground tone, the tragedy of uncounted multitudes, who with streaming eyes and wan cheeks and broken hearts in behalf of themselves and their families, are pleading for bread.

Let us take another look around to see how we may serve our generation. Let us see as far as possible that they have enough to wear. God looks on the human race and knows just how many inhabitants the world has. The statistics of the world's population are carefully taken in civilized lands, and every few years officers of government go through the land and count how many people there are in the United States or England and great accuracy is reached. But when people tell us how many inhabitants there are in Asia or Africa, at best it must be a wild guess. Yet God knows the exact number of people on our planet and he has made enough apparel for each, and if there be fifteen hundred million, fifteen thousand, fifteen hundred and fifteen people, then there is enough apparel for fifteen hundred million, fifteen thousand, fifteen hundred and fifteen. Not slouch apparel, not ragged apparel, not insufficient apparel, but appropriate apparel. At least two suits for every being on the earth, a summer suit and a winter suit. A good pair of shoes for every living mortal. A good coat, a good hat or a good bonnet and a good shawl, and a complete masculine or a feminine outfit of apparel. A wardrobe for all nations adapted to all climes, and not a string or a button, or a pin or a hook or an eye wanting. But, alas! where are the good clothes for three-fourths of the human race? The other one-fourth have appropriated them. The fact is, there needs to be and will be a redistribution. Not by anarchistic violence. If outlawry had its way, it would rend and tear and diminish until instead of three-fourths of the world not properly attired, four-fourths would be in rags. I let you know how the redistribution will take place. By generosity on the part of those who have a surplus and increased industry on the part of those suffering from deficit. Not all, but the large majority of cases of poverty in this country are a result of idleness or drunkenness, either on the part of the present sufferers or their ancestors. In most cases the rum jug is the maelstrom that has swallowed down the livelihood of those who are in rags. But things will change, and by generosity on the part of the crowded wardrobes, and industry and sobriety on the part of the empty wardrobes there will be enough for all to wear. God has done His part toward the dressing of the human race. He grows a surplus of wool on the sheep's back and flocks roam the mountains and valleys with a burden of warmth intended for transference to human comfort, when the shuttles of the factories reaching all the way from the Chattahoochee to the Merrimac shall have spun and woven it. And here come forth the Rocky Mountain goat and the cashmere and the beaver. Here are the merino sheep, their origin traced back to the flocks of Abrahamic and Davidic times. In white letters of snowy fleece, God has been writing for a [illegible] warmth for all nations. While others are discussing the effect of high or low tariff or no tariff at all on wool, you and I had better see if in our wardrobes we have nothing that we can spare for the shivering, or pick out some poor lad of the street and take him down to a clothing store and fit him out for the winter. Don't think that God has forgotten to send ice and snow, because of this wonderfully mild January and February. We shall yet have deep snows and so much frost on the window pane that in the morning you cannot see through it; and whole flocks of blizzards, for God long ago declared that winter as well as summer shall not cease, and between this and the spring crocus we may all have reason to cry out with the psalmist: "Who can stand before this cold?"

Again, let us look around and see how we may serve our generation. What short-sighted mortals we would be if we were anxious to clothe and feed only the most insignificant part of a man, namely, his body, while we put forth no effort to clothe and feed and save his soul. Time is a little piece broken off a great eternity. What are we doing for the souls of this present generation! Let me say it is a generation worth saving. Most magnificent men and women are in it. We make a great ado about the improvements in navigation, and in locomotion, and in art and machinery. We remark what wonders of telegraph, and telephone, and stethoscope. What improvement is electric light over a tallow candle! But all these improvements are insignificant compared with the improvement in the human race. In olden times, once in a while, a great and good man or woman would come up and the world has made a great fuss about it ever since, but now they are so numerous we scarcely speak about them. We put a halo about the people of the past, but I think if the times demanded them it would be found we have now living in this year 1889 fifty Martin Luthers, fifty George Washingtons, fifty Lady Huntingtons, fifty Elizabeth Frys. During our civil war more splendid warriors in North and South were developed in four years than the whole world developed in the previous twenty years. I challenge the four thousand years before the flood and the eighteen centuries after the flood, to show me the equal of charity on a large scale of George Peabody. This generation of men and women is more worth saving than any of the one hundred and eighty generations that have passed off.

But where shall we begin? With ourselves. That is the pillar from which we must start. Prescott, the blind historian, tells us how Pizarro saved his army for the right when they were about deserting him. With his sword he made a long mark on the ground. He said: "My men, on the north side are desertion and death, on the south side is victory; on the north side Panama and poverty, on the south side Peru with all its riches. Choose for yourselves; for my part I go to the south." Stepping across the line one by one, his troops followed and finally his whole army. The sword of God's truth draws the dividing line to-day. On one side of it are sin and ruin and death, on the other side are pardon and usefulness and happiness and heaven. You cross from the wrong side to the right side and your family will cross with you and your friends and your associates. The way you go they will go. If we are not saved, we will never save any one else. How to get saved? Be willing to accept Christ, and then accept Him instantaneously and forever. Get on the Rock first and then you will be able to help others upon the same Rock. Men and women have been saved quicker than I have been talking about it. What, without a prayer? Yes. What, without time deliberately to think it over? Yes. What, without a tear? Yes, believe! That is all. Believe what? That Jesus died to save you from sin and death and hell. Will you? Do you? You have. Something makes me think you have. New light has come into your countenances. Welcome! Welcome! Hail! Hail! Saved yourselves, how are you going to save others? By testimony. Tell it to your family. Tell it to your business associates. Tell it everywhere. We will successfully preach no more religion and will successfully talk no more religion than we ourselves have.

The most of that which you do to benefit the souls of this generation, you will effect through your own behavior. Go wrong, and that will induce others to go wrong. Go right, and that will induce others to go right. When the great centennial exhibition was being held in Philadelphia, the question came up among the directors as to whether they could keep the exposition open on Sundays, when a director, who was a man of the world, from Nevada, arose and said, his voice trembling with emotion and tears running down his cheeks: "I feel like a returned prodigal. Twenty years ago I went West and into a region where we had no Sabbath, but to-day old memories come back to me, and I remember what my glorified mother taught me about keeping Sunday, and I seem to hear her voice again and feel as I did when every evening I knelt by her side in prayer. Gentlemen, I vote for the observance of the Christian Sabbath." And he carried everything by storm, and when the question was put "Shall we open the exhibition on Sabbath?" it was almost unanimous, "No," "No." What one man can do if he does right, boldly right, emphatically right.

What if we could get this whole generation saved! These people who are living with us the same year and amid the same stupendous events and flying toward the future swifter than eagles to their prey. We cannot stop. They cannot stop. We think we can stop. We say, "Come now, my friend, let us stop and discuss this subject," but we do not stop. The year does not stop, the day does not stop, the hour does not stop. The year is a great wheel and there is a hand on that wheel that keeps it revolving, and as that wheel turns, it turns three hundred and sixty-five smaller wheels, which are the days, and then each of these three hundred and sixty-five wheels turn twenty-four smaller wheels, which are the hours, and these twenty-four smaller wheels turn sixty smaller wheels, which are the minutes, and these sixty smaller wheels turn sixty more smaller wheels, which are the seconds, and they keep rolling, rolling, rolling, mounting, mounting, and swiftening, swiftening. Oh, God! If our generation is going like that and we are going with them, waken us to the short opportunity. I confess that my one wish is to serve this generation, [illegible] but to serve it. I would like to do something toward helping unstrap its load, to stop its tears, to balsam its wounds and to induce it to put foot on the upward road that has at its terminus, acclamation rapturous and gates pearline, and garlands amaranthine and fountains rainbowed and dominions enthroned and coroneted, for I cannot forget that lullaby in the closing words of my text: "David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep."

And what a lovely sleep it was! Unfilial Absalom did not trouble it. Ambitious Adonijah did not worry it. Persecuting Saul did not harrow it. Exile did not fill it with nightmare. Since a red headed boy amid his father's flocks at night, he had not had such a good sleep. At seventy years of age he lay down to it. He has had many a troubled sleep, as in the caverns of Adullam or in the palace at the time his enemies were attempting his capture. But this was a peaceful sleep, a calm sleep, a restful sleep, a glorious sleep. "After he served his generation by the will of God, he fell on sleep." Oh, what a good thing is sleep after a hard day's work! It takes all the aching out of the head and all the weariness out of the limbs and all the smarting out of the eyes. From it we rise in the morning and it is a new world. And if we, like David, serve our generation, we will at life's close have most desirable and refreshing sleep. In it will vanish our last fatigue of body, our last worriment of mind, our last sorrow of soul. To the Christian's body that was hot with raging fevers so that the attendants must by sheer force keep on the blankets, it will be the cool sleep. To those who are thin blooded and shivering with agues, it will be the warm sleep. To those who, because of physical disorders, were terrified with night visions, it will be the dreamless sleep. To nurses and doctors and mothers who were wakened almost every hour of the night by those to whom they ministered, or over whom they watched, it will be the undisturbed sleep. To those who could not get to bed till late at night and must rise early in the morning and before getting rested, it will be the long sleep.

Away with all your gloomy talk about departure from this world. If we have served our generation it will not be putting out into the breakers, it will not be the fight with the King of Terrors; it will be going to sleep. A friend writing me from Illinois says that Rev. Dr. Wingate, President of Wake Forest College, North Carolina, after a most useful life, found his last day on earth his happiest day, and that in his last moments he seemed to be personally talking with Christ, as friend with friend, saying: "Oh, how delightful it is. I knew You would be with me when the time came, and I knew it would be sweet, but I did not know it would be as sweet as it is." The fact was he had served his generation in the gospel ministry, and by the will of God he fell on sleep. When in Africa, Majwara, the servant, looked into the tent of David Livingstone and found him on his knees, he stepped back, not wishing to disturb him in prayer, and some time after went in and found him in the same posture, and stepped back again, but after a while went in and touched him, and lo! the great traveler had finished his last journey and he had died in the grandest and mightiest posture a man ever takes—on his knees. He had served his generation by unrolling the scroll of a continent, and by the will of God fell on sleep. Grimshaw, the evangelist, when asked how he felt in his last moments, responded: "As happy as I can be on earth and as sure of glory as if I were in it. I have nothing to do but to step out of this bed into heaven." Having served his generation in successful evangelism by the will of God, he fell on sleep.

In the museum of Greenwich Hospital, England, there is a fragment of a book that was found in the Arctic regions amid the relics of Sir John Franklin, who had perished amid the snow and ice, and the leaf of that piece of a book was turned down at the words: "When thou passest through the waters I will be with thee." Having served his generation in the cause of science and discovery by the will of God, he fell on sleep.

Why will you keep us all so nervous talking about that which is only a dormitory and a pillowed slumber, canopied by angels' wings? Sleep! Transporting sleep! And what a glorious awakening! You and I have sometimes been thoroughly bewildered after a long and fatiguing journey; we have stopped at a friend's house for the night, and after hours of complete unconsciousness we have opened our eyes, the high risen sun full in our faces, and, before we could fully collect our faculties, have said: "Where am I, whose house is this, and whose are these gardens?" And then it has flashed upon us in glad reality. And I should not wonder if, after we have served our generation and, by the will of God, have fallen on sleep, the deep sleep, the restful sleep, we should awake in blissful bewilderment and for a little while say: "Where am I? What palace is this? Who hung this upholstery? What fountains are these tossing in the light? Why, this looks like heaven! It is. It is. Why, there is a building grander than all the castles of earth heaved into a mountain of splendor, that must be the palace of Jesus. And, look there, those walks lined with a foliage more beautiful than anything I ever saw before, and see those who are walking down those aisles of verdure. From what I have heard of them, those two arm in arm must be Moses and Joshua, him of Mount Sinai and him of the halting sun over Ajalon. And those two walking arm in arm must be John and Paul, the one so gentle and the other so mighty. And those two with robes as brilliant as though made out of cooled off flames of martyrdom, must be John Huss and Hugh Latimer."

But I must not look any longer at those gardens of beauty, but examine this building in which I have just awakened. I look out of the window this way and that and up and down, and I find it is a mansion of immense size in which I am stopping. All its windows of agate and its colonnades of porphyry and alabaster. Why I wonder if this is not the house of "many mansions" of which I used to read! It is, it is. There must be many of my kindred and friends in this very mansion. Hark! whose are those voices, whose are those bounding feet? I open the door and see, and lo! they are coming through all the corridors and up and down all the stairs, our long absent kindred. Why, there is father, there is mother, there are the children. All [illegible] er again. And as we embrace each other with the cry: "Never more to part! never more to part!" the arches, the alcoves, the hallways echo and re-echo the words: "Never more to part. Never more to part." Then our glorified friends say: "Come out with us and see heaven." And, some of them bounding ahead of us and some of them skipping beside us, we start down the ivory stairway. And we meet, coming up, one of the Kings of ancient Israel, somewhat small of stature, but having a countenance radiant with a thousand victories. And as all are making obeisance to this great one of heaven I cry out: "Who is he?" and the answer comes: "This is the greatest of all the Kings of Israel. It is David, who after he had served his generation by the will of God, fell on sleep."

Rice Culture in Brazil.

Two qualities of rice are planted in Brazil—one like the Carolina rice as in the lowlands ground Igaupe, and the other the red highland rice. A spot of smooth, black, loamy soil, or rich terra rocha, intermingled with sand, is cleared up of every kind of rubbish, and the rice is planted in holes made with the hoe, about a foot and a half apart; the amount of seed to each hole is about a teaspoonful. It is covered with the foot and pressed. The rice patch is kept scrupulously clean. It is planted in the beginning of the rainy season. The gathering is made by cutting the stalk and tying in bundles; a small piece of ground is cleaned and swept, and when ready the rice is threshed out and carried to the yard of the house, where the drying is completed.

The process of cleaning is by pounding in a wooden mortar, with the same material for a pestle; it is the nightly task of the servants to pound out enough for the day following. It is cleaned of chaff by means of a sieve (winnowing). This rice is of much better taste than the rice of Igaupe, but it is smaller and reddish. It is never exported, and is only sold in small quantities in the towns and villages. In the cities rice from Igaupe is mostly used.

The manner of cultivation of the low land rice differs in some particulars. In the Serra Abaixo, low rich soil is chosen, not subject to ordinary overflow, but during heavy rains, partially under water. The virgin growth of the land, though thick, is small, and is cut off low down to the ground, as convenient and easy for the force (bill-hook) to operate well. The seed is planted with the hoe, if possible, or if not, in holes made with the curved side of the bill hook and a spoonful, more and less, is thrown in, covered and stamped. The distances are twice as great as that of the other rice. These fields are not cultivated, but only kept clean with the bill hook and the hoe. When ready the gleaning, which in both kinds of rice is from five to six months, the heads are nipped off with scissors or knife, and then dried and subsequently thrashed. Then it is sent to the Central Rice Mill, where it is readily sold for cash. The yield is greater than that of the upland, which rarely exceeds twenty bushels to the acre. Rice is subject to no disease. Birds destroy some.

The cultivation of rice could be carried on to an immense extent if once capital could be induced to look into the cultivation.—Times-Democrat.

Modes of Execution Contrasted.

In modern and more barbarous times the aim of the executioner was to torture the criminal by killing him as slowly as possible; now, on the contrary, the aim is to kill him as speedily as possible and shorten his sufferings. From this point of view the English method of blowing from guns practiced in India, is the most humane—this mode of execution is sure, quick, and therefore nearly painless; at the same time the moral impression produced by it is very great, and well suited to the spirit of contemporary law. The next most humane method of execution is by hanging, an old expedient, very much resorted to in Russia in modern times. This method is inferior to the former, because death is more lingering and cruel. But still it is an advance upon the very old system of crucifixion much practiced by the Romans. By this latter the man who violated the law was nailed to the wood of the cross and hung there often many days, during which time his sufferings must have been terrible.—Commercial Advertiser.

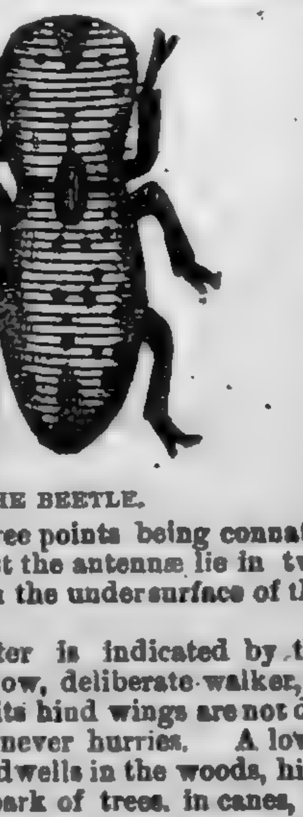
THE SOUTH AMERICAN BEETLE THAT CHEWS METAL.

A Strong-Jawed Insect That Bores Its Way Through Any Obstacle—Remains of Fossil Cattle.

At one of the recent meetings of the New York Microscopical Society, a paper read by Mr. F. W. Devoe upon the "Makeche," or metal cutting beetle of South America, was listened to with great interest by the members of the society. Since then the paper has excited considerable comment among scientists and people interested in entomology. The Sun herewith reprints Mr. Devoe's article in full, with its illustrations, from the journal of the New York Microscopical Society.

"The beetle to which your attention is directed," said Mr. Devoe, "is Zopherus Mexicanus, Sol., a native of Central America, where it is popularly known as 'Makeche.' Specimens average in length from 4.5 to five centimetres, and in width from 1.5 to two centimetres. The thorax and elytra are yellowish gray, this color being due to a coating of scales, which may be scraped away, when the underlying normal black color will appear. The dorsal surface is marked by many knobs arranged in lines, and more prominent in the middle than at the sides. The general color of the under surface and of the legs is black, but this is more or less concealed in numerous places by the yellowish scales before mentioned. The head is retracted as far as the eyes into the pro-thorax. The antennæ are nine to eleven jointed, the outer two or three points being connate, and when at rest the antennæ lie in two deep grooves on the under surface of the pro-thorax.



THE BEETLE.

"The character is indicated by the structure. A slow, deliberate walker, it never flies, for its hind wings are not developed, and it never hurries. A lover of darkness, it dwells in the woods, hidden under the bark of trees, in canes, or in chips left by the woodcutter. Strong-jawed, it goes its way.

"Much has been said regarding the strength of insects, and especially of beetles. It has been asserted that they have made their way through sheet lead (Hylotrupes) and even through iron pipes. Fortunately, I have been able to watch this beetle while engaged as a metal worker, and to learn its powers.

"My first specimen was from Yucatan, presented to me last summer by a friend from Mexico. It was contained in a cardboard box, which I enclosed in my desk over night. The next morning I found the creature had eaten a large hole in the side of the box, and was enjoying its liberty with a commingling of deliberation and satisfaction. Having recaptured it I placed it in a small glass jar, to which I fitted a cover of wood, after boring a few holes in the latter for ventilation. The next day I found on the bottom of the jar numbers of chips of the black walnut wood of the cover. I then substituted the metal cover, which belonged to the jar, after punching through the metal several holes about three-eighths of an inch in diameter, and supplied the captive with some sugar.

"About one week after this I left home for a day, and when I returned home I found that the beetle had cut out in small bits all the metal between two holes in the cover, and through this enlargement had thrust out its pro-thorax in such manner as to give evidence that, if left alone, it would soon regain its liberty. This work upon the metal was all done within the space of forty-eight hours. Upon examination the cutting edges of the mandibles appeared to be unbroken and in perfect condition. About three weeks after this time this beetle died.

"Several attempts were made during the winter to secure some more living beetles of the same species. But they all died before reaching New York. About a month since, however, I had the good fortune to receive two lively specimens. They were placed in glass jars like that just mentioned, fitted with their respective metal covers.

"One of these beetles I exhibit here alive to-night. This one has accomplished metal working precisely like that of the first specimen, and I have had so little [illegible] cutting the chips from the cover. During this operation the beetle passed the feet through the ventilating holes, and hung suspended, back downward, from the under surface of the cover. This metal is pewter, probably composed of three parts of lead and one part of tin, and is about one-thirty-second of an inch in thickness. Under experiment it was found that a force of 369 grammes was necessary to remove chips corresponding to those cut by the beetle.

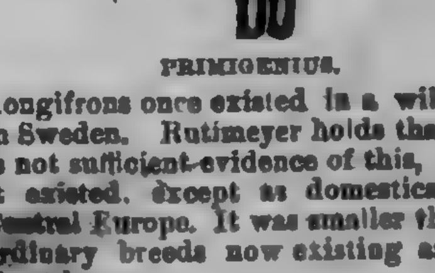
"Your attention is called to the fact that the cutting edges of the mandibles of the dead beetle are in good condition, while those of the living beetle are broken. Both insects did the same kind of work, under the same circumstances; but I am unable to account for the different effects upon the tools employed.

"These beetles live a long time without food or water. The second beetle did the cutting in February last, after which it was placed in a clean, dry earthern dish, where it has remained ever since, without any food. It is now alive and in good health. I will be gratified to learn from any person if they have ever seen any insect that has bitten off any chips of metal."—New York Sun.

Fossil Cattle.

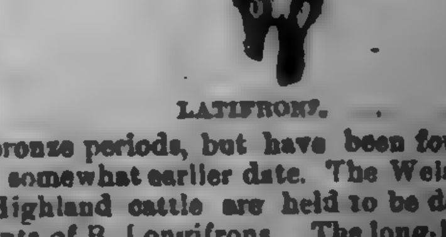
The cattle of the present day are generally relegated to two primary groups, the straight-backed cattle, Bos Taurus, from which our cattle are supposed to have sprung, and Bos Indicus, the humped cattle of India and Africa.

The domesticated cattle of Europe and America are supposed to have been derived from Bos Primigenius, B Longifrons and B. Frontosus. The first of these, from the remains, seem to have been known to the ancient Swiss lake-dwellers, a prehistoric race, and are said to have been known in the time of Cæsar. A skull found in Perthshire, Scotland, measured three feet across, while the span of the horn cores is three feet six inches. Nillson says Bos Longifrons once existed in a wild state in Sweden. Rutimeyer holds that there is not sufficient evidence of this, or that it existed, except as domesticated, in Central Europe. It was smaller than the ordinary breeds now existing and had short horns.



PRIMIGENIUS.

Bos Frontosus was somewhat larger than Longifrons. Its remains are found chiefly in the lake dwellings of the bronze periods, but have been found of a somewhat earlier date. The Welsh and Highland cattle are held to be descendants of B. Longifrons. The long-horned cattle of Great Britain and the Saxon cattle are supposed to have descended from the B. Primigenius type. B. Frontosus is regarded by Nillson as being the progenitor of a type of the Norwegian cattle.



LATIFRONS.

The cuts represent fossil heads of the type B. Primigenius and a species B. Latifrons, the characteristics of which latter seemed to be, as the name designates, broad-fronted, or wide horned cattle. A modification of these cattle may be seen in some breeds now.—Scientific American.

Bro. Smith, of the Fort Payne Journal, had his feelings very sorely hurt by the VIEW publishing that he was a lawyer. A mistaken impression on our part. The wounded gentleman says he is only an honest white man, and never a lawyer.

A level-headed editor gets off the following, which is chuck full of truth: "If people were as kind to live men as they sometimes are to dead men there would be more happy homes and fewer costly funerals. Beef and potatoes before death do more good, in many cases than silver mounted caskets and floral tributes afterwards."

Tom Woolfolk the man who was convicted of murdering his entire family near Macon, Ga., has recently had his case reversed and remanded by the Supreme Court of Georgia. The Macon Telegraph might now imitate the London Times or the Birmingham Age-Herald by hunting up "the missing link" or eye-witness to the crime, and set the world agog for a few days were it not for the fact that Woolfolk took especial pains to kill all the witnesses to the crime.

The Birmingham Chronicle says: "The alliance exchange will come to Birmingham. The officers will be Dr. H. P. Bone, state business manager and Mr. George F. Gaither, secretary and treasurer. The bill granting the charter was approved Feb. 6. The capital stock is fixed at $250,000, yet the exchange will only open with $100,000 and the time is fixed for March 1. At a meeting of the directors last Tuesday, action in the matter was had and Birmingham was unanimously selected."

Age-Herald: The boasted independence of the farmer is becoming a myth. Hardly had the bagging combine turned him loose when the fertilizer combine put up prices on him several dollars per ton. Now the bagging trust is announced in shape again, and ready to twist the farmer again next fall. The trust has bought up all the jute in the world. The Standard Oil company is said to have secured the patent for making bagging out of pine straw. The farmers can head off the combine by planting a great deal of something else, and a very little cotton. Perhaps the trusts, by forcing the farmer to live at home and curtail his cotton planting, will prove his ultimate salvation.

The Alabama Farmer says:

The Montgomery Daily Dispatch possibly the most progresive journal in the state, is ably advocating the Lawson election bill, and defending it under the indictment of the "Advertiser" as being unconstitutional.

We fail to see any prescriptive feature in the bill relative to educational qualification. If we believed that it did, we would heroically oppose it. But it occurs to us to cover the case nearer than any measure that has ever been offered. Anyhow it can't be denied that it is an improvement on the present election law.

All true, every word; but the bill has been smothered in committee all for that. It was a plain, homely, common-sense measure and it had no friends. There was no chance to strike attitudes, no opportunity for buncombe, and it was left in the pigeon-hole to perish. The good die young.—Dispatch.

The Hattiesburg (Miss) Democrat says: "Don't forget the poor editor when you have a news item. If your wife whips you, let us know of it and we will set it right before the public. If you have company, tell us if you are not ashamed of the visitors. If a youngster arrives at your home begging for raiment, buy a quarter's worth of cigars and come around, and if you are a cash subscriber we will furnish a name for him or her as the circumstances will permit; and if you have a social gathering of a few of your friends, bring around a big cake, seven or eight pies and a ham not necessarily to eat, but as a guarantee of good faith. Do not bother about inviting us for it is a little too cool for our wardrobe. We mention these little things for we want news and will have it."

Rev. Dykes voted for the [illegible] to repeal the prohibition law [illegible] Greenville. Is this the way [illegible] "keep solid with the hardshell Baptists?" It is useless to add that the bill for which he voted was defeated by a large majority,

The white gentleman from Geneva says: "If I was defeated for the nomination in my county and I know I could defeat the nominee ten to one, I would not come back here for $100 if I knew Pettus of Dallas or Potter of Jefferson would be here."

Dry Valley Locals.

A Destructive Cyclone.

The valley was not dry last Sunday night. A cyclone passed through the valley last Sunday night about 12 o'clock. It is supposed that it crossed the E. T. V. & G. rail road about Ashby, striking the plantation of S. A. Curry in the timber, thence to Joseph Green's blowing all the shade trees down in the yard, also his stables upon his horse. It crossed Dry Creek about three hundred yards from the residence of J. B. Moore, then striking the finest timber belt in this country, blowing the timber in every direction. It blew down the house of a negro tenant on Mr. Moore's plantation even blowing away the foundation. The negro and his wife were so badly injured that they have not been able to do anything in the way of work since. It then struck Mr. Whitfield's house on the same plantation unroofing a part of it blowing all the out houses down, in fact destroying every thing in its course. The least that can be put upon the damage done Mr. J. B. Moore is one thousand or fifteen hundred dollars. During the storm the whole country was drenched with hard raining. On the next morning many neighbors came to the scene of descruction. They engaged at once in putting up fences, building houses &c.

The deputy sheriff paid the valley a flying visit last week. Did not know his business, supposed at first that he was hunting evil doers, but knowing there are none such in the valley I was unable to guess the cause of his visit. [Summoning jurors no doubt—VIEW]

Stanton Notes.

We learn that our "chef d' affaires," Mr. Richard Coe, inherited a large fortune from a relative in New York recently. This in addition to the fortune he has already accumulated will make him very rich.

All Stanton is for the Hon. Charles Ratteray for any office—even President. Would that all men from the north were of such unselfish views, how we would welcome them among us, but I have never known a good Federal soldier to be a man of narrow mind. It is only the skulker and camp follower.

Our little village is gradually growing. Mr. Stephens is making preparations to build himself a residence and rumor says there are several more in contemplation.

The bright-eyed little boy of Mr. O. H. P. Wright affords our neighborhood much amusement, he has the most wonderful memory for a boy I ever saw, only about 28 or 29 months old and can answer any question in the catechism. We all think him a prodigy.

Our Mr. Prichard is in your city serving on the jury. The birds, rabbits and deer will have a holiday.

Last Friday night, Dr. and Mrs. Little, Mr. Coe and Mrs. Stewart, Misses Annie McArthur and Mamie Harwood, went to Vine Hill to attend a school exhibition given by Miss Fiske and her pupils assisted by Misses Lapsley. The entertainment was a perfect success and enjoyed by all. The Stanton party was so nicely entertained by Mrs. Judge Lapsley, that time fled too rapidly and they were loth to depart when the 10 o'clock train came.

A dragoon, slightly under the influence of tanglefoot, was vainly trying to mount his horse calling loudly on the saints: "Saint John, help me! Saint Peter, assist me! Saint Paul, come to my aid!"

By a mighty effort he jumped clear over his horse, then turning round, he said:

"Gently, gently my friends, not all at once!"—Life.

Why not proceed at [illegible] fect this scheme of an[illegible] and then surely it will signify nothing to Birmingham whether its wealth reach the exterior world through Mobile or Pensacola. We have a waterway given by nature furnishing access to Mobile and deep water at Dauphin's Island six months each year. Will our excellent Florida contemporary tell the cost of perfecting an equally valuable route from the iron and coal fields of Alabama to the excellent harbor of Pensacola? And how long pray tell before the annexation of West Florida may be achieved?

Referring to the meeting of the State Agricultural Association in this city a few days ago an observant citizen was overheard to say: "The farmers are going to be heard in the next state election. There are too many organizations among the farmers in this state not to attempt to exercise some influence in political matters. With a membership of several thousand farmers, the Farmers' Alliance, the Wheel and the Grange can furnish material aid to further the political aspirations of any of its members.—Montgomery Dispatch.

We regret to have to make the admission, but to a considerable extent the above is true.

"There are some able men in the organizations" and they may be able to abuse the organizations to the length of using them to subserve their individual ends, and there is but little doubt in the minds of many of us that such plans are already on foot, and that there are men presenting their claims and dwelling on their peculiar fitness for high places and showing the whys and wherefores that the Alliance should be represented by Alliance men in official position. This same matter was fairly demonstrated throughout the state last spring in the election of county officers and the result was satisfactory to the people that these fellows amounted to nothing more than a set of possum-eared politicians whose protestations of friendship and love for the Alliance were nothing more than the empty mouthings of the most abandoned demagogues.—Alabama Farmer.

A Good Man.

"There," said a neighbor, pointing to a village carpenter, "there is a man who has done more good, in this community than any other person who ever lived in it. He cannot talk very much in public, and he does not try. He is not worth $2,000 and it is very little he can put down on subscription papers. But a new family never moves into the village that he does not find it out and give them a neighborly welcome and offer them some service. He is on the look out to give strangers a seat in his pew at church. He is always ready to watch with a sick neighbor and look after his affairs for him. I believe he and his wife keep house plants in winter mainly that they may be able to send little boquets to friends and invalids. He finds time for a pleasant word to every child he meets, and you'll always see them climbing into his one-horse wagon when he has no other load. He has a genius for helping folks and it does me good to meet him in the streets."

Tough on the Lawyers.

Jury No. 1. in the criminal court for Febuary 16, 1889, brought in verdicts of guilty in every case they tried except one, and that was a case of the state against a negro.

In that case the defendant represented himself, declined to employ an attorney. He cross-examined the state's witnesses, examined his own witness, made a speech in his own behalf and was acquitted.—Birmingham Chronicle.

School Management.

As the VIEW has been so kind as to give the teachers of Chilton and others interested in school work a column for their use, we must fill it occasionally. My subject this week is school management. It is first necessary that we have a good school. In order that every town, village, or neighborhood may have a good school, there must be inseparable unity. Unity is absolutely necessary in every business. We must all unite our efforts to build up in each town a permanent school, and not fly off and patronize side schools, for in them there is no benefit for your children or town. They tend to pull down rather than to build up. They are deadly enemies to every town. It is wrong for a man to come into a town and start a school in opposition to the principal school of that place, Such a man, I am glad to say, is never patronized by the enterprizing citizens of the place. You are doing the better class of people an injury. You are also taking from them what you cannot restore. Neither teacher in such case can give justice where the means of the people are limited, for you cannot afford to make the expenditures that are absolutely necessary for the school room. My time is limited or I would go into details, but I trust that these outlines will be sufficient to awaken you to a sense of your moral duty. I am in hopes that there is not such a teacher in our county.

Whether the moral sense is innate or not, does not concern us. We know that it can be cultivated, and although there may be some difference of opinion as to whether it is a part of a public school teacher's duty to teach morals, yet there is no class who have such an opportunity for doing moral work as teachers. In school where the children come regularly and punctually, when they perform their work cheerfully and mingle together without quarrelling, there is moral training in the highest sense. Such a school is a moral power. A very important step toward morality is politeness. You cannot have rudeness in school and do good work. See that the pupils know how to offer and receive a favor and do not allow any rudeness in your presence to go uncorrected. By paying attention to these things your school will be much more easily handled. It is much better to begin with courtesy than to wait until something bad has happened. Love is the greatest power in school management, not only the love of the teacher for the pupils and their's for the teacher, but the love of the pupils for each other. Genuine love is a regard for the best interests of the children, and where a teacher really has that the pupils soon find it out. If you have that kind of love you can do anything you want to with your pupils. It is above everything else as a power [illegible]. If you haven't this [illegible] is no use to try to make them believe you have. For the children will soon find out whether you have or not; you cannot deceive them.

Of the various kinds of punishment corporal punishment should be the last resort. But the punishment, if it must be corporal, should never be given in public, for the same reason that the State does not allow such punishment to be public. I never whip a child before my school. It has a demoralizing influence. Frequently there will be in the school children who have never seen a blow struck. They should not be compelled to witness such scenes.

One thing must never be allowed by any teacher who would have a good school, and that is IMPUDENCE. If you let that pass you are fated. The trouble with most of us young teachers is, we are too timid. We are afraid to resort to severe measures when such are necessary for fear the trustees won't sustain us. But I say we must govern our school on principle regardless of the trustees or any one. "Be sure you are right and push forward." Teachers cannot be too careful about showing suspicion. I would rather be deceived myself one hundred times, than to wound the feelings of a sensitive child, by showing that I doubted his word.

Truly yours,
A TEACHER.

Going Two Ways.

The following story which is told apropos of office-seeking is a good one:

The talk about a foreign mission for this Republican spell binder and a foreign consulate for that one reminds me of the time Morrow B. Lowry, then a political power asked James Buchannan, whom he had zealously supported and who had just been made Secretary of State to send him abroad in some diplomatic capacity, his wife's ill health demanding change of climate. Lowry was rich then and only sought the honor of the office but did covet that and when Buchannan kept him awaiting as he did until his wife died he responded to the offer of the insignificant Consular appointment which Buchanan then made:

SIR: My wife has gone to heaven and you can go to h——.

[Paris (Texas) News.]

The people of the north are full of suggestions about the race problem and about how the south should treat the negro but the negro finds himself boycotted when he seeks a job up there, and it is almost as much as his life is worth to undertake to send his children to white schools. It makes a great difference whose ox is gored. There are people with a film over their own eyes who can see motes and beams in the eyes of others.

A RUINED HOME.

Our house is on fire! Our home is burning up!! What cry so piercing to the soul! Fire, indeed, is terrible when it destroys inanimate things we love, but how much more terrible when it destroys the living tissues of the flesh! Fire in the blood, how cruel in its effect! Covering the fair skin with spots and blemishes. Twinging the limbs and joints with aches and pains, creating ulcers and running sores. Singeing the very roots of the hair and causing it to fall dead away. Cramping the functions of the liver and kidneys with internal swellings and sores. Disfiguring form and feature. Thank Heaven, in the midst of such fearful contemplation a

QUICK CURE

CURE, safe, sure and QUICK in its effect, comes to mind. It is Botanic Blood Balm, made in the beautiful city of Atlanta, Ga. An illustrated "Book of Wonders" sent free by the Blood Balm Co., Atlanta, Ga., is filled with most convincing proof of its remarkable merit.

☞ Robert Ward, Maxey, Ga., writes: "For twelve or fourteen years I have been a great sufferer from a terrible form of blood poison. My head, face and shoulders became almost a mass of corruption, and finally the disease commenced eating away my skull bones. I became so horribly repulsive that for three years I absolutely refused to let people see me. I used large quantities of most noted blood remedies and applied to nearly all physicians near me, but my condition continued to grow worse, and all said that I must surely die. My bones became the seat of excruciating aches and pains; my nights were passed in misery; I was reduced in flesh and strength; my kidneys were terribly deranged, and life became a burden to me. I chanced to see an advertisement of Botanic Blood Balm, (B. B. B.) and when eight or ten bottles had been used I was pronounced sound and well. Hundreds of scars can now be seen on me, looking lik a man who had been burned and then restored. M case was well known in the county."

BAD BLOOD

Lew Johnson, Belmont Station, Miss., writes "My ears and scalp were covered with sores and all my hair came out. I lost my appetite and became a mere skeleton. I am now taking B. B. B., and the sores are going away and my strength is coming back."

AGRICULTURAL.

TOPICS OF INTEREST RELATIVE TO FARM AND GARDEN.

Shoes for Oxen.

In the early days, when the oxen were used only on soft ground, and when even the roots were soft, oxen were used generally without finding much difficulty in their feet. But those which traveled long distances, even then, had to be shod. A footsore ox team is almost worthless for work. The art of shoeing oxen is almost a lost one. If some blacksmiths in country places would learn how to shoe oxen there would be an increase in ox teams in many places.—American Cultivator.

The Flavor of Eggs.

When a great deal of chandlers' greaves of a rank or musty quality has been fed fowls the flavor is perceptible not only in their flesh but in their eggs. Also the odor of garlic and some other strong flavored things may be found in the eggs after the poultry has eaten a great deal of such substances. Ordinarily the flavor of the eggs is not affected enough by a change of diet to make any noticeable difference. When hens are fed very largely on milk the yolk is light in color, and the white is less filmy in texture. The more concentrated and nutritious the food the richer and better the eggs. Also the eggs from thrifty fowls at the beginning of the laying, before the fowl's strength has been reduced, are richer and more capable of producing vigorous chickens than near the close of laying. The reason why fowls fed on "slops," etc., are able to give no better eggs to their owners is because you demand the "tale of brick" of your servants, but you give them no straw to make them with. Curd contains all the best and most nutritious portions of the milk, without its objectionable, watery qualities. But the true feed for laying fowls is one-third or one-quarter Indian corn, ground or otherwise, and oats or wheat, together with milk and whatever scraps from the house are obtainable, and as much green vegetable food as they will eat; and these, combined and fed properly, your eggs will be of the true gold and silver stamp—when the cook's fire has refined them and prepared them as a relish for your breakfast.—New York Herald.

Art of Cattle Feeding.

Much has been said in regard to the feeding of cattle and the various ways of preparing food. But mischief is done by leaving out of the question the differences in the various conditions under which cattle are fed. In some cases one way may be the best that would be the worst in others. No doubt grinding grain is economical for cows and for a house-reared steer which is fed for a farmer's domestic supply of meat. But when a number of cattle are fed the labor of feeding meal and of tying up the animals in stalls eats up the profit, especially now that stock are so low in price. I am feeding a number of beeves, both young and mature, and I have found that unhusked corn is better liked by the stock and is more economical than meal. The cattle eat more, digest the food better, make more growth, and are easily managed. Even yearlings do better upon this cheap food.

The question of open-air feeding as compared with tight and warm barns is another which has two sides. Last year I fed twenty head of cattle in a lot by themselves through the winter on hay, with a small quantity of ear corn. They were never under a roof, and have ranged in a wood all the summer. A few weeks ago I brought three of this lot into a comfortable barn and put them in stalls to be fattened. They all lost appetite, became restless, and lost weight rapidly, and after a month's trial they were turned out again. The habits of the cattle and several other circumstances must be considered before the feeder can profitably adopt new methods or apply what are commonly called scientific practices. And as regards the matter of warmth, it is unquestionable that an animal tied in a barn at a temperature of forty degrees will be very much colder than one in the open air in a sheltered lot at twenty degrees lower temperature.

Another very common impression prevailing among those who write for the instruction of farmers, but which is opposed to the experience of some, is that "good stock is always salable." What is good stock? Generally it is supposed to be the pure-bred or crosses of it, and which are consequently costly. But more truly, good stock consists of those kinds of animals that are the best suited for the circumstances in which they are kept and for the purposes of the owners. Scrub cattle, making 500 or 600 pounds of beef, are good stock for some places, and the common run of cows that can be sold for beef at any time are often more profitable than the most costly Jerseys. I have a lot of common cows that I can sell readily for $20 to $30. My next neighbor has a lot of pedigree Jersey cows which cost him an average of $200 each. He is vainly offering calves for $20 each. It is clear that I have the best stock for the locality and circumstances, although elsewhere it might be the worst. In considering all such questions it must not be forgotten that circumstances alter cases always.—New York Times.

Farm and Garden Notes.

Save up all the wood ashes.

Remember that the sire is half the herd.

Unleached ashes are the best fertilizer.

Don't put a frosty bit in the horse's mouth.

Cream needs stirring frequently, to mix the different skimmings and to aerate and ripen it evenly.

Do not make a mistake in building the poultry house too high. The windows should face the south and east.

Care well for the feet and legs of horses when putting them into the stable and so prevent scratches and lameness.

The farmer who has a big straw stack has no excuse for allowing his stock to suffer by exposure to cold or storms.

With very little timber and plenty of straw, rough but warm shelter may be provided at little cost except for labor.

Grafts can be cut in the middle of winter, but they are not usually of as strong vitality as if cut earlier in the fall.

To cut down taxes stop up the cracks in the stables. Town, County and State taxes are not the only ones the shiftless farmer pays.

Rather than fill your cellars with roots and vegetables construct pits for them. When they are in the cellar disease lurketh there also.

Light barley boiled is claimed to be excellent feed for horses, putting a fine coat on them, though not so good for horses at hard work.

Flowering plants should never be watered with cold water or it will tend to chill the growth. A little time taken [illegible]

HOUSEHOLD MATTERS.

Crystallized Pop-Corn.

An easily-prepared and wholesome dainty to make for the children is crystallized pop-corn. Boil one cupful of white sugar with three tablespoonfuls of water, and one of butter, until it shows threads when dropped from the spoon. Then pour in three quarts of freshly popped corn; stir until the sugar is thoroughly distributed, and then set away to cool. Nut-meats can be used in place of popped corn, and are delicious. But I think them too rich for children to eat. —Prairie Farmer.

A Cup of Solacing Tea.

"A comfortable cup of tea," says Marion Harland, "never comes amiss to a fagged housewife, be it served at breakfast, luncheon or dinner." The best way to insure its goodness—that is, that it be hot, strong and fresh—is to have the tea urn or kettle on the table, with a spirit-lamp burning under it. Scald the tea-pot, put in the tea, cover it with boiling water, put a "cosy" or a thick napkin about it and let it stand five minutes before filling with more boiling water. Wait a minute longer and pour out.

Easily Made Sourkrout.

Sourkrout is made very easily and cheaply. Take either white or red cabbage, cut it fine and lay it in a tin tub or jar; cover the bottom with a thin sprinkling of fine salt, then a layer of cut cabbage, then salt, in alternate layers till the tub is full, having salt on the top; then, with a potato-masher, crowd it down solid, cover up tightly, and in a few weeks it will be ready for use. It is nice to cook in pork drip or to eat with meats of all kinds in late fall and winter, and there is no trouble in keeping it if the air is excluded. It is strictly a German dish, but Americans can enjoy and appreciate it just as well as if it originated in the United States. Piccalilly is made here almost precisely like the receipt in a recent World. Pickled apples, plums and apricots are made after the same rules as sweet pickles, and not only look very pretty on the table, but really are very toothsome and are a delightful condiment to accompany meat or use as a nice relish with bread and butter for tea.—New York World.

Care of Lamps.

Whatever about the house is dull, don't let it be the scissors or shears used for trimming the lamp wicks. Some women appear to attach no importance to this point, not thinking that, in order to have a smooth cut, the instrument must be sharp. I have tried both round and square ends for wicks, and favor square ones. The flame is much broader; but the corners must be perfectly even and smooth, else when the wick is turned up high, it will smoke. The person lighting a lamp should be careful not to touch the wick with the match, as it has a tendency to roughen or spread it. Hold the match over the wick, very close to it, and wait until the flame reaches it. Keep the wick turned down below the top of the burner except when in use. If this is done, and there is no leak about the fixture, there is no reason why, if the lamps are carefully wiped every morning, there should be oil on the outside by evening. By the way, why is it that so many housekeepers persist in keeping their common lamps on the shelf behind the kitchen or sitting-room stove, the very dirtiest place to be found? If in the kitchen, they are covered with moisture from boiling water, etc., and dust and smoke arising from the stove. Why not put them in a closet, or, if that is not convenient, have a shelf away from the stove? If kept in a cold closet in the winter, of course they should be taken out and warmed before being lighted, lest the chimneys should crack.—Yankee Blade.

Recipes.

CRACKER PIE.—Six crackers, piece of butter size of an egg, one cup sugar, one cup of boiling water, one teaspoon lemon flavoring.

FEATHER CAKE.—One cupful sugar, one teaspoonful butter, one cupful of milk, two cupfuls flour, one teaspoonful cream tartar, half-teaspoonful of soda dissolved in tablespoonful boiling water, and added last.

HOMINY GRIDDLE CAKES.—Two cups cold boiled hominy beaten smooth, one quart of milk and one teaspoonful of salt; stir together, then add one cup of flour, into which has been well mixed a teaspoonful of baking powder; lastly, add three eggs that have been well beaten. Cook immediately after mixing.

COTTAGE PUDDING.—One cup of sugar, one tablespoon of butter, two eggs, one cup of sweet milk, three cups of flour or enough to make tolerably stiff batter, one-half teaspoon of soda, one teaspoon of cream of tartar sifted with the flour, one teaspoon of salt. Rub the butter and sugar together, beat in the yolks, then the milk and soda, the salt and the beaten whites, alternately with the flour. Bake in a buttered mold; turn out upon a dish; cut in slices and eat with a liquid sauce.

TAPIOCA JELLY.—Tapioca jelly is one of those simple, but excellent preparations, which are relished by invalids and well people alike. To make it, soak one cupful of tapioca in four cupfuls of water for four or five hours. Sweeten it and set it in a pan of boiling water to cook about an hour, or until it looks quite clear. When it is nearly cooked stir in the juice and a little of the grated rind of a lemon, and when done pour into little molds. Serve with sweetened cream flavored to taste.

MUTTON BROTH.—Mutton broth for an invalid is made of one pound of lean mutton, cut in small pieces, and put in one quart of cold water; cover closely and simmer until the meat is so tender it falls to pieces. If you wish to add rice or barley, let it soak in warm water while the mutton is boiling. When it is soft skim out the pieces of meat and put in the rice or barley and let it simmer for half an hour. If thoroughly soaked this will be long enough. It must be be cooked, though, until it is done, no matter how long it takes.

POTATO YEAST.—Take two quarts of water to one ounce of hops; boil fifteen minutes, strain and add one half pound of flour, putting the latter into a basin and pouring on water slowly to prevent it getting lumpy, one-fourth pound of brown sugar and a handful of fine salt. Let it stand three days, stirring it occasionally. When it ferments well, add six potatoes which have been boiled, mashed and run through a colander, making them as smooth as possible. This yeast will keep a long while, and has the advantage of not requiring any yeast to start it with. It rises so quickly that a less quantity of it must be put in than of ordinary yeast.

A Corn Palace For Paris.

The plan for a corn exhibit at the Paris Exposition is receiving a good deal of attention on the Produce Exchange, where designs for the "corn palace" to be shown at the Exposition have been displayed for some days. The supervision of the exhibit will be under the control of the agricultural department of the American Commission, although it is expected to raise the $10,000 estimated to be needed to meet the expenses by subscriptions. The exhibit will include a pavilion, the roof, columns, and chimney of which will be built of the corn fodder, and the interior and exterior will be covered with the corn stalk and ear. A good deal of mosaic work with corn grains of varied colors and a number of figures and emblems, all of corn, will be shown.

From an American kitchen, equipped with American ranges, cooks will distribute free of charge all the known preparations of corn as an article of food in the shape of bread, samp, puddings, etc. A competent man will deliver short lectures every hour on the uses of corn, the way of preparing and cooking it, and its general healthfulness as an article of diet. Pamphlets setting forth the same facts in English, French and German will also be distributed.

For the exhibit, its promoters say that the use of corn as food is hardly appreciated at all in Europe, and that if the possibilities of the grain were understood, exports of it from this country would quickly be increased many fold. To introduce corn to the people of Europe is the great object of the exhibitors, who say that Germany last year bought of us only 2,083,167 bushels of grain and 403 barrels of cornmeal, while France took only 1,958,750 bushels and 60 barrels of meal. Last year the total export is put at only 1.70 per cent. of the production in this country.

A late letter from the Department of Agriculture says: "There is not a railroad running through the great corn belt of the United States, not a Produce Exchange at one principal corn and export centre that is not especially and directly interested as a beneficiary in this work. If carried out as you propose it will enhance the value of every acre of land in the corn belt."

For the exhibit a space with eighty feet frontage has been secured.—New York Times.

A Cure for Stooped Shoulders.

How often one hears the remark: "What a fine, big fellow Mr. So-and-so would be if he didn't stoop!" And still such a misfortune can easily be cured. The stooping figure and halting gait, accompanied by the unavoidable weakness of the lungs, can be attended to and finally cured by the very simple and easily performed exercise of raising one's self upon the toes in a perfectly perpendicular manner several times daily. To take this exercise properly one must take a perfect position, with the heels together and the toes at an angle of forty-five degrees. Then drop the arms lifelessly by the sides, animating and raising the chest muscularly to its full capacity; the chin should be well drawn in and the crown of the head feeling as if attached to a string suspended from the ceiling above. Slowly raise upon the balls of both feet to the greatest possible height, thereby exercising all the muscles of the legs and body; this done, then [illegible] the standing position without swaying the body backward out of the perfect line. Repeat this exercise first on one foot and then on the other. The result will be a surprise to many to know what a powerful straightening-out power this exercise has upon round and stooped shoulders, and it will soon be [illegible]

A TERRIBLE HUNT.

How a Brave Boy Met His Fate in the Wilds of Africa.

Sitting about the camp-fire on the banks of the Chobe river, in Africa, Prof. J. W. Edward heard the story of an elephant hunt that affected him more than any experience he ever passed through, says a writer in the American Field. Burns, a trader in Natal, was the author of the narrative, and told it as follows:

"I was trading in the interior, and on one of my visits to Natal was importuned by George Wilson, a lad of 19, the son of an old schoolmate, to accompany me on one of my tours. I obtained his mother's consent and we started. The boy was a bright, courageous lad, and was ambitious to distinguish himself with his rifle. Early one morning in Water valley we saw a herd of fifteen elephants grazing about a mile from us. We started them up and picking out a fine bull with good tusks, I started to cut him off, telling George to ride behind while I charged him. Soon I had the old fellow out of the pack and gave him a shot behind the ear that staggered him a little. Then we cross-fired him for half an hour, but could not get any good shots. All at once the horse George was riding stumbled, throwing him and falling on his leg. I was so horrified that I could not move, but finally seeing George's attempts to extricate himself I tried to draw the elephant's attention to me. The brute was thoroughly enraged, however, and charged for the lad just as he was getting on his feet. Then followed one of the greatest fights between brute and man I ever saw. Off went George, the elephant after him, while I followed firing bullet after bullet into his hide.

"All at once I saw that Wilson was lame. I leveled at once and fired, and the boy turned around and did likewise. This checked the brute for a moment, but seeing George running again, he made a furious charge and caught up with him. Up went his trunk, and a moment after the poor lad was dead on the ground, crushed by the blow. Not satisfied, the brute began goring the lad in a frightful manner. I rode up to the beast and sent in two shots that brought him to his knees. He tried to rise, but could not, and after two or three shots, rolled over and died. The poor lad was torn to pieces. I placed his body across my horse, chopped off the beast's tusks, and rode back to camp. We buried him near the springs and piled rocks over his grave to keep the wolves from getting at it. I took the boy's watch and chain, with his wearing apparel, to his mother, and I can tell you, lads, I never wish to witness such a scene again. The poor woman died a year afterward, but would never touch the profits of the trip, saying that she would take nothing that was the means of killing her boy."

The German Emperor.

During his school career he was a model of the studious German youth. He took his place as a common pupil in the public school at Cassel, and played and studied with the other scholars. At the final examination he was, indeed, only tenth in the list; but then he was two years younger than his mates, and was rightly considered to have done so well that his tutor was immediately knighted. There is no cramming system in Germany; he passed without aid or favor. But he took part heartily in all the amusements common among German students, namely, beer drinking, dueling, torchlight processions, carriage driving, bathing, and in Winter, sledging.

A single flower weighed over 22 pounds.

The fact that good health, strong muscles and sound nerves are attainable should encourage every invalid to an earnest endeavor in the right direction. Remember all disease owes its origin, more or less, to a lack of iron in the blood. Iron in the blood means health, strength and vigor. Analyze the blood of an invalid and little or no iron will be found. Healthy men's blood is full of iron. The best method of supplying this lack of iron is by using Brown's Iron Bitters, a sure cure for dyspepsia, general debility, weakness and all wasting diseases.

Cobble Pickers.

A peculiar and not altogether pleasing sight about the iron and steel works in Johnstown, Pa., is the groups of men, women and children that are constantly prodding and digging in the cinder dumps, and are known as "cobble pickers." The men are always old and frequently weak and tottering. The mark of poverty is on all the women and the children, who are in the majority, are abject-looking creatures, and range from the age of 8 to 16. Cobbles are the bits of iron and steel that remain among the cinders from the furnaces and are dumped with them on the cinder piles. On the gathering of these bits of metal the small army of toilers referred to depend for their living. With hoes and rakes they dig in the cinders as they are dumped, and struggle and push and wrangle for the possession of the metal as it is uncovered.

Each picker has a basket in which is placed the result of the pickings. Over 200 persons daily delve on the grimy dump for cobbles. While they will use all manner of means to secure possession of a lucky find in the dumps, after a picker has filled his basket and emptied it on his "pile," a few feet away, there is not one among the curious and by no means scrupulous pickers who would touch one of the cobbles in it. Each picker has his or her pile of cobbles and the iron company's teams come around at intervals. The driver weighs each pile, gives the owner a voucher for it, and takes the accumulated metal to the scrap heaps to be melted again.

The earnings of the cobble pickers range from $10 to $40 per month, and their are women who have been on the dump for years. The case of one woman and her twelve-year-old daughter is notorious, because they earn not only their own living but enough to feed and clothe the husband and father, who is an employee of the iron works and gets $100 per month, which he squanders in drink and riotous living as soon as he is paid. One old man on the cobble dumps, who is barely able to save enough to keep him from starving, was once a prominent business man worth at least $50,000.

The work of cobble picking is one of the lowest forms of human occupations and its degrading effect on the young girls and boys engaged in it is only too apparent. Many efforts have been made by church and other societies in Johnstown to suppress cobble picking among the children, but with indifferent success. —New York Times.

A Good Appetite.

How many answer the breakfast bell, by coming to the table, only to find it impossible to eat a mouthful of food. Such unfortunates are surely going into decline, and if they continue to grow worse are not long for this world. It is hard to name the many curses of a want of appetite. It is easy to name a sure cure. Do you need it? Will you use it? Well, then, the sure cure is B. B. B. (Botanic Blood Balm). Some boarding house keepers object to their boarders using B. B. B. It makes them eat too hearty. 'Tis true one grows strong and robust from its use, but then a delicate boarder is more profitable. B. B. B. cures many distressing diseases by its strengthening effect on the entire physical organization. William R. Talley, Neal's Landing, Fla., writes: "Four bottles of B. B. B. healed up the broken out places on my limbs, and my general health never was better than now. My appetite is good, and all I eat agrees with me."

A PROMINENT MERCHANT IN TROUBLE.

Old moneybags mopes in his office all day,
As snappish and cross as a bear;
The clerks know enough to keep out of his way,
Lest the merchant should grumble and swear.
Even Tabby, the cat, is in fear of a cuff,
Or a kick, if she ventures too near;
They all know the master is apt to be rough,
And his freaks unexpected and queer.

What makes the old fellow so surly and grim,
And behave so confoundedly mean?
There's certainly something the matter with him—
Is it stomach, or liver, or spleen?
We've guessed it—his liver is sluggish and bad,
His blood is disordered and foul.
It's enough to make any one hopelessly mad,
And greet his best friend with a growl.

To correct a sluggish or disordered liver, and to cleanse and purify the blood and thereby sweeten the temper, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has no equal. It improves digestion, builds up the flesh, invigorates the system, dispells melancholy, and makes life worth living.

IT IS GUARANTEED to benefit or cure, if taken in time and given a fair trial, in all diseases for which it is recommended, or the money paid for it will be refunded.

SEALS AND OTTER.

WHEN AND HOW THEY ARE HUNTED.

Their Haunts and Habits—The Perils and Profits of Hunting—A Rampageous Sea Lion.

Most hunting vessels, whether sealing or other schooners, set forth in the early part of February, in the very teeth of our heaviest storms. Seals may be found in greater or less numbers all along the coast, while the otter chooses for his habitation the higher latitudes, and is less gregarious in his habits. Formerly the otter hunter betook himself to the coast of Japan, where game abounded, but nowadays the best otter shooting is to be had on this side, in the vicinity of Alaska, or as much further North as one cares to go.

In one sense, all is fish that comes to the net of a hunting schooner. That is to say, an otter schooner will not disdain to take in any number of seals, while with even greater alacrity will a sealer fondly stow away a valuable otter skin in the hold. For a sealer 3000 skins is considered a good catch, while an otter schooner is thought fairly successful if she makes her home port with 100 hides on board. Otter skins, which range in value from $25 to $60 each, are not only scarce, but so difficult to get that only the most skilled and experienced hunters engage in their pursuit. Apparently the otter has a due appreciation of its own value, and is resolved to enhance as much possible the glory of its capture, for a more wary, tantalizing creature it would be hard to find. Seals, on the contrary, are sound sleepers, and are frequently caught napping. The wily otter will, it is true, feign sleep, but it is questionable if he ever yields himself utterly to the drowsy god. Do you doubt it? Behold him then at a distance, floating tranquilly on his back, his queer hind legs or flippers gently beating the water, while his short forepaws, not unlike those of a cat, are deftly raised to shade his eyes from the sun. Did ever you see a sweeter picture of innocent unconsciousness! Draw nearer, bold, bad man, within rifle range. Raise your gun—Presto! He is gone to the bottom of the deep, blue sea, and when he emerges, which will not be for a very long time, it will be in an altogether different locality.

The female seal bears its young on land, and leaves them there until they are old enough to paddle about for themselves; an exception to this rule being the leopard seal, which sometimes carries its young on its back. The infant otter, born on the water, shares the maternal adventures while it is yet literally in arms, and it is a pretty sight to see a mother swimming serenely on her back with her baby clasped to her breast. Often there is a round spot there, worn almost hairless by the friction of the little head. Startle her, and she will grasp the small otter closer, reverse her position and dive instantly. In this way young and injudicious mothers not unfrequently drown their pups by remaining too long under water, and the little otter, who is only half strangled, cries lustily upon coming to the surface, not unlike human babies after a spanking. Young otters are of a fearless and confiding nature, and may be readily approached; but as their fur is valueless, and, though easily tamed, they seldom survive captivity, few of them are taken. Left to himself, it seems impossible for a baby otter to sink. The writer has often amused himself by watching the earnest but futile efforts of one to get himself under water. A prettier or more engaging little creature it would be hard to imagine. A pair of bright, round eyes, a round face with the most innocent and charming expression, and for the rest, just a fluffy ball of yellow, woolly fur. The otter belongs to the order of marine mammalia, and, like the seal, suckles its young. Unlike the seal, it may hardly be called amphibious as it is very seldom seen on land. During the summer season it keeps well off shore, but in winter frequents kelp patches and reefs.

LEOPARD SEAL.

At about the age of one year the otter becomes, commercially speaking, worth talking about, and from that time on, if not preserved, the older he grows the [illegible] he is.

The crew of an otter schooner, all told, generally numbers eighteen men, [illegible] cook, cabin-boy and nine or ten sailors. Some large schooners carry double sets, or from twenty-seven to twenty-eight men. The average time is from seven to nine months for the round trip, and meanwhile the hunter is storing up, besides seal and otter skins, enough strong yarns to enliven the dull interval that he spends on shore before the next voyage.

Aside from the more familiar forms of danger, such as landsmen contemplate with their mind's eye when they picture the dangers of the deep—fire, shipwreck and the prevailing order of accidents—a thousand unique perils beset the life of a hunter for which he will need undaunted nerve and quickness of resource.

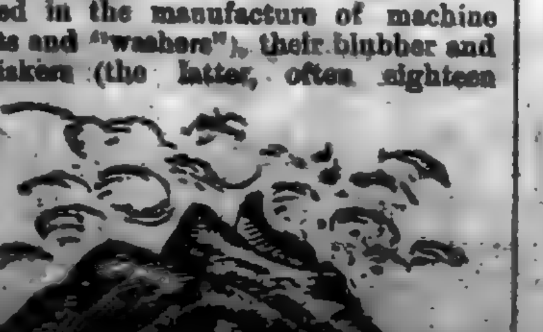
One young fellow tells of a meeting which occasioned mutual surprise, to say the least, and the effect of which was mighty disastrous to a [illegible]-pound sea lion. While prospecting for game on a rocky island, the hunter had climbed a sharp peak to reconnoitre. He found facing this elevation and separated from it by only a narrow hollow a second peak, on top of which was an enormous sea lion. For a space man and monster eyed one another critically from their respective perches, the hunter ardently coveting the lion's carcass and at the same time calculating the difficulty of getting it out of the hollow, where it was sure to fall, up over the first peak and along a stretch of rocks to the boat. He decided that it would be useless to kill the creature and forbore to waste cartridges on game that he could not secure. Meanwhile the lion had been making up his mind about the hunter. Apparently his impressions were not favorable, for with a loud roar he began the descent of his rock, advancing with the peculiar undulating motion of his species, not unlike that of a measuring worm.

SEA-OTTER ASLEEP.

Now, the man who imagines that a sea lion, for his clumsiness, is a slow traveler, will find himself badly mistaken in a go-as-you-please match over slippery rocks, and knowing this the hunter saw fit to retreat in very short order. Arrived at a respectful distance he awaited the foe in battle array. However, as time wore on and there were no signs he concluded that the lion must have turned back, and so proceeded to carry out his original intention of exploring the island. Again he climbed the first peak, crossed the hollow and boldly assailed the second. Within him was a vague expectation of seeing the enemy from afar off, if, indeed, the monster had not already plunged back into the sea.

Certainly nothing was further from his mind than thoughts of danger as he clambered gaily up till his head rose above the summit of the rock, and saw rising simultaneously from the other side and boldly confronting him, the sea lion. Though bad, the hunter was a sincere man. He could not conscientiously have held out the right hand of fellowship and said from his heart: "I am pleased to meet you, sir." Neither was the lion pleased, and he made no hollow pretense of delight. Rampant, open-jawed, with bristling whiskers, he glared at the hunter. Retreat was impossible. An instant's hesitation might be fatal. But two courses were open to the man—to drop headlong from the the rock or stand his ground. He chose the latter, braced himself, and with the muzzle of his rifle almost against the lion's breast, fired. The mighty beast reared, swayed backward and a moment after struck heavily on the ledge below, where he lay groaning until a second shot dispatched him.

Sea lions are hunted for their hides (used in the manufacture of machine belts and "washers"), their blubber and whiskers (the latter, often eighteen inches long, being largely utilized by the Chinese as toothpicks). The catch is usually limited to the month of June, at which time they repair in great numbers to the rocks, intent upon love and war. The combats which ensue between rival suitors are fearful to witness. Many of them are killed outright, others are fearfully wounded and die a lingering death, and not unfrequently the finest skins are so seamed and gashed as to be utterly worthless.



THE TWO PEAKS.

One of these monsters, weighing a ton or more, will seize his opponent by the chest and shake him till his teeth tear out through the inch-thick hide. Sometimes he will lift the other lion bodily till only his tail touches the rock, and the enemy will in turn lift him.

Notwithstanding his immense size and awkward make-up, the lion is an agile creature and rivals a professional ball-player in the skill with which he will catch and throw away whatever is flung to him.

To a landsman it might seem a little incongruous that while a young sea lion is in hunting parlance a "pup," the pup's mother is a "cow." Why this should be is, as Dundreary would say, "one of those things no fellow can find out."

The cow sea-lion's devotion to her young is sometimes very touching. A mother has been known to carry her dead pup about her for days, cuddling it against her neck, licking it and coaxing it to nurse.

As a rule, the young sea-lions—of which the female bears one yearly—are weaned at the age of a few months, but the writer has seen a farrow cow nursing and caring for, with the utmost tenderness, a yearling pup nearly as large as herself. Finally the cow laid down, whereupon the monstrous infant stretched himself out on her back and went to sleep.

A fur-hunter's life is, on the whole, by no means a sorry one. If a sealer, he makes from $[illegible]00 to $1400 a year exclusive of his keeping, but, if an otter hunter, the chances are rather less favorable. Aside from having to stand watch (a matter of two hours or less), his only care is to hunt, which even the best of hunters will do with widely varying success, sometimes making $60 or $70 in a few hours, and again, owing to stress of weather or ill luck, getting nothing for days.

THE SEA-LION AND THE HUNTER.

When off duty he beguiles the time pleasantly enough with reading, games, "swapping yarns," or playing with the ship's pets. Nearly every vessel has its "happy family," more or less curiously made up—one boat having on board a dog, cat, three kittens, two cows and a tame seal.

The provisioning of some schooners is quite luxurious, including all kinds of canned goods, to which are added every delicacy of the sea and occasional contributions from the land.

Grouse and sea gull eggs are eagerly sought for and much relished, especially when scrambled. Indeed, there is nothing eatable, whether in the heavens or earth or the waters under the earth, that a hungry hunter will not try, even to a sea parrot, which, though much resembling the traditional "biled owl," was once pronounced "not so bad for a change," by those who had the hardihood to partake of it.—San Francisco Chronicle.

[illegible] Reenacted.

It is understood that our esteemed Colonel Franc B. Wilkie is going to formulate a reply to Mrs. Ella Wheeler-Wilcox's latest poem, which begins as follows:

"I hold it as a changeless law
From which no soul can sway or swerve,
We have that in us which will draw
Whate'er we need, or most deserve."

We fancy the genial Colonel will start off with some such quatrain as this:

[illegible]

Sea Wisdom.

When the wind has died away,
Sinking with the sinking sun;
When the gold haze turns to gray,
And the purple fades to dun,
Lap the low waves of the sea
Through the twilight peace-possessed,
Sighing, hushed and drowsily:
"Rest forever—rest, ah, rest!"

Fair witch-maidens, long ago,
Hearkening to the same sea-speech,
Saw the black ships come and go,
Longed to lure them to the beach;
Wove a song of subtle rhyme,
Calling all things weariest,
Of the burden of old time:
"Rest forever—rest, ah, rest!"

Wisdom doth the hoar sea hold
In its slowly heaving deep;
Knows the rites and runes of old,
Knows the path beloved of Sleep
To the Goal Desirable
(Boon of all the last and best);
Sings us still the Siren spell:
"Rest forever—rest, ah, rest!"

A Mob of Koordish Women.

BY THOMAS STEVENS.

Who ever heard of a traveler falling into the hands of a mob of women? We read now and then of some traveler being attacked by a mob of Chinese, of falling into the hands of Italian or Turkish brigands, of being murdered or detained a prisoner by some uncivilized Asiatic or African potentate, but the attacking parties are always composed of men.

In most Eastern countries, and particularly among the half-civilized peoples, the women are usually kept well in the background. The traveler only sees them on the streets of the cities he visits moving about in a shy and quiet way, with their faces closely veiled. It is so in Turkey, Egypt, Persia, Arabia and Afghanistan, and in all Mohammedan countries.

My bicycle journey around the world, however, differed from an ordinary tour, inasmuch as it took me to many out-of-the-way regions and strange places seldom visited by other travelers. It took me at times among wild tribes and obscure races, to whom the sight of a European was a novelty as great as a genuine Zulu warrior would be to the readers of this paper.

Consequently I saw and experienced many strange things that do not usually fall to the lot of the globe-trotter who pursues his journeyings in the ordinary manner over well-beaten routes. One of the strangest of these experiences was, as I have already intimated, falling into the hands of a mob of women.

It was while making my way through one of the wildest sections of country in Western Persia, known as Persian Koordistan, that I found myself among a tribe of wild Koords. These people roam the deserts of Koordistan with their flocks and herds, living in big black tents of woven goat hair.

It is considered very unsafe for a traveler to venture among these half savage nomads alone, and the governor of the province usually sends an escort of soldiers to guard a person through the territory. The Pasha Khan of Ovahjik wanted to send an escort with me, but I always found an escort a nuisance, owing to the necessity of moderating my own speed to the ability of their horses.

Over the smooth camel trails of the level, gravelly deserts it was no trouble for me to cover sixty miles or more in a day with the bicycle, whereas the horsemen would never want to travel more than about thirty. This annoyed me, and I preferred to risk, venturing into the Koordish country alone.

Although they are not to be trusted, and are free-booters by nature and instinct, these wild children of the Persian deserts are very hospitable. So long as one is beneath the shelter of the chieftain's tent, both his person and property are held sacred. No sooner does the traveler start on his journey again, however, [illegible]

The first night I spent in the Koordish tents I was treated hospitably; but before riding two miles, I was intercepted by a couple of stalwart ruffians who intended to rob me, and would have done so had I not drawn my revolver and holding it ready, pressed steadily on. They hesitated a moment and then, to my great relief, turned back in the direction of the tents, and I saw them no more.

Early in the evening of the second day among the Koords, I reached a camp of about twenty tents, occupying the foot of a range of low hills. From the rude, uncivilized appearance and demeanor of the shepherds whom I passed in making my way toward the camp, I could see at once that they were a rough crowd; but there was no other place to go, so I had to seek the hospitality of their tents, whether I liked the outlook or not.

The chief of this camp I found was absent on a visit to some other branch of the tribe, many miles away. In the absence of the chieftain, one of the elders usually takes upon himself the office of entertaining guests. In this particular camp, however, there seemed to be no well-regulated arrangements of any kind.

One of the men motioned me into the nearest tent, and by and by a young woman brought me a bowl of clabbered goat-milk and a dish of pillau (boiled rice, or wheat) and herbs. She was a girl of most singular and striking appearance.

She was certainly no less than six feet tall—a very great stature for a woman—and her eyes were round and wild-looking, like the eyes of a cat, or more correctly, of some wild animal. So strangely like a wild animal's eyes were they in shape and expression, that it seemed to me as if they would most assuredly turn green and shine in a dark room like a cat's eyes.

All the women in the camp now came flocking about me, to take a curious look at the stranger from Frangistan, riding on the iron horse. They were a wild-looking lot of females. Many of them had their unkempt locks died to a fiery red, or "carroty" hue; and this, with the peculiar savage expression of their eyes, made them look as ferocious as so many human tigresses. All of them had these round, staring eyes; never before had I seen such an array of wild-animal orbs—no, not even in the Zoo at Central Park.

As they stood there watching me eat with the greatest curiosity, I dimly recollected reading, when a boy, about travelers being waylaid and captured on the road by bands of these tiger-eyed Koordish women. I remembered smiling and thinking the stories nothing but "traveler's tales" at the time, but I could see plainly enough then that these women were capable of anything that tigresses are capable of.

Although everything seemed to be managed in a loose, haphazard way in this camp, no order, no mannerliness about anything, they gave me some sheepskins to sleep on, and in the morning something more to eat.

When about mounting my bicycle to start, about twenty women came racing from the different tents, shouting and laughing like a lot of rude school-boys let out of school for a half-holiday. From the manner in which they issued from the tents, it was very plain that they had planned it all beforehand.

With much boisterous hilarity they surrounded me, and refused to let me go. If I attempted to break away from them, some would seize the bicycle, and others cling to my garments. They seemed to take a rude, boisterous delight in dancing about and worrying me, as though I were a rat and they a gang of puppies barking and capering about. They were a ferocious-looking lot of women, and their object was, very plainly, to overpower and rob me.

One of them [illegible] found in the pockets. Several times I broke loose, but they would form a ring about me again at once.

I was at a loss what to do. The men had all taken themselves off, evidently on purpose to leave the field clear for the women to rob me. One could not very well use his revolver on women, nor even use violent measures of defence. No American or Englishman, worthy of the name, would strike women, even though, like these wild Koordesses, they might be bent on doing him violence.

At length, after trying in vain several times to escape, I bethought me of a little strategy that would perhaps secure my freedom. Most of the money I had with me was in Turkish gold coins, concealed in a money-belt beneath my clothes. In a small leather case which I carried on the bicycle, however, I had a bag of native silver coins, which I needed to pay the incidental expenses of the road.

Bidding my tormentors keep quiet a minute by an impressive gesture, for I didn't know a word of their language, I took out this bag of coins, showed them that it was all the money there was in the case, and distributed it among them. They seemed to be but partly satisfied at this; evidently they expected to obtain a richer booty than a handful of silver pieces.

But although reluctant to let me go, they offered a less determined front than before, and I finally broke away from them. Springing into the saddle, I hastened to make good my escape; but I had to be pretty lively about it, for several of the more determined of these wild eyed women came racing after me almost as swiftly as deer. It was a unique experience, and one that I shall not be likely to soon forget, this adventure with the mob of Koordish women.

The Tools of Animals.

Animals do not know enough to make their own tools, as men can, and God has given them ready-made ones. The tail of a fish is his sculling oar. He moves it first on one side and then on the other, using his fins as balances to guide his motion. If the fish moves fast and wants to stop, he straightens out his fins just as the rower does his oars. A man makes a tool for drilling wood, but the woodpecker has a drill in his own bill, and when he drills holes in trees in search of food you can hear the click of his tool just as you would the man's. This drill of the woodpecker's has another tool inside, a sort of insect catcher. On the end is a bony thorn with sharp teeth like barbs on a fish hook. As he works and finds an insect he opens his drill and sends out this barbed tongue and draws it into his mouth. Some animals have tools to dig with. The hen digs for herself and her chickens. The pig uses his snout and roots away under the mud. The elephant uses his strong tusks, and the queer underground galleries of the mole are made with his heavy claws, with which he plows and digs. The woodchuck, too, is a great digger. His feet are shovels to dig the hole where he lives and the beaver uses his broad, flat tail as the mason does his trowel, spattering and smoothing the mud as he builds the walls of his cabin, while his sharp, powerful teeth are his saws, with which he gnaws off large branches of trees to build his dams. There is no limit to God's power in supplying the needs of the creatures he has made.—[Picayune.

How One Should Live.

To be honest, to be kind—to earn a little and to spend a little less; to make, upon the whole, a family happier for his presence; to renounce when that shall be necessary, and not to be embittered; to keep a few friends, but these without capitulation—above all, on the same grim condition, to keep friends with himself—here is a task for all that a man has of fortitude and delicacy. [illegible]

Testing Damp Walls.

A curious device for testing the dryness of wall is described in a German paper.

The apparatus for the purpose consists simply in small sheets of gelatine, which are made by taking the sheet gelatine of commerce, selecting the thinnest pieces, soaking them for a quarter of an hour in water until they are quite soft, spreading them out flat on a greased sheet of glass, and stretching them with the fingers until the folds and creases are smoothed out, and the whole made as thin and uniform as possible. The sheets are then thoroughly dried in the air, the edges, which are rough and uneven, are trimmed off, and the whole cut into pieces about two inches wide and four inches long, for use in testing. If kept flat, in a dry place, the gelatine strips are very sensitive to moist air. If a wall is suspected of being damp, a strip is moved slowly over it near its surface, but not touching it. If any damp spots exist, they are immediately shown by the curling of the gelatine as it passes near them. Although every one takes some interest in knowing whether his house is dry or not, this simple test is likely to be of more practical use to fresco painters and paper hangers than to any one else. Both of these to avoid disappointment and loss, need to know with certainty whether the walls and ceilings on which their art is to be exercised are dry or not, as their papers and colors will often change on damp plastering. In the case of a wall of masonry, particularly, plastered on the brickwork, it is difficult to tell by ordinary inspection whether the moisture has dried out or not, and the gelatine sheets may give the desired information with such certainty and precision as to be of great service.—[American Architect.

History of Horseshoeing.

There is no record which would indicate that the horses of Egypt in ancient times wore shoes of any kind, but it is supposed that in the days of Homer, about one thousand years B. C., the Greeks shod their horses with metal, for Homer mentions "brazen-footed steeds" in the "Iliad." In the time of Aristotle and Pliny horses were provided with boots drawn over their feet, but it does not appear that any metallic plates were nailed to the hoof. These leather or rawhide boots were sometimes made with metal soles, for we read that the "mules of Nero were shod with silver, and those of his wife (Poppœa) with gold." It is claimed that the first certain mention of shoes nailed to the hoofs is in the works of the Emperor Leo VI. in the ninth century. The practice of shoeing horses is said to have been introduced into England by William I., who reigned from 1066 to 1087. Before the introduction of the metal shoe there must have been a fearful loss of horses in time of war, where the animals were ridden or driven long distances over rough and hard roads. Cavalry in early times often became almost useless, owing to the soreness of the unprotected feet of the horses.—[New York Sun.

A Powerful Sermon.

A little girl came to her mother with the question: "Which is worse, to tell a lie or to steal?"

The mother, taken by surprise, replied that both were so bad that she couldn't tell which was the worse.

"Well" said the little one, "I've been thinking a good deal about it, and I think that it is worse to lie than to steal. If you steal a thing you can take it back, unless you've eaten it; and if you have eaten it, you can pay for it. But," and there was a look of awe in the little face, "a lie is forever."

President Benjamin Harrison was inaugurated on Monday with imposing ceremonies. The largest crowd ever seen in Washington was present.

The worst kind of competition comes from men who do not understand their business. They are found in all lines of trade and generally succeed in making their creditors pay for their lack of knowledge.

The Southern Yellow Pine Lumber Association will meet in Birmingham to-day. The Association embraces the States of Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi and Florida. Important business will be transacted, and the annual election of officers will take place.

Gov. Seay has appointed Attorney-General McClellan Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. Col. W. S. Thorington, of Montgomery, is most prominently mentioned to fill the vacancy in the Attorney General's office, and will no doubt secure the appointment if he desires it.

The New States.

Four new states have been admitted into the great American sisterhood. They are Washington, Montana, North Dakota and South Dakota. The four new states will send eight senators and six representatives to congress. This will increase the Republican representation unless there are notable political changes. The vote of the four states last year showed Republican majorities in each.

Record of the Legislature.

What, in cold facts, is the record? The record of the session is 551 bills passed. Of this number 380 were purely local, 48 were amendatory of the code, and a large proportion of these were of local application also. Only 123 laws of general character were enacted and of this number less than fifty were of any serious moment. The body sat during fifty working days, at a cost to the state of more than fifty thousand dollars.

There was one measure before it—the ballot reform bill, the enactment of which would have paid the state a thousand fold in the security of peace and progress and honest and intelligent government; but that never got a hearing. There was not in the whole legislature a single member wise and strong and brave enough to rescue it from the cruel constriction of the committee and give it one sweet breath of life. But this measure to cleanse our politics, to purify the ballot-box, and to confirm to posterity the heritage of freedom won by the blood of '76—this measure perished in a pigeon-hole without one friend to weep for it!

The members, we perceive, are lost in honest admiration of themselves. They have congratulated and complimented each other, and called mankind to witness the lustre of their achievements and the surpassing melody of their eloquence. They are to be envied for their philosophy. But, eighteen months hence in the light of thoughtful retrospection and quickening experience, the people will strike the balance in the ledger of their perfected judgement and compare the losses and the gains to civilization as if the Alabama legislature of 1888-9 had never met.—Montgomery Dispatch.

The Colored Voter.

The following is a verbatim copy of a letter received by Richard Arnold from an intelligent colored citizen with whom he has corresponded some months. Of course we suppress the name but the letter can be seen by any who may be skeptical as to its being genuine.

SHRIEVER P. O. LA., Aug. 26th, 1888.—MR. RICHARD ARNOLD—Dear Sir: Yours of the 3d inst., was duly received and also the many papers you have been pleased to send me for which I am very thankful. Please to excuse me for not writing sooner as I am doubtful if some letters are not opened and the writer made to suffer for them. Now the truth is no leading man is safe down here as they visit his house at night and either shoot him or hang him up to a tree and then say he had done some very bad crime. There is no law in this state to punish those who have bought "sixteen-shooters," as they call them for the only purpose of killing the colored people here, or in other words to kill out the leading men of the K. of L., that was growing so fast here in this part of the state last year. Within the year there have been about one hundred killed within the distance of fifty miles of this place, and I have been told that I was a marked man; so you see I must be careful.

Now, sir, in the papers of last spring I saw a movement under way leading to an exodus or emigration of the colored people to South America or some other place. Now, sir, if there is anything of the kind under way now or likely to be, please to let me know as many of us want to leave here with our families but have not got the means to do so, and if there is any way of getting help please let me know. As they have killed so many in this parish and no arrests have been made nor are likely to be made, the K. of L. are afraid to hold any more meetings and we would gladly go to a more agreeable country to live. As for myself I was born in the state of Maine, but have been down here for eighteen years and now so poor am unable to get away. Hoping to hear from you with the desired news and will be thankful to hear from you at any time and also thankful for the papers you have been pleased to send me. I will send you a paper published here so you can see what the black man's chances are in this part of a free country. Yours respectfully.

The foregoing is taken from a paper published in the State of Iowa, and is published only to show what miserable lies still continue to receive sanction and credulity by the northern press.

OVER THE COUNTY.

Neighborhood News Gathered by Our Correspondents.

From Jemison.

A few days ago, along with others we had the pleasure of calling at the VIEW office, where we enjoyed the courtesy of the worthy editor for a brief time, in which our mind was absorbed in admiring the neat and well-arranged rooms, from which comes the well-known and appreciated CHILTON VIEW and the only job printing in our county. And later we had the exquisite pleasure and honor of a short interview with the editor's wife and mother, and we parted from them with regrets that our time was so short with such entertaining ladies.

Now, Mr. Editor, I will tell your readers of the sweetest little incident that I have any remembrance of. Yesterday, at Mr. E. W. Chapman's, of Jemison, I heard his little daughter Edna sing and play on the organ, and her little sister Myrtle, who is not yet four years old, stood by and sang, knowing just when to start and stop. I was so much engaged and delighted that it led me to ask little Myrtle's mother for the names of the pieces she could sing. Here they are, "Beautiful Bells," "Tall and Handsome," "Waiting for me," "Come Let us Wander," "The Land of Beulah," "Work for the Night is Coming." "Gathering Home," "The Great Physician," "The Precious Name."

May God preserve the lives of those sweet little girls, they will adorn the family and community. Let every family that can be encouraged to have music in their homes. It makes them purer, sweeter and altogether more loveable. Yes, along with indispensable education, let music and flowers come to every home.

A MOTHER.

Stanton.

Seven years ago Stanton, the subject of this communication, was among the unknown, there being nothing here except an old church as Ebenezer, built in the year 1850, of which we will speak later.

In 1882 a company was organized in the city of Selma under the name of the Gregory-Cop Lumber Company, who selected this place as a suitable location for a lumber business and during the same year they planted a large saw mill here and christened the place Stanton, in honor of Mr. Stanton, the prominent railroad man who lost his life in the fearful accident at Dunklin's bridge on the E. T. V. & G. railroad.

We have preaching four Sabbaths in the month, prayer meeting twice a week and two flourishing Sabbath schools; also, a day school which would do credit to any town. This school is conducted by Prof. Jas. A. Harwood, who figured conspicuously in the late war as captain in the Confederate army. Capt. Harwood was one among those true and tried men belonging to the old Fourth Alabama, who led the famous and renowned charge at the battle of Gettysburg, known as Pickett's charge.

Mention was made of "Ebenezer Church" in the beginning of this communication, which recalls an incident of the late war, related by a gentleman of this county, which is worthy of note. In the spring of 1865 at this place Gen. Forest formed one of the last lines of confederate battles and it is known as the "Battle of Ebenezer Church." The old church is well marked by the bullets from both armies and a few trees still stand on the surrounding hills, whose bodies have been pierced by the flying cannon balls. There can also be seen, by close observers traces of mounds scattered over the hills and valleys. These mark the last resting place of some of the brave boys who wore the gray.

It was here that the gallant Forest was surprised and cut off from his command by two Yankee soldiers. The general, never lacking courage, took in the situation leveled his pistol and the one nearest him bit the dust. The other with musket pointed at Forest with finger on trigger, was in the act of sending the messenger of death into his bosom but the sharp report of a carbine was heard echoing over the hills and the man in blue fell with a bullet through his heart. As the curling smoke drifted away Forest saw a beardless boy clad in a ragged jacket of gray and to whom he was indebted. About the time the enemy was advancing in large force upon the few confederates forcing them to retreat and no allusion to the remarkable occurrence was made either by Forest or his rescuer, and it was not until late in the evening of the same day that they met again.

The brave general's heart was too full for words so leaping from the saddle he rushed to the soldier boy, threw his arms around him, and kissed him and said "Sir! You saved my life." This is all.

One great curse that rests upon the people of Iowa and the whole Northwest at the present time is debts. As prices of all commodities of the farm are shrinking in value and contraction of currency and distrust among capitalists causes them to guard their wealth by means of combines, trusts, etc. We can expect nothing else but that money will continue to sell at outrageous figures and nothing but the closest economy and the most persistent effort to increase our income and lessen our expenses will save us. The honest fact is over three-fourths of the farms of the state are to-day under mortgage. Not only are a large majority of the farms of our commonwealth encumbered but our towns and cities are laboring under enormous municipal debts. Taxes are therefore necessarily much higher than they would otherwise be. How can we tide over this state of affairs except by the strictest kind of economy? A member of one of our late agricultural firms, now of Traer, told us that their firm had over seven thousand dollars of debts upon their books which were uncollectable, therefore it must stand to reason that large profits must have been realized by those who were able and willing to pay for what they got of the above firm while in business here or they would have been unable to stand any such losses. It behooves every member of the Alliance to pay for what he gets in spot cash and buy where no reckless system of credit is carried on. Better pay twenty-five per cent. for money than to go recklessly in debt. The members of the Farmers' Alliance of Dakota have been able by co-operation to obtain money at 9 per cent. for which they had before paid as nigh as 36 per cent. per month to the money sharks of that teritory. The money question alone has saved the members thousands of dollars. Exhorbitant charges for farmers supplies are no longer in vogue there, and the Alliance work is bound to prove a blessing to the sons of toil of that country. —Iowa Labor Review.

The above is sufficient to show that the great northwest is not so gloriously great as a farmers country after all. We had been led to believe that it was an Eldorado in every respect save climate. But this clipping from an Iowa paper presents even a more gloomy picture than could be truthfully painted of any section of the south.

The Great Newspaper of the South.

The AGE-HERALD, in addition to covering the field most thoroughly with their bright and newsy daily, is getting out the Great Weekly of the South. It is a mammoth 12-page paper at only $1 a year, with a ticket for every subscriber to the largest gift distribution of over $8,000 in valuable and useful articles ever offered by a newspaper. It is a paper for the farm and fireside. Its Agricultural Department is full of practical information for the farmer, while its Household Department renders it a treasure to every housewife in the land. A special feature is also made of a department for Our Little Folks.

We will furnish the WEEKLY AGE-HERALD and our paper one year for $2 and give each subscriber a ticket to the gift distribution.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Public school at this place closes to-morrow.

Mrs. W. H. McNeil is on a visit to Birmingham,

Mr. Jay Hall, of Mobile, is visiting relatives in town.

Messrs. Jones & Bentley, of Rockford, have been in town this week.

Mrs. T. G. Holt, has been visiting friends in Montgomery the past week,

Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Herbert of Jemison, have been visiting friends in our town.

Miss Mamie Bivings, of Montgomery, visited relatives in Clanton this week.

The young people of Clanton have organized a literary society. We hope it will prove a success.

The VIEW is indebted to Bro. McCall, of the Calera Sentinel, for kind mention. The tall editor especially.

Calera is in the midst of a bitter prohibition cross-fire. We don't know of any thing worse, and we sympathise with all concerned.

Rev. Mr. Sanders preached two excellent sermons at the Clanton Methodist church last Sunday morning and evening.

Circuit court adjourned over from Friday until yesterday owing to the illness of the presiding judge.

Dr. J. P. Robinson thinks of removing from Birmingham to Clanton his old home the coming summer.

The civil docket was so crowded that Judge Dowdell spoke of giving us a special term of circuit court in order to clear it up.

New Goods.

I have now in stock a fresh supply of clothing at very low prices and also a full line of shoes guaranteed as represented and the prices are not to be beat in this market. W. J. SAMBEY.

Ex-Sheriff Smitherman spent several days in Clanton last week.

Married, at Celina, O., on the 4th inst., Mr. John A. Caldwell, of Tuskaloosa, Ala., and Miss Carra Davidson, of Celina.

One Clanton lumber dealer reports sales to the amount of 1,500,000 feet of lumber in Birmingham the past week.

A negro was arrested by deputy Stewart, at Verbena, on Tuesday and brought to Clanton and jailed. He is wanted in Bullock county for hog-stealing.

The next quarterly meeting of the Chilton county alliance will be held at Union Church about four miles east of Jemison on the first Wednesday in April next.

The Birmingham Marble Works have just received a beautiful shipment of imported marble from Scotland. Parties desiring anything in the way of marble, can be suited in quality and price at these works, and will find the polite and accommodating proprietor ready to show them through the specimens on the grounds.

The grand jury found twenty three true bills. Three of them we understand were against a Clanton "blind tiger." The proposition to hold a special term of court in order to clear up the docket meets with general favor, and the litigants particularly are very desirous that such a term be held.

This advice from an exchange is worth following: Never go where you are not wanted. If a man wants you to go to his house he will invite you to do so, and if a merchant wants you to visit his place of business he will invite you through the columns of your newspaper. It is wrong to intrude on privacy; don't do it."

Only a small percentage of the people of Clanton attended the circus here Friday. When the effort was made to start the gambling performances in the side show, the Sheriff was on hand promptly and put a stop to the "racket," and the concern failed to carry away a good many dollars that otherwise might have been carried away, but for the vigilance of the officer.

Following are the officers of the Chilton County Farmer's Alliance:

R. M. Honeycutt, President.
W. A. Woods, Vice President.
Alex. G. Dake, Secretary.
W. W. Adams, Treasurer.
R. M. Honeycutt, Lecturer.
Jos. A. Logan, Ass't Lecturer.
W. M. Wood, Chaplain.
A. C. Oates, Door-keeper.
H. Z. Barnes, Ass't Door-keeper.
Executive Committee — O. M. Mastin, E. L. Manning, L. J. Reynolds.
County Business Agent—Alex. G. Dake.

Meets 1st Wednesday in January, April, July and October.

The Only Perfect Remedy

For habitual constipation, dyspepsia, and kindred ills is the famous California liquid fruit remedy Syrup of Figs. It strengthens as well as cleanses the system, it is easily taken, and perfectly harmless. For sale in 50 cents and $1 bottles. jul 19

A representative of the Shelby Chronicle who attended court in Clanton last week writes in very complimentary terms of the VIEW and its editor. While thanking our friend for his very nice mention, we cannot fail to add that we are pleased to note the prosperity of the Chronicle—a paper which, for real merit, neat print and readable matter, is unexcelled by any weekly that reaches our office.

Jail Delivery.

Sheriff Hayes was run over and knocked down by two negro prisoners at the county jail on Monday morning. He caught one of them and held him while the other managed to escape. By eight o'clock however hounds and a posse were on track of the fleeing darkey and he was captured about 10 o'clock five miles from town. One of the prisoners struck the sheriff with a lock several times, and will probably have the charge of resisting and assaulting an officer entered against him. The names of the prisoners were J. S. Pearson and Jeff Cook. A trusty at the jail gave them keys with which to unlook their cells, and they assaulted the sheriff when he opened the outer door.

Answer this Question.

Why do so many people we see around us seem to prefer to suffer and be made miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of Appetite, Coming up of the Food, Yellow Skin, when for 75 cents, we will sell them Shiloh's System Vitalizer, guaranteed to cure them. Sold by A. E. Bivings, Clanton.

It Reminded Mr. Allen of a Story.

The day after the last national election Senator Blackburn and Representative Allen of Mississippi—a man who is described by the Kentucky Senator as the wittiest and loneliest looking man he has ever met—were together in the Capitol building when they were approached by young Editor Hearst, who excitedly showed them a telegram from his father, the California Senator. The message ran in this way: As sure as there is a God in heaven Grover Cleveland has carried California. At that time it was well known that New York State had been carried by Harrison, and it made no earthly difference what the voters of California had determined their verdict should be. Allen read the telegram, and then handing it back to the young San Francisco editor said to him solemnly: "Young man, your father's words reminded me of an acquaintance of mine who went out to Colorado and was thrown from a bronco pony and killed. His companions sent this telegraphic message to his widow, "Jim has been thrown by a bronco, and his neck, both legs and one arm are broken. Several hours later they sent the widow this additional telegraphic message.

"Later particulars, Matter not as bad as first reported. Jim's arm was not broken."

HELP FOR THE SUFFERING.

How often a home is made sad by the suffering of some member of the family. How keenly the good wife sympathizes with her invalid husband, how greatly the kind husband hopes for his sick wife's recovery. Blessed be the men that furnish sick and aching humanity with a remedy that brings sure relief.

Isaac H. Otlaw, Mt. Olive, N. C. writes: "I was troubled with skin disease and was broken out in running sores. I had been afflicted for ten years SKIN DISEASES and usually got worse in hot months. Eight months ago I got a bottle B. B. B. at John R. Smith's drug store at Mt. Olive, and it has entirely cured me, and I have had no symptoms of the disease since."

Kennesaw, Ga., Sept. 17, 1887.

Blood Balm Company. My Dear Sirs: I take great pleasure in acknowledging the great benefit my wife has derived from your great and wonderful medicine, B. B. B. For two years she was a great suffer from Scrofula or some blood disease which had lain dormant all her life; we had attention from some of the most skillful SCROFULA physicians in the country but all to no effect until we had all despaired of her recovering. Her mouth was a solid ulcer and for two months or more her body was broken out with sores until she lost a beautiful head of hair, also her eye-lashes and eye-brows. In fact she seemed to be a complete wreck. Now comes the great secret which I want all the world to know, and that is that three bottles of Blood Balm medicine has done the work, which would sound incredible to any one who did not know it to be so. To day my wife is perfectly healthy and clear from any scrofulous taint, and she now has a three months old babe also perfectly healthy. Very Respectfully,

H. L. CASSIDY.

REV. DR. TALMAGE.

THE BROOKLYN DIVINE'S SUNDAY SERMON.

Subject: "The Literature of the Dust."

TEXT: "Jesus stooped down and wrote on the ground."—John viii, 6.

A Mohammedan mosque stands now where once stood Herod's temple, the scene of my text. Solomon's temple had stood there, but Nebuchadnezzar thundered it down. Zorobabel's temple had stood there, but that had been prostrated. Now we take our places in a temple that Herod built because he was fond of great architecture and he wanted the preceding temples to seem insignificant. Put eight or ten cathedrals together and they would not equal that structure. It covered nineteen acres. There were marble pillars supporting roofs of cedar and silver tables on which stood golden cups, and there were carvings exquisite and inscriptions resplendent, glittering balustrades and ornamented gateways. The building of this temple kept ten thousand workmen busy forty-six years. In that stupendous pile of pomp and magnificence sat Christ, and a listening throng stood about him, when a wild disturbance took place. A group of men are pulling and pushing along a woman who has committed the worst crime against society. When they have brought her in front of Christ, they ask that He sentence her to death by stoning. They are a critical, merciless, disingenuous crowd. They want to get Christ into controversy and public reprehension. If He say: "Let her die," they will charge Him with cruelty. If He let her go, they will charge Him with being in complicity with wickedness. Whichever way He does, they would howl at Him. Then occurs a scene which has not been sufficiently regarded. He leaves the lounge or bench on which He was sitting and goes down on one knee, or both knees, and with the forefinger of His right hand He begins to write in the dust of the floor, word after word. But they were not to be diverted or hindered. They kept on demanding that He settle this case of transgression until He looked up and told them that they might themselves begin the woman's assassination, if the complainant who had never done anything wrong himself would open the fire. "Go ahead, but be sure that the man who flings the first missile is immaculate." Then He resumed writing with His finger in the dust of the floor, word after word. Instead of looking over His shoulder to see what He had written the scoundrels skulked away. Finally, the whole place is clear of pursuers, antagonists and plaintiffs, and when Christ has finished this strange chirography in the dust, He looks up and finds the woman all alone. The prisoner is the only one of the court room left, the judges, the police, the prosecuting attorneys having cleared out. Christ is victor, and He says to the woman: "Where are the prosecutors in this case? Are they all gone? Then I discharge you; go and sin no more."

I have always wondered what Christ wrote on the ground. For do you realize that is the only time that He ever wrote at all? I know that Eusebius says that Christ once wrote a letter to Abgarus, the King of Edessa, but there is no good evidence of such a correspondence. The wisest being the world ever saw and the one who had more to say than any one who ever lived, never writing a book or a chapter, or a page or a paragraph, or a word on parchment. Nothing but this literature of the dust, and one sweep of a brush or one breath of a wind obliterated that forever. Among all the rolls of the volumes of the first library founded at Thebes there was not one scroll of Christ. Among the seven hundred thousand books of the Alexandrian library, which by the infamous decree of Caliph Omar were used as fuel to heat the four thousand baths of the city, not one sentence had Christ penned. Among all the infinitude of volumes now standing in the libraries of Edinburgh, the British Museum, or Berlin or Vienna, or the learned repositories of all nations, not one word written directly by the finger of Christ! All that he ever wrote he wrote in dust, uncertain, shifting, vanishing dust.

My text says He stooped down and wrote on the ground. Standing straight up a man might write on the ground with a staff, but if with his fingers he would write in the dust, he must bend clear over. Aye, he must get at least on one knee or he cannot write on the ground. Be not surprised that He stooped down. His whole life was a stooping down. Stooping down from castle to barn. Stooping down from celestial homage to mobocratic jeer. From residence above the stars to where a star had to fall to designate His landing place. From heaven's front door to the world's back gate. From writing in round and silvered letters of constellation and galaxy on the blue scroll of heaven, to writing on the ground in the dust, which the feet of the crowd had left in Herod's temple. If in January you have ever stepped out of a prince's conservatory that had Mexican cactus and magnolias in full bloom, into the outside air ten degrees below zero, you may get some idea of Christ's change of atmosphere from celestial to terrestrial. How many heavens there are I know not, but there are at least three, for Paul was "caught up into the third heaven." Christ came down from highest heaven to the second heaven, and down from second heaven to first heaven, down swifter than meteors ever fell, down amidst stellar splendors that Himself eclipsed, down through clouds, through atmospheres, through appalling space, down to where there was no lower depth. From being waited on at the banquet of the skies to the broiling of fish for His own breakfast on the banks of the lake. From emblazoned chariots of eternity to the saddle of a mule's back. The homage cherubic, seraphic, archangelic, to the paying of sixty-two and a half cents of tax to Cæsar. From the deathless country to a tomb built to hide human dissolution. The uplifted wave of Galilee was high, but He had to come down before, with His feet, He could touch it, and the whirlwind that rose above the billow was higher yet, but He had to come down before, with His lip, He could kiss it into quiet. Bethlehem a stooping down. Nazareth a stooping down. Death between two burglars a stooping down. Yes, it was in consonance with humiliations that had gone before and with self abnegations that came after, when on that memorable day in Herod's temple He stooped down and wrote on the ground.

Whether the words He was writing were in Greek, or Latin, or Hebrew, I cannot say, for He knew all those languages. But He is still stooping down and with His finger writing on the ground; in the winter in letters of crystals, in the spring in letters of flowers, in summer in golden letters of harvest, in autumn in letters of fire on fallen leaves. How it would sweeten up and enrich and emblazon this world could we see Christ's caligraphy all over it. This world was not flung out into space thousands of years ago and then left to look out for itself. It is still under the divine care. Christ never for a half second takes His hand off of it, or it would soon be a shipwrecked world, a defunct world, an obsolete world, an abandoned world, a dead world. "Let there be light" was said at the beginning. And Christ stands under the wintry skies and says: Let there be snowflakes to enrich the earth: and under the clouds of spring and says: Come ye blossoms and make redolent the orchards, and in September, dips the branches into the vat of beautiful colors and swings them in the hazy air. No whim of mine is this. "Without Him was not anything made that was made." Christ writing on the ground. If we could see His hand in all the passing seasons how it would illumine the world! All verdure and foliage would be in allegoric, and again we would hear Him say as of old: "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow;" and we would not hear the whistle of a quail or the cawing of a raven or the roundelay of a brown-thrasher, without saying: "Behold the fowls of the air, they gather not into barns, yet your Heavenly Father feedeth them;" and a Dominic hen of the barnyard could not cluck for her brood, yet we would hear Christ saying as of old: "How often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathered her chickens under her wings;" and through the redolent [illegible] we would hear Christ saying: "I am the Rose of Sharon;" we could not dip the [illegible] from the salt cellar without thinking of the Divine suggestion: "Ye are the salt of the earth, but if the salt have lost its savor it is fit for nothing but to be cast out, and trodden under foot of men." Let us wake up [illegible] visited us," or caught in a snowstorm while struggling home, eyebrows and beard and apparel all covered with the whirling flakes, we would cry out with David: "Wash me and I shall be whiter than snow." In a picture gallery of Europe, there is on the ceiling an exquisite fresco, but people having to look straight up, it wearied and dizzied them, and bent their necks almost beyond endurance, so a great looking-glass was put near the floor and now visitors only need to look easily down into this mirror and they see the fresco at their feet. And so much of all the heavens of God's truth is reflected in this world as in a mirror, and the things that are above are copied by things all around us. What right have we to throw away one of God's Bibles, aye, the first Bible He ever gave the race? We talk about the Old Testament and the New Testament, but the oldest Testament contains the lessons of the natural world. Some people like the New Testament so well they discard the Old Testament. Shall we like the New Testament and the Old Testament so well as to depreciate the oldest; namely, that which was written before Moses was put afloat on the boat of leaves which was calked with asphaltum; or reject the Genesis and the Revelation that were written centuries before Adam lost a rib and gained a wife? No, no; when Deity stoops down and writes on the ground, let us read it. I would have no less appreciation of the Bible on paper that comes out of the paper mill, but I would urge appreciation of the Bible in the grass, the Bible in the sand hill, the Bible in the geranium, the Bible in the asphodel, the Bible in the dust. Some one asked an ancient king whether he had seen the eclipse of the sun. "No," said he, "I have so much to do on earth, I have no time to look at heaven." And if our faculties were all awake in the study of God, we would not have time to go much further than the first grass blade. I have no fear that natural religion will ever contradict what we call revealed religion. I have no sympathy with the followers of Aristotle, who after the telescope was invented, would not look through it, lest it contradict some of the theories of their great master. I shall be glad to put against one lid of the Bible the microscope, and against the other lid of the Bible the telescope.

But when Christ stooped down and wrote on the ground, what did He write? The Pharisees did not stop to examine. The cowards, whipped of their own consciences, fled pell mell. Nothing will flay a man like an aroused conscience. Dr. Stevens, in his "History of Methodism," says that when Rev. Benjamin Abbott of olden times was preaching, he exclaimed: "For aught I know there may be a murderer in this house," and a man rose in the assemblage and started for the door and bawled aloud, confessing to a murder he had committed fifteen years before. And no wonder these Pharisees, reminded of their sins, took to their heels. But what did Christ write on the ground? The Bible does not state. Yet, as Christ never wrote anything except that once, you cannot blame us for wanting to know what He really did write. But I am certain He wrote nothing trivial, or nothing unimportant. And, will you allow me to say that I think I know what He wrote on the ground? I judge from the circumstances. He might have written other things, but kneeling there in the temple, surrounded by a pack of hypocrites, who were a self appointed constabulary, and having in His presence a persecuted woman who evidently was very penitent for her sins, I am sure He wrote two words both of them graphic and tremendous and reverberating. And the one word was hypocrisy and the other word was forgiveness. From the way these Pharisees and scribes vacated the premises and got out into the fresh air, as Christ, with just one ironical sentence, unmasked them, I know they were first-class hypocrites. It was then as it is now. The more faults and inconsistencies people have of their own, the more severe and censorious are they about the faults of others. Here they are—twenty stout men arresting and arraigning one weak woman. Magnificent business to be engaged in. They wanted the fun of seeing her faint away under a heavy judicial sentence from Christ, and then after she had been taken outside the city and fastened at the foot of the precipice, the Scribes and Pharisees wanted the satisfaction of each coming and dropping a big stone on her head, for that was the style of capital punishment that they asked for. Some people have taken the responsibility of saying that Christ never laughed. But I think as He saw those men drop everything, chagrined, mortified, exposed and go out quicker than they came in, He must have laughed. At any rate, it makes me laugh to read of it. All of these libertines, dramatizing indignation against impurity. Blind bats lecturing on optics. A flock of crows on their way up from a carcass, denouncing carrion. Yes, I think that one word written on the ground that day by the finger of Christ was the awful word of hypocrisy. But I am sure there was another word in that dust. From her entire manner I am sure that arraigned woman was repentant. She made no apology, and Christ in no wise belittled her sin. But her supplicatory behavior and her tears moved Him, and when He stooped down to write on the ground, He wrote that mighty, that imperial word, forgiveness. When on Sinai God wrote the law, He wrote it with finger of lightning on tables of stone, each word cut as by a chisel into the hard granite surface. But when He writes the offense of this woman He writes it in the dust so that it can be easily rubbed out, and when she repents of it, oh, He was a merciful Christ! I was reading of a legend that is told in the far East about Him. He was walking through the streets of a city and He saw a crowd around a dead dog. And one man said: "What a loathsome object is that dog!" "Yes," said another, "his ears are mauled and bleeding." "Yes," said another, "even his hide would not be of any use to the tanner." "Yes," said another, "the odor of his carcass is dreadful." Then Christ, standing there, said: "But pearls cannot equal the whiteness of His teeth." Then the people, moved by the idea that any one could find anything pleasant concerning a dead dog, said: "Why, this must be Jesus of Nazareth." Reproved and convicted they went away. Surely this legend of Christ is good enough to be true. Kindness in all His words and ways and habits. Forgiveness. Word of eleven letters, and some of them thrones, and some of them palm branches. Better have Christ write close to our names that one word, though He write it in dust, than to have our name cut into monumental granite with the letters that the storms of a thousand years cannot obliterate. Bishop Eabington had a book of only three leaves. The first leaf was black, the second leaf red, the third leaf white. The black leaf suggested sin; the red leaf atonement; the white leaf purification. That is the whole story. God will abundantly pardon.

I must not forget to say that as Christ, stooping down, with His finger wrote on the ground, it is evident that His sympathies are with this penitent woman, and that He has no sympathy with her hypocritical pursuers. Just opposite to that is the world's habit. Why didn't these unclean Pharisees bring one of their own number to Christ for excoriation and capital punishment? No, no; they overlook that in a man which they [illegible] in a woman. And so the world has bad for offending women scourges and objurgation, and for just one offense she becomes an outcast, while for men whose lives have been sodomic for twenty years, the world swings opens its doors of brilliant welcome, and they may sit in legislatures and senates and parliaments or on thrones. Unlike the Christ of my text, the world writes a man's misdemeanor in dust, but chisels a woman's offense with great capitals upon ineffaceable marble. For foreign lords and princes, whose names cannot even be mentioned in respectable circles abroad, because they are walking lazarettos of abomination, our American princesses of fortune wait, and at the first beck sail out with them into the blackness of darkness forever. And in what are called higher circles of society there is now not only their imitation of foreign dress and foreign manners, but an imitation of foreign dissoluteness. I like an Englishman and I like an American, but the sickest creature on earth is an American playing the Englishman. Society needs to be reconstructed on this subject. Treat them alike, masculine crime and feminine crime. If you cut the one in granite, cut them both in granite. If you write the one in dust, write the other in dust. No, no, says the world, let woman go down and let man go up. What is that I hear plashing into the East River at midnight, and then there is a gurgle as of strangulation, and all is still. Never mind. It is only a woman too discouraged to live. Let the mills of the cruel world grind [illegible] us.

But while I speak of Christ of His stooping down writing in the dust, we think I understand the literature of the dust. It is the verse [illegible] of all literature. It is the grandest [illegible] libraries. When [illegible]

Pompeii have only been the [illegible] of the lids of a volume of a nation's dust. When Admiral Farragut and his friends, a few years ago, visited that resurrected city, the house of Balbo, who had been one of the chief citizens in its prosperous days, was opened and a table was spread in that house which eighteen hundred and ten years has been buried by volcanic eruption, and Farragut and his guests walked over the exquisite mosaics and under the beautiful fresco, and it almost seemed like being entertained by those who eighteen centuries ago had turned to dust. Oh, this mighty literature of the dust. Where are the remains of Sennacherib and Attila and Epaminondas and Tamerlane and Trojan and Philip of Macedon and Julius Cæsar? Dust! Where are the heroes who fought on both sides at Chæronea, at Hastings, at Marathon, at Cressy, of the 110,000 men who fought at Agincourt, of the 250,000 men who faced death at Jena, of the 300,000 whose armor glittered in the sun at Wragram, of the 1,000,000 men under Darius at Arbela, of the 2,641,000 men under Xerxes at Thermopylæ? Dust!

Where are the guests who danced the floors of the Alhambra, or the Persian palaces of Ahasuerus? Dust! Where are the musicians who played and the orators who spoke, and the sculptors who chiseled, and the architects who built in all the centuries except our own? Dust! The greatest library of the world, that which has the widest shelves and the longest aisles and the most multitudinous volumes and the vastest wealth, is the underground library. It is the royal library, the continental library, the hemispheric library, the planetary library, the library of the dust. And all these library cases will be opened, and all these scrolls unrolled and all these volumes unclasped and as easily as in your library or mine we take up a book, blow the dust off of it, and turn over its pages, so easily will the Lord of the Resurrection pick up out of this library of dust every volume of human life and open it and read it and display it. And the volume will be rebound, to be set in the royal library of the King's palace, or in the prison library of the self destroyed. Oh, this mighty literature of the dust! It is not so wonderful after all that Christ chose, instead of an inkstand, the impressionable sand on the floor of an ancient temple, and, instead of a hard pen, put forth His forefinger with the same kind of nerve, and muscle, and bone, and flesh, as that which makes up our own forefinger, and wrote the awful doom of hypocrisy and full and complete forgiveness for repentant sinners, even the worst.

And now I can believe that which I read, how that a mother kept burning a candle in the window every night for ten years, and one night very late a poor waif of the street entered. The aged woman said to her: "Sit down by the fire," and the stranger said: "Why do you keep that light in the window?" The aged woman said: "That is to light my wayward daughter when she returns. Since she went away ten years ago my hair has turned white. Folks blame me for worrying about her, but you see I am her mother, and sometimes, half a dozen times a night, I open the door and look out into the darkness and cry: 'Lizzie! Lizzie!' But I must not tell you any more about my trouble, for I guess, from the way you cry, you have trouble enough of your own. Why, how cold and sick you seem! Oh, my! can it be! Yes, you are Lizzie, my own lost child. Thank God that you are home again!" And what a time of rejoicing there was in that house that night! And Christ again stooped down, and in the ashes of that hearth, now lighted up not more by the great blazing logs than by the joy of a reunited household, wrote the same liberating words that He had written more than eighteen hundred years ago in the dust of the Jerusalem temple. Forgiveness! A word broad enough and high enough to let pass through it all the armies of heaven, a million abreast, on white horses, nostril to nostril, flank to flank.

Death of a Centenarian Slave.

In a little cottage out on Galvez street there departed from this life, on Sunday last, Francoise Cimilien, a colored woman, who was more than a 100 years old, and who had a little history of her own.

It was related to the writer by one of the many granddaughters of the deceased that the exact age of "Mamy," as the old soul was known, had never been established, but that, at all events, she was sold to parties in New Orleans six years before the battle of New Orleans. Her birthplace had been in the West Indies, on the Island of San Domingo, whence she was stolen and taken to Savannah, Ga. It was then she was brought to New Orleans. At that time she had already been a mother some years. It was therefore safe in fixing her age at over 100 years.

"Mamy's" first master was a Mr. Allard, who sold her to Chevallier de Reggio, the maternal great-grandfather of General G. T. Beauregard, a kinsman of the reigning dukes of the day, who was sent to Louisiana, where he was afterwards made "Alferez Real." When General Beauregard was born in 1818, in St. Bernard parish, a short distance below the city, "Mamy" was the wet-nurse selected for him. She served her young master faithfully for eleven years, until he was sent away for his education.

Years before the war came on "Mamy" was given her freedom by the Beauregard family. She continued to linger about the old homestead, and was treated with kindness and affection. She saw her children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren grow up about her. Only one child remains—a daughter about eighty years of age. There are numerous grandchildren and great-grandchildren still living.

Francoise Cimilien was small in height and physique. Her health has always been excellent until three days before her taking off, when she was taken with pneumonia. She was inclined to be gay even at her age, and loved to talk on the many and varied events of her past life.—New Orleans Picayune.

Butter from Australia.

Australia has entered the English market as a producer of butter. New Zealand is claimed to be organizing to send butter to the same market. New South Wales is reported to have had butter factories established for four years. The Australian butter is said to be equal to the Danish butter by English dealers, and considerable feeling seems to be expressed in dairy circles in Great Britain as to this new source of decreasing the profits to home dairy products.

The idea of sending butter from Australia seems to have arisen in the success of the dairy department at the Melbourne Exposition. It has certainly attracted much attention. It is said now to be the intention of the authorities to cause the dairy exposition to travel over the country for the education of persons in districts remote from Melbourne.

An English contemporary in this connection thinks the secret of British experience in the world's fight in the matter of dairying, is the weakness of the art in England, and it is asked: "Why should British farmers not set to work in downright earnest, and produce an article which, both for cheapness to the consumer and quality, would command the British market and keep the foreigner at bay? A little knowledge of the details of their business, together with the merest smattering of science, would enable them to hold their own—to show the people on the other side of the world that it will not pay to send such produce as butter all the way to the English [illegible]."

We presume the natural answer to the above statement lies in the fact that America and Australia, as is the case with most producers, can produce butter cheaper than can the English [illegible]

ACCIDENTAL DISCOVERIES.

The Curious Way Certain Important Processes Were Suggested.

Valuable discoveries have been made and valuable inventions suggested, by the veriest accidents. An alchemist, while seeking to discover a mixture of earths that would make the most durable crucibles, one day found that he had made porcelain. The power of lenses as applied to the telescope, was discovered by a watchmaker's apprentice. While holding spectacle-glasses between his thumb and finger he was startled at the suddenly enlarged appearance of a neighboring church spire. The art of etching upon glass was discovered by a Nuremburg glass cutter. By accident a few drops of aqua fortis fell upon his spectacles. He noticed that the glass became corroded and softened where the acid had touched it. That was hint enough. He drew figures upon glass with varnish, applied the corroding fluid, then cut away the glass around the drawing. When the varnish was removed the figures appeared raised upon a dark ground.

Mezzotinto owed its invention to the simple accident of the gun-barrel of a sentry becoming rusted with dew. The swaying to and fro of a chandelier in a cathedral suggested to Galileo the application of the pendulum. The art of lithographing was perfected through suggestions made by accident. A poor musician was curious to know whether music could not be etched upon stone as well as upon copper. After he had prepared his slab his mother asked him to make a memorandum of such clothes as she proposed to send away to be washed. Not having pen, ink and paper convenient, he wrote the list on the stone with the etching preparation, intending to make a copy of it at leisure. A few days later, when about to clean the stone, he wondered what effect aqua fortis would have upon it. He applied the acid, and in a few minutes saw the writing standing out in relief. The next step necessary was simply to ink the stone and take off an impression.

The shop of a Dublin tobacconist by the name of Lundyfoot was destroyed by fire. While he was gazing dolefully into the smouldering ruins he noticed that his poorer neighbors were gathering the snuff from the cannisters. He tested the snuff for himself and discovered that the fire had largely improved its pungency. It was a hint worth profiting by. He secured another shop, built a lot of ovens, subjected the snuff to a heating process, gave the brand a particular name, and in a few years became rich through an accident which he at first thought had completely ruined him. The process of whitening sugar was discovered in a curious way. A hen that had gone through a clay puddle went with her muddy feet into a sugar house. She left her tracks on a pile of sugar. It was noticed that wherever her tracks were the sugar was whitened. Experiments were instituted, and the result was that wet clay came to be used in refining sugar. The origin of blue-tinted paper came about by a mere slip of the hand. The wife of William East, an English paper maker, accidentally let a blue bag fall into one of the vats of pulp.

First Principles of Macadamizing.

Seventy-second street, in New York city, is one of the smoothest pieces of macadam in the United States. "A good macadamized road," says an old contractor to a Tribune reporter, "is as smooth as ashpalt and as durable as Belgian pavement. We've continued to the method of constructing such a road ever since MacAdam showed us the first principles. You remember how he used to do? It is important that the stones should be as nearly as possible of one size. He hired men to break them with hammers and made it a rule that no stone should be used that could not go into the mouth of the man that broke it. One day his foreman discharged an Irishman for refusing to break stone to a proper size. The Irishman complained to MacAdam, who, on investigation, found that the man had conformed to the regulations in every respect. The trouble was with his mouth, which was twice the ordinary size. We do the breaking better in these days and don't use mouths for ganges."

Mother's Bread.

To show how closely the loaf is allied to home and comfort, we will relate a story told by a lady of Asheville, N. C., soon after the civil War. She said: "We were—all that was left of us—seated around the tea-table one evening. The all was the little mother, the aged and feeble grand parents and the young, who were unable to carry a musket. The tea was warm, but had never known China; the cattle had gone far afield—to the commissary—there was no butter, and little of anything else. A carefully-wrapped package was laid on a napkin near the center of the table, and the little mother came in and, unfolding, disclosed a loaf of white bread, such as we had not seen for weary months. Hastily and nervously she divided it. The little ones clutched and ate their share quickly. We, the older ones, touched, but could not taste nor swallow. There was a lump in the throat, you know," she said, sobbing.

Why is it so many suffer from rheumatism, aches, pains, kidney diseases, liver complaints, heart affections, etc.? It is simply because they will not come and be healed. All diseases begin from a want of iron in the blood. This want of iron makes the blood thin, watery and impure. Impure blood carries weakness and distress to every part of the body. Supply this lack of iron by using Brown's Iron Bitters, and you will soon find yourself enjoying perfect freedom from aches, pains and general ill-health.

Murders in Poland For Paltry Sums.

Crime appears now to be very prevalent in Poland. A young girl 17 years old, made up her mind to go to America, and started across the frontier with two friends, peasants and neighbors, who agreed to help her get out of Russia. On the road they robbed her of all her clothes, with the assistance of some other friendly peasants took from her her little fortune of $75, which she had saved for her journey across the ocean, and hanged her in sad plight to a tree after cutting some veins in her feet in order to make death more certain. They then ran away. Luckily the rope broke the girl lived, and her peasant friends are in jail awaiting to be sentenced. Numerous murders have occurred simply for purposes of robbery, in which the most wanton cruelty has been displayed. An old man butchered in a little village proved to have but 75 cents, and the disgusted murderer left upon his victim a card on which was written:

"I regret to say that this undertaking has not realized my expectations."—New York Sun.

BOSTON COUSIN: "What a lucky girl you are, Abby, to catch the rich widower. You'll be the envy of all Wabash avenue. I heard two or three girls say to-day they'd like to be in your shoes." The Chicago young lady smiles sweetly, but when she is alone she is heard to mutter under her breath, "Two or three girls in my shoes? The hateful thing! Two or three! The idea!"

Honesty the Best Policy.

Fraudulent schemes may appear successful in the start, but it don't pay in the long run. A remedy that has no real merit, will more than eat up its profit in advertising, for people learn it is not as represented, and those who give it one trial, will never give it another, therefore its proprietors' only hope is to catch fresh "suckers" by extraordinary lying advertisements. There is, however, one remedy that speaks for itself, and its best advertisement is the use of one bottle, for a cure begins from the very first dose. It is called B. B. B., or Botanic Blood Balm, and can be obtained through any enterprising druggist. It has cured more cases of contagious blood diseases, and with a less quantity of medicine, than any other known remedy. It is not of Indian (?) origin, but the famous prescription of an old Atlanta physician. If you wish to know more about B. B. B. and to read of some remarkable cures of suffering brought on by bad blood, write to the Blood Balm Co., Atlanta, Ga., and they will send you an illustrated treatise on blood diseases, free. If you suffer, do not fail to give the remedy a trial. It is also the best strengthener of the system as Spring approaches, that can be taken.

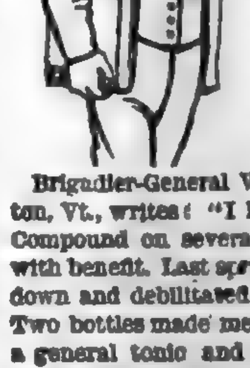
Spring
Disorders



Shattered nerves, tired brain, impure blood, debilitated system, all are the natural outcome in the Spring. A medicine must be used, and nothing equals Paine's Celery Compound. We let others praise us—you cannot help believing a disinterested party.

Brigadier-General W. L. Greenleaf, Burlington, Vt., writes: "I have used Paine's Celery Compound on several occasions, and always with benefit. Last spring, being very much run down and debilitated, I commenced taking it. Two bottles made me feel like a new man. As a general tonic and spring medicine I do not know of its equal."

"I have used two bottles of your Paine's Celery Compound, and it has given entire satisfaction as an appetizer and blood purifier."

S.S.S. FOR THE BLOOD.

Swift's Specific has cured me of a malignant breaking out on my leg, which caused intolerable pain. It was called Eczema by the doctors—four of whom treated me with no relief. I candidly confess that I owe my present good health to S. S. S., which in my estimation is invaluable as a blood remedy.

March April May

are the best months in which to purify your blood, for at no other season does the system so much need the aid of a reliable medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla as now. During the long, cold winter the blood becomes thin and impure, the body becomes weak and tired, the appetite may be lost. Hood's Sarsaparilla is peculiarly adapted to purify and enrich the blood, to create a good appetite and to overcome that tired feeling. It increases in popularity every year.

"I take Hood's Sarsaparilla every year as a spring tonic, with most satisfactory results."—C. PARMELEE, 349 Bridge Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Every spring for years I have made it a practice to take from three to five bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla, because I know it purifies the blood and thoroughly cleanses the system of all impurities. That languid feeling, sometimes called 'spring fever,' will never visit the system that has been properly cared for by this never failing remedy."—W. H. LAWRENCE, Editor Agricultural Epitomist, Indianapolis, Ind.

LONGFELLOW'S MAIDEN,

who is—

"Standing, with reluctant feet,
Where the brook and river meet,
Womanhood and childhood fleet!"

is a type of thousands of young girls who are emerging from the chrysalis stage of their existence, as they enter upon their "teens." Nervous, excitable, irritable, stirred by strange, unknowable forces within them, each a mystery unto herself, our girls need the tenderest care, the most loving, patient oversight, and the aid of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, to safely carry them through the critical period, during which, in too many lives, alas, are sown the seeds of distressing forms of diseases peculiar to the female sex. But this boon to womankind will prevent all such diseases, or cure them if they have already seized the victim. Woman owes it to herself, to her family, and to her social station, to be well and strong. Let her then not neglect the sure means of cure. "Favorite Prescription" is a legitimate medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. Sold by druggists; $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00.

REV. DR. TALMAGE.

THE BROOKLYN DIVINE'S SUNDAY SERMON.

Subject: "Dark Sayings on a Harp."

TEXT: "I will open my dark sayings on a harp."—Psalm of David, xlix., 4.

The world is full of the inexplicable, the impassable, the unfathomable, the insurmountable. We cannot go three steps in any direction without coming up against a hard wall of mystery, riddles, paradoxes, profundities, labyrinths, problems that we cannot solve, hieroglyphics that we cannot decipher, anagrams we cannot spell out, sphinxes that will not speak. For that reason David in my text proposed to take up some of these somber and dark things and try to set them to sweet music: "I will open my dark sayings on a harp."

So I look off upon society and find people in unhappy conjunction of circumstances and they do not know what it means and they have a right to ask: why is this? and why is that? and I think I will be doing a good work by trying to explain some of these strange things and make you more content with your lot, and I shall only be answering questions that have often been asked me, or that we have all asked ourselves, while I try to set these mysteries to music and open my dark sayings on a harp.

Interrogation the first: Why does God take out of this world those who are useful and whom we cannot spare and leave alive and in good health so many who are only a nuisance or a positive injury to the world? I thought I would begin with the very toughest of all the seeming inscrutables. Many of the most useful men and women die at thirty or forty years of age, while you often find useless people alive at sixty and seventy and eighty. John Careless wrote to Bradford, who was soon to be put to death, saying: "Why doth God suffer me and such other caterpillars to live that can do nothing but consume the alms of the church, and take away so many worthy workmen in the Lord's vineyard?" Similar questions are often asked. Here are two men. The one is a noble character and a Christian man; he chooses for lifetime companion one who has been tenderly reared, and she is worthy of him and he is worthy of her; as merchant, or farmer, or professional man, or mechanic, or artist, he toils to educate and rear his children; he is succeeding, but he has not yet established for his family a full competency; he seems absolutely indispensable to that household, but one day before he has paid off the mortgage on his house he is coming home through a strong northeast wind and a chill strikes through him and four days of pneumonia end his earthly career and the wife and children go into a struggle for shelter and food. His next door neighbor is a man who, though strong and well, lets his wife support him; he is round at the grocery store or some general loafing place in the evenings while his wife sews; his boys are imitating his example and lounge and swagger and swear; all the use that man is in that house is to rave because the coffee is cold when he comes to a late breakfast, or to say cutting things about his wife's looks when he furnishes nothing for her wardrobe. The best thing that could happen to that family would be that man's funeral; but he declines to die; he lives on and on and on. So we have all noticed that many of the useful are early cut off while the parasites of society have great vital tenacity.

I take up this dark saying on my harp and give three or four thrums on the string in the way of surmising and hopeful guess. Perhaps the useful man was taken out of the world, because he and his family were so constructed that they could not have endured some great prosperity that might have been just ahead and they altogether might have gone down in the vortex of worldliness which every year swallows up ten thousand households. And so he went while he was humble and consecrated, and they were by the severities of life kept close to Christ and fitted for usefulness here and high seats in heaven; and when they meet at last before the Throne, they will acknowledge that though the furnace was hot, it purified them, and prepared them for an eternal career of glory and reward for which no other kind of life could have fitted them. On the the other hand, the useless man lived on to fifty or sixty, or seventy years, because all the ease he ever can have he must have in this world, and we ought not, therefore, begrudge him his earthly longevity. In all the ages there has not a single loafer ever entered heaven. There is no place for him there to hang around. Not in the temples, for they are full of the most vigorous, alert and rapturous worship. Not on the river bank, for that is the place where the conquerors recline. Not in the gates, because there are multitudes entering, and we are told that at each of the twelve gates there is an angel, and that celestial guard would not allow the place to be blocked up with idlers. If the good and useful go early, rejoice for them that they have so soon got through with human life, which at best is a struggle. And if the useless and the bad stay, rejoice that they may be out in the world's fresh air a good many years before their final incarceration.

Interrogation the second: Why do so many good people have so much trouble; sickness, bankruptcy, persecution, the three black vultures sometimes putting their fierce beaks into one set of jangled nerves? I think now of a good friend I once had. He was a consecrated Christian man, an elder in the church and as polished a Christian gentleman as ever walked Broadway. First his general health gave out and he hobbled around on a cane, an old man at forty. After a while paralysis struck him. Having by poor health been compelled suddenly to quit business, he lost what property he had. Then his beautiful daughter died. Then a son became hopelessly demented. Another son, splendid of mind and commanding of presence, resolved that he would take care of his father's household, but under the swamp of yellow fever at [illegible], Fla., he completely expired. So you know good men and women who have had enough trouble [illegible] to [illegible] could take such a trouble and set it to music, or play it on violin or flute or dulcimer or sackbut, but I dare to open that dark saying on a gospel harp.

You wonder that very consecrated people have trouble? Did you ever know any very consecrated man or woman who had not had great trouble? Never. It was through their troubles sanctified that they were made very good. If you find anywhere in this city a man who has now and always has had perfect health, and never lost a child, and has always been popular, and never had business struggle or misfortune, who is distinguished for goodness, pull your wire for a telegraph messenger boy and send me word and I will drop everything and go right away to look at him. There never has been a man like that, and never will be. Who are those arrogant, self-conceited creatures who move about without sympathy for others and who think more of a St. Bernard dog, or an Alderney cow, or a Southdown sheep, or a Berkshire pig than of a man? They never had any trouble, or the trouble was never sanctified. Who are those men who listen with moist eye as you tell them of suffering and who have a pathos in their voice and a kindness in their manner and an excuse or an alleviation for those gone astray? They are the men who have graduated at the Royal Academy of Trouble and they have the diploma written in wrinkles on their own countenances. My! my! What heartaches they had! What tears they have wept! What injustice they have suffered. The mightiest influence for purification and salvation is trouble. No diamond fit for a crown until it is cut. No wheat fit for bread till it is ground. There are only three things that can break off a chain—a hammer, a file or a fire: and trouble is all three of them. The greatest writers, orators and reformers get much of their force from trouble. What gave to Washington Irving that exquisite tenderness and pathos which will make his books favorites while the English language continues to be written and spoken? An early heartbreak that he never once mentioned; and when, thirty years after the death of Matilda Hoffman, who was to have been his bride, her father picked up a piece of embroidery and said: "That is a piece of poor Matilda's workmanship," Washington Irving sank from hilarity into silence and walked away. Out of that lifetime grief the great author dipped his pen's mightiest re-enforcement. "Calvin's Institutes of Religion," than which a more wonderful book was never written by human hand, was begun by the author at twenty-five years of age, because of the persecution by Francis, King of France. Faraday toiled for all time on a salary of 80 pounds a year and candles. As every brick of the wall of Babylon was stamped with the letter N, standing for Nebuchadnezzar, so every part of the temple of Christian achievement is stamped with the letter T, standing for trouble.

When in olden time a man was to be honored with knighthood, he was struck with the flat of the sword. But those who have come to the honor of knighthood in the kingdom of God were first struck not with the flat of the sword but with the keen edge of the cimeter. To build his magnificence of character, Paul could not have spared one lash, one prison, one stoning, one anathema, one poisonous viper from the hand, one shipwreck. What is true of individuals is true of nations. The horrors of the American revolution gave this country this side of the Mississippi River to independence, and the conflict between England and France gave the most of this country west of the Mississippi to the United States. France owned it, but Napoleon, fearing that England would take it, practically made a present to the United States—for he received only $15,000,000—of Louisiana, Missouri, Arkansas, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Minnesota, Colorado, Dakota, Montana, Wyoming and the Indian Territory. Out of the fire of the American revolution came this country east of the Mississippi, out of the European war came that west of the Mississippi River. The British Empire rose to its present overtowering grandeur through gunpowder plot, and Guy Fawkes's conspiracy, and Northampton insurrection, and Walter Raliegh's beheading, and Bacon's bribery, and Cromwell's dissolution of parliament, and the battles of Edge Hill, and Grantham, and Newberry, and Marston Moor, and Naseby, and Dunbar, and Sedgemoor, and execution of Charles the First, and London plague, and London fire, and London insurrection, and Ryehouse plot, and the vicissitudes of centuries. So the earth itself, before it could become appropriate and beautiful residence for the human family had, according to geology, to be washed by universal deluge, and scorched and made incandescent by universal fires, and pounded by sledge-hammer of icebergs, and wrenched by earthquakes that split continents, and shaken by volcanoes that tossed mountains, and passed through the catastrophes of thousands of years before Paradise became possible and the groves could shake out their green banners and the first garden pour its carnage of color between the Gihon and the Hiddekel. Trouble a good thing for the rocks, a good thing for nations, as well as a good thing for individuals. So when you push against me with a sharp interrogation point, Why do the good suffer? I open the dark saying on a harp and, though I can neither play an organ, or cornet, or hautboy, or bugle, or clarionet, I have taken some lessons on the gospel harp, and if you would like to hear me I will play you these: "All things work together for good to those who love God." Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless afterward it yieldeth all possible fruits of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby." "Weeping may endure for a night but joy cometh in the morning." What a sweet thing is a harp, and I wonder not that in Wales, the country of my ancestors, the harp has become the national instrument, and that they have festivals where great prizes are offered in the competition between harp and harp; or that weird Sebastian Erard was most of his time bent over this chorded and vibrating triangle, and was not satisfied until he had given it a compass of six octaves from E to E with all the semi-tones, or that when King Saul was demented the son of Jesse came before him and putting his fingers among the charmed strings of the harp played the devil out of the crazed monarch, or that in heaven there shall be harpers harping with their harps. So you will not blame me for [illegible] this dark saying on the gospel harp.

Your harps, ye trembling saints,
Down from the willows take:
Loud to the praise of love divine
Bid every string awake!

Interrogation third: Why did a good God let sin and trouble come into the world when He might have kept them out? My reply is, He had a good reason. He had reasons that He has never given us. He had reasons which He could no more make us understand in our finite state than the father starting out on some great and elaborate enterprise could make the two-year-old child in its armed chair comprehend it. One was to demonstrate what grandeur of character may be achieved on earth by conquering evil. Had there been no evil to conquer and no trouble to console, then this universe would never have known an Abraham or a Moses or a Joshua or an Ezekiel or a Paul or a Christ or a Washington or a John Milton or a John Howard, and a million victories which have been gained by the consecrated spirits of all ages would never have been gained. Had there been no battle there would have been no victory. Nine-tenths of the anthems of heaven would never have been sung. Heaven could never have been a thousandth part of the heaven that it is. I will not say that I am glad that sin and sorrow did enter, but I do say that I am glad that after God has given all His reasons to an assembled universe He will be more honored than if sin and sorrow had never entered, and that the unfallen celestials will be outdone and will put down their trumpets to listen and it will be in heaven when those who have conquered sin and sorrow shall enter, as it would be in a small singing school on earth if Thalberg and Gottschalk and Wagner and Beethoven and Rheinberger and Schumann should all at once enter. The immortals that have been chanting ten thousand years before the throne will say, as they close their librettos: "Oh, if we could only sing like that!" But God will say to those who have never fallen and consequently have not been redeemed: "You must be silent now; you have not the qualification for this anthem," so they sit with closed lips and folded hands, and sinners saved by grace take up the harmony, for the Bible says "no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand which were redeemed from the earth."

A great prima donna, who can now do anything with her voice, told me that when she first started in music her teacher in Berlin told her she could be a good singer, but a certain note she could never reach. "And then," she said, "I went to work and studied and practiced for years until I did reach it." But the song of the sinner redeemed, the Bible says, the exalted harmonists who have never sinned could not reach and never will reach. Would you like to hear me in a very poor way play a snatch of that tune? I can give you only one bar of the music on this gospel harp: "Unto Him that hath loved us and washed us from our sins in His own blood and hath made us kings and priests unto God and the Lamb, to Him be glory and dominion forever and ever, Amen." But before leaving this interrogatory, Why God let sin come into the world? let me say that great battles seem to be nothing but suffering and outrage at the time of their occurrence, yet after they have been a long while past we can see that it was better for them to have been fought, namely, Salamis, Inkerman, Toulouse, Arbella, Agincourt, Trafalgar, Blenheim, Lexington, Sedan. So now that the great battles against sin and suffering are going on we can see mostly that which is deplorable. But twenty thousand years from now, standing in glory, we shall appreciate that heaven is better off than if the battle of this world's sin and suffering had never been projected.

But now I come nearer home and put a dark saying on the gospel harp, a style of question that is asked a million times a year. Interrogation the fourth: Why do I have it so hard while others have it so easy? or, why do I have so much difficulty in getting a livelihood while others go around with a full portemonnaie? or, why must I wear these plain clothes while others have to push hard to get their wardrobes closed, so crowded are they with brilliant attire? or, why should I have to work so hard while others have three hundred and sixty-five holidays every year? They are all practically one question. I answer them by saying, it is because the Lord has His favorites and He puts extra discipline upon you, and extra trial, because he has for you extra glory, extra enthronement and extra felicities. That is no guess of mine, but a divine say-so: "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth." "Well," says some one, "I would rather have a little less in heaven and a little more here. Discount my heavenly robe ten per cent., and let me now put it on, a fur lined overcoat; put me in a less gorgeous room of the house of many mansions and let me have a house here in a better neighborhood." No, no; God is not going to rob heaven, which is going to be your residence for nine hundred quadrillion of years, to fix up your earthly abode, which you will occupy at most for less than a century, and where you may perhaps stay only ten years longer, or only one year, or perhaps a month more. Now you had better cheerfully let God have His way, for, you see, He has been taken care of folks for near seven thousand years, and knows how to do it, and can see what is best for you better than you can yourself. Don't think you are too insignificant to be divinely cared for. It was said that Diana, the goddess, could not be present to keep her temple at Ephesus from burning because she was attending upon the birth of him who was to be Alexander the Great. But I tell you that your God and my God is so great in small things as well as large things that He could attend the cradle of a babe and at the same time the burning of a world.

And God will make it all right with you, and there is one song that you will sing every hour your first ten years in heaven, and the refrain of that song will be: "I am so glad God did not let me have it my own way." Your case will be all fixed up in heaven and there will be such a reversal of conditions that we can hardly [illegible] each other for some time. Some of us who have lived in first rate houses here and [illegible] neighborhoods will be found, because of [illegible] inhabitants of earthly [illegible] on one of the back streets of the [illegible] city, and clear down at the end of a [illegible] [illegible] house fronting the Royal plaza, right by the imperial fountain, or on the heights overlooking the River of Life, the chariots of salvation halting at your door while those visit you who are more than conquerors, and those who are Kings and Queens unto God forever. You, my brother, and you, my sister, who have it so hard here will have it so fine and grand there that you will hardly know yourself and will feel disposed to dispute your own identity, and the first time I see you there I will cry out: "Didn't I tell you so when you sat down there in the Brooklyn Tabernacle and looked incredulous because you thought it too good to be true?" And you will answer: "You were right, the half was not told me!" So this morning I open your dark saying of despondency and complaint on my gospel harp and give you just one bar of music, for I do not pretend to be much of a player. "The Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall lead them to living fountains of water and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." But I must confess I am a little perplexed how some of you good Christians are going to get through the gate, because there will be so many there to greet you and they will all want to shake hands at once and will all want the first kiss. They will have heard that you are coming, and they will all press around to welcome you and will want you to say whether you know them after being so long parted.

Amid the tussle and romp of reunion I tell you whose hand of welcome you had better first clasp and whose cheek is entitled to the first kiss. It is the hand and the cheek of Him without whom you would never have got there at all, the Lord Jesus, the darling of the skies, as He cries out: "I have loved thee with an everlasting love and the fires could not burn it and the floods could not drown it." Then you, my dear people, having no more use for my poor harp on which I used to open your dark sayings and whose chords sometimes snapped, despoiling the symphony, you will take down your own harps from the willows that grow by the eternal water courses and play together those celestial airs, some of the names of which are entitled: "The King in His Beauty," "The Land That Was Far Off," "Jerusalem, the Golden," "Home Again," "The Grand March of God," "The Life Everlasting." And as the last dark curtain of mystery is forever lifted it will be as though all the oratorios that were ever heard had been rolled into one and "Israel in Egypt" and "Jephtha's Daughter" and Beethoven's "Overture in C" and Ritter's first sonata in D minor and the "Creation" and the "Messiah" had been blown from the lips of one trumpet or been invoked by the sweep of one bow or had been dropped from the vibrating chords of one harp.

But here I must slow up lest in trying to solve mysteries I add to the mystery that we have already wondered at; namely: Why preachers should keep on after all the hearers are tired? So I gather up into one great armful all the whys, and hows, and wherefores of your life and mine, which we have not had time or the ability to answer, and write on them the words "adjourned to eternity." I rejoice that we do not understand all things now, for if we did, what would we learn in heaven? If we knew it all down here in the freshman and sophomore class, what would be the use of our going up to stand amid the juniors and the seniors? If we could put down one leg of the compass and with the other sweep a circle clear around all the inscrutables, if we could lift our little steelyards and weigh the throne of the Omnipotent, if we could with our seven day clock measure eternity, what would be left for heavenly revelation? So I move that we cheerfully adjourn what is now beyond our comprehension, and as according to Rollin, the historian, Alexander the Great, having obtained the gold casket in which Darius had kept his rare perfume, used that aromatic casket thereafter to keep his favorite copy of Homer in, and called the book, therefore, the "edition of the casket," and at night he put the casket and his sword under his pillow, so I put this day into the perfumed casket of your richest affections and hopes this promise, worth more than anything Homer ever wrote or sword ever conquered: "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter," and that I call the "edition celestial."

General Harrison's Capture.

Ex-Congressman H. G. Burleigh, of Whitehall, tells a very good story of Harrison. Several years ago a dinner party was given at Washington, at which Senators Harrison, Palmer of Michigan, Warner Miller, Congressman Burleigh and several other public men were present, nearly all of whom were accompanied by their wives. Mr. Churchill, of Gloversville, and his daughter—a young woman of engaging manners, mental brightness and rare personal beauty—were also among the guests. It so happened that Miss Churchill was the only unmarried person present, and toward the close of the repast she became the subject of animated conversation, each statesman humorously claiming her as his own, while she deftly declined to manifest any choice. General Harrison expressed a determination to have a hand in the matter, and said he felt sure of his precedence in Miss Churchill's affections. In the center of the table there was a very rich, large, and elaborate fruit cake, quartered, and in each quarter a peacock feather was inserted. Suddenly General Harrison jumped up, pulled the feathers from the cake, ran around the table to Miss Churchill's seat, and, sticking the feathers in her hair, threw his arms around her, and cried out, "I've got the girl any way; she's mine." There was an outburst of laughter, and the whole company good-humoredly acknowledged that the General had fairly won the prize.—Troy (N. Y.) Press.

SAMOAN SOLDIERS.

HOW THE WARRIORS OF SAMOA FIGHT THEIR FOES.

They Kill All Their Prisoners—Bushwacking Preferred to Open Warfare—A Catamaran Man-of-War.

MOSTLY all recent visitors to the Samoan group of islands agree in giving the inhabitants the character of a friendly and peaceful rather than a warlike people. But the earlier visitors were not so favorably impressed. M. de Bougainville, who discovered the islands in 1768, was not impressed with their politeness or with their honesty, while De la Perouse, the French Admiral, who called there in 1787, during his voyage around the world, did not hesitate to denounce them as a set of barbarous assassins.

During the past forty years the influence of the missionaries has resulted in the re-establishment of peace and the resumption of peaceful pursuits by the people until the present war, which was fomented by foreigners.

Like many other good-natured, peaceful people, the Samoans are, when aroused, cruel and bloodthirsty in the extreme. Prisoners are never taken. All who fall into the hands of the enemy, both old and young, are brutally murdered, not even the women or children being spared.

When in their "olos," which are immense fortresses on high rocks, the fugitives are comparatively safe, for the positions are chosen in the most inaccessible places that can be found, and where—the only approach being over a narrow mountain path and by single file—a small party can keep a large army at bay.

The arms of the warriors in former years were bows and arrows, clubs and spears made of iron-wood. Some of the bows were immensely long and strong. Specimens of their arms have been brought to this country, including bows fully twenty feet in length. Some of their clubs were fitted with shark's teeth and their spears were pointed with the sting of the ray-fish. A wound inflicted with this weapon generally proved mortal, especially when the sting, as was generally the case, broke off in the flesh.

The warriors, when in fighting costume, wore a beautiful suit of red or black paint and scarcely anything else. They would, however, make a most elaborate toilet as far as their hair was concerned, by getting it up in various grotesque fashions, the favorite being to comb it out so that it would stand straight on end, giving them a most diabolical and ferocious appearance. Often they would wear large bunches of false hair, which caused their own to appear to stand higher and also made them look bigger.

SAMOAN SOLDIERS WITH WEAPONS.

The education of a soldier consisted in teaching him to ward off a blow and to get in with a counter at the same time. He who was the most skilful in this sort of a fencing match was considered the best warrior.

It was seldom that they engaged in pitched battles in the open field. They preferred bushwacking and strategy. All enemies whom they encountered they at once proceeded to kill whether taken with arms in their hands or engaged in the peaceful cultivation of their patches.

During their wars they were not in the habit of posting sentinels at night or, in fact, at any other time. They seemed to trust to luck or in their prayers to the god of war. As both sides were equally reckless in this matter little harm was occasioned by the omission, though several times the powerful invading armies have been defeated by surprises.

Now that many, and, in fact, most of the warriors, are armed with rifles of various patterns, they have pretty generally laid aside their clubs, their spears and their bows and arrows, and thus, while more effective, are much less picturesque soldiers. They still wear their war paint and [illegible] [illegible] der, cannot be called a uniform with which we are accustomed to associate the idea of a soldier.

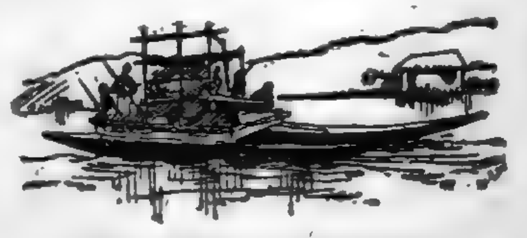
They still adhere to their old methods of bushwhacking and it was in that way that they succeeded in inflicting such fearful punishment upon the German invaders in the recent encounters and suffered so little themselves. The Samoans crept upon their enemy through the bush and the Germans found themselves surrounded by a numerous but invisible enemy, which fired upon them from the brush or from behind cocoanut trees, while there was no guide for their return fire except the puffs of smoke they could see on every side. Thus it was that they were driven off with heavy loss by an enemy they could feel, but could not see.

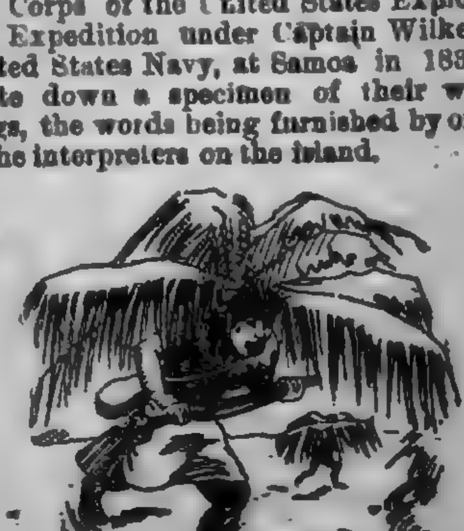


THE SAMOAN MAN-OF-WAR.

Though part of this fight was at night, the result would unquestionably have been the same had it been during the daytime, for the same tactics are adopted. With a perfect knowledge of the forest and consummate skill in woodcraft, they have every advantage over the invaders of their country and homes. When crawling cautiously upon his foe, the Samoan warrior is accustomed to so arrange leaves and small bushes around his head as to conceal his person. He may, in fact, be said to carry a shelter with him, instead of being dependent upon such as he finds set around him by nature.

Not alone upon the land does the Samoan fight. For war purposes two large canoes are lashed together like a catamaran, and over the platform between them is erected a hut which shelters the chief officers from the sun. Some of these war-canoes will hold a hundred or more men and carry quite a respectable howitzer to add to their efficiency. A mast is stepped in the centre of the platform and is held in place by stays fore and aft and from either side in the same fashion as a Yorkboat on the Canadian lakes. The Samoans are not good sailors as a rule, but trust rather to their gods than to their own skill when caught out in a gale. Their war-canoes are more used for transports than for fighting purposes, and a naval engagement would not be their strong point.

When upon warlike excursions the Samoan warriors lift up their voices and brace their courage with songs. Their music may be inspiriting to them, but to the European ear it is most too monotonous to be enjoyable. Mr. Joseph Drayton, who was attached to the Scientific Corps of the United States Exploring Expedition under Captain Wilkes, United States Navy, at Samoa in 1839, wrote down a specimen of their war songs, the words being furnished by one of the interpreters on the island.



THE BUSH METHOD OF WARFARE.

The song concerns a Samoan King who has attacked and conquered an enemy on another island, and on the way home the victorious warriors sing to his praise, or rather as a jubilee. Translated it is:

Keep her away, and mind the helm.

And then, arriving home, the people sing:

We are glad you have come to your island of plenty;
We have waited a long time for our chief and canoes.

It is known that at the time the Samoan group became known to the outside world the inhabitants were not addicted to cannibalism, and by many it is doubted that it ever existed there.

A much pleasanter topic than that of cannibalism is a novel method of fishing among the reefs, practiced by the people of Samoa. A line, sometimes nearly half a mile long, is hung with the split leaves of the cocoanut trees, making a sort of net or fringe. It takes about two days to construct this marine fence, and then it is taken out into the water in three parts and afterward joined so as to make one long one. With this a large area of water is inclosed and all hands in the village go in [illegible] the fringe around and [illegible] stronger by the [illegible] fenced. [illegible] [illegible]ng and splashing around, sometimes jumping clear over the heads of the men in their efforts to escape. Others are caught in hand-nets and a good haul will sometimes yield two or three canoes full.

A New Manure.

M. Dussau, an eminent French chemist, in an article in the Journal d'Agriculture Pratique, draws attention to a new manure, fluoride of calcium. He states that he has used it with great advantage for several years. For his last crop of wheat he used the fluoride at the rate of 264 pounds per acre, and obtained thirty-three bushels per acre, or double the yield of his district under favorable conditions. The best way to use the substance, he says, is in conjunction with superphosphate of lime, but it is important that the latter should be sown separately and first, especially in soils which are very slightly calcareous. It is possible, he explains, that if the two manures are used together the free acids of the superphosphate would set at liberty hydrofluoric acid, which has an injurious and possibly poisonous affect upon germination. At present fluoride of calcium is sold at a comparatively high price, M. Dussau adds, as it is used only to a small extent in manufactories, but if an extensive demand for it should arise he expects that it will be produced as cheaply as the natural phosphates. More than a year ago M. R-boulet remarked upon the good results of using a phosphate poor in phosphoric acid, but rich in flour, and M. Dussau's experiments confirm that announcement.

Luck of the Rabbit's Foot.

Capt. F. W. Dawson, editor of Charleston News and Courier, was murdered by a physician of that city Tuesday. Great excitement prevailed in Charleston over the murder.

President Harrison says in regard to filling appointments: "We must go slow for Cleveland has set a high standard in his higher appointments and we cannot afford to fall below it."

The esteemed Choctaw Herald preaches sound doctrine on the immigration subject. It says: "We want immigrants but want them to bring with them money enough to pay their way and a few dollars to help defray their other necessary expenses."

He who would go heavenward, or go Christward, cannot go with the crowd; for the crowd is not going in that direction. And this is one of the sorest trials of Christian life. It separates the Christian disciple from many a companionship which would other wise be delightful to him.

The Australian system of holding elections and voting has spread from Australia and is now in use in England, Whales, Belgium, Italy and Canada. In this country it has been adopted by Massachusetts, Wisconsin and the municipality of Louisville. It was passed by New York legislature last year but Governor Hill vetoed the bill. The subject is now before the legislature of perhaps twenty states and territories. In recent years Norway, Austria, France, Hungary and Greece have decreed a secret ballot, though not exactly the Australian system.

Mr. R. H. Clark, of Montgomery, killed a negro recently in that city. The killing was brought about by somewhat unusual circumstances. The negro carried an insulting message to a lady at a house where Mr. Clark boarded. Mr. Clark heard of it, hunted up the negro and endeavored to make him disclose the name of the sender of the message. This he refused to do, and he then assaulted Mr. Clark, who is a very small man. Mr. C. fired upon his assailant with the result stated. He deserves a gold medal for killing the scoundrel. The message sender was no doubt a myth.

If a man fills his place in this world, other people will know it, whether he knows it or not. If he does not fill his place, other people will know it, whether he realizes it or not. The first thing he has to attend to is to fill his place as well as he can. The last thing that he ought to trouble himself about, is other people's estimate of his success in his endeavors. A man can never win a good name by worrying over his supposed lack of deserved reputation. He can never lose reputation by failing to give it his personal attention while doing that which he is set to do.

Something of the New Cabinet.

President Harrison's cabinet is made up as follows:

Secretary of State—James G. Blaine, of Maine.

Secretary of the Treasury—William Windom, of Minnesota.

Secretary of War—Redfield Proctor, of Vermont.

Secretary of the Navy—Benjamin F. Tracey, of New York.

Secretary of the Interior—John W. Noble, of Missouri.

Postmaster General—John Wanamaker, of Pennsylvania.

Secretary of Agriculture—Jeremiah Rusk, of Wisconsin.

Blaine is the son of poor parents, one of a large family, reared on a small farm in Allegheny county, Pennsylvania. Windom began his life's labors on a tailor's bench, and worked at his trade to get money to defray the expenses of his education while at school in the law. Tracy began with nothing but his hands, courage, honesty and brains, as capital. Proctor, Noble, Wannamaker and Miller began life poor and without influential friends to push them. Rusk was a farmer's boy, who toiled early and late to assist in the support of a large family of brothers and sisters. He had no education beyond that furnished by the common country schools of his youth, far inferior to the same schools of to-day. None of the cabinet was born with a golden spoon in his mouth; each and all are self-made rising from the ranks of the common people. Even the President began his career the son of a poor and rather improvident farmer; his first house-keeping was in a rented cottage of five rooms. His predecessor started at the very foot of the ladder, and his early manhood's efforts were burdened by the support wholly or in great part, of younger brothers and sisters. Endicott was the only member of the late cabinet born to wealth and social prominence. What great nation of the past or present can be pointed to that will furnish such a spectacle?

OVER THE COUNTY.

Neighborhood News Gathered by Our Correspondents.

Stanton Notes.

Dr. Little who has been very ill is now we are glad to repeat convalescent.

Miss Mattie Harwood, of Uniontown, has just returned home after a weeks visit to her cousin Miss Mamie Harwood.

Mr. J. A. Stephens is building a fine residence in Stanton. Our town is gradually growing.

Mr. H. C. Lea, of Dallas, is here on a visit to his little daughter Mattie who is attending the Stanton Institute.

A bevy of handsome young men and pretty young ladies are now rehearsing some plays in your correspondent's parlor. You see we are soon to have some amusement to chase the dull hours away.

The Methodists of this community will soon commence building an attractive little church here. They started one year ago with a membership of 7 and now have 27 active members.

One of the old pupils of the Stanton Institute, Dr. Willie McGee, has just returned from the Moble Medical College where we learn he took a good stand. We always feel proud of our pupils when they do well.

Jemison Locals.

Our marriage epidemic still continues.

Mr. John Cameron and Miss Lillie Gibbons were married at the residence of the bride's father on Wednesday evening last by the Rev. A. E. Burns.

Mr. W. C. Mooney and Miss Sallie Patton were married at the M. E. church, Jemison, Ala., on Sunday evening by Rev. D. L. Lindsey.

We extend congratulations and wish for both couples many long years of sunshine and happiness.

We beg to inform your Stanton correspondent that the music class at the Jemison High School has resumed operations. The class was suspended in order to give our music teacher an opportunity to get married.

The young gentlemen of Prof. Ruffin's school have organized a debating society to be known as "Jemison High School Literati club."

Our genial young friend, Mr. Hanks of Clanton, paid us a flying visit this week, we supposed to see his sweetheart.

Oakmulgee.

Rice Culture—Bad Roads.

Ed. View:—I am just home from a visit to your town and the rice mill two and a half miles east. How did I get there? By unloading entirely twice and partially twice. Once near home in the Oakmulgee Swamp, and again in Mulberry neighborhood at the Curry bridge. A day or two of good work would make either place passable, while as they are they are only about as passable as Napoleon's engineer found the Alps. My load consisted of thirty-two bushels of rough rice and my brother also hauled about forty bushels making in all about seventy bushels. I must say that I am delighted with Mr. Pritchett's rice mill. It is an enterprise in the right direction.

The rice crop is the best crop to be grown in this part of the country. Rice is one of the best diets, and in the rough state is just splendid for all kinds of stock. And if you grow more than you need your merchant or neighbor will buy it. I have hauled several loads of clean rice through the county for sale, and always made good wages selling it. By planting it our farmers can help an infant industry in the Clanton rice mill.

I will speak of one other crop which is well adapted to the soil of Chilton county. It is ribbon cane. I made 405 gallons of syrup from 1½ acres last year, and I forgot to plant any cotton. I propose to do the same this year, and feed my family on rice and molasses and home raised hogs.

W. A. Fountain.

Maplesville Dots.

Preparation for another crop goes bravely on for another year.

Mr. Fletcher McCary has been on a visit to our town.

Mr L. H. Dubose was home on the 10th.

An old citizen, H. Bearden, has skipped to parts unknown rather than make his appearance at court leaving his bondsmen in a fix.

Mr. Crampton does not go to Selma as formerly.

Cases Disposed Of.

The following criminal cases were disposed of at the Spring term of the circuit court just adjourned.

C. H. Smith. Violating revenue law. Nol pros.

Rudolph Ehrman. Assault and battery. Jury rendered a verdict of guilty and assessed a fine of one dollar. Defendant consented that the fine be raised to $50, and confessed judgment for fine and costs.

Jesse Benson. Abusive language. Nol pros.

Berty Gullahern. Murder. Nol pros. as to murder, and on motion of solicitor prosecuted for manslaughter. Defendant objected to nol pros., and moved to be discharged. Motion overruled. Trial on charge of manslaughter resulted in verdict of not guilty.

Mat Thornton. Assault to murder. Guilty of assault and battery, and fined one dollar and costs.

J. S. Pearson, colored. Grand larceny. Plead guilty and sentenced to hard labor for the county for two years and an additional term not to exceed fifteen months to pay costs.

George Golson, colored. Abusive language. Fined fifty dollars and costs. In lieu of fine sentenced to twenty days hard labor for county and an additional term not to exceed eight months to pay costs.

Wiley Edwards, colored. Burglary. Sentenced to one year's hard labor for county, and an additional term not to exceed fifteen months to pay costs.

Charles Wickwire. Burglary. Five years in penitentiary.

Jeff Cook, colored. Carrying concealed weapon. Sentenced to 20 days hard labor for county and an additional term not to exceed eight months to pay costs. Same party convicted on a charge of burglary and sentenced to ten years in penitentiary, which last sentence will not be entered upon until sentence in first case has been served out.

Robert N. Kidd. Burglary. One year in the penitentiary.

James Armstrong. Public drunkenness. Fined $25 and costs.

George Marcus. Selling liquor to minor. Fined $50 and costs.

The Probate office contest case is not to be decided we understand until after final arguments are heard before the next term of court

Cannonading For Rain.

[Kansas City Star.]

A rather peculiar petition was presented to the Kansas House by Mr. Sherman of Rooks county. It was from 132 citizens of the county. They want the legislature to make an appropriation for the purpose of experimenting in the matter of securing artificial rainfall by means of cannonading. The petition was as follows: "We your petitioners, many of us veterans of the late war knowing from experience that heavy rainfalls followed each battle or heavy cannonading and believing that this fact indicates that man may produce rainfall by artificial perturbation of the atmosphere when otherwise it would not be experienced, and believing it would be wise for the state of Kansas to make a reasonable experiment in the matter of attempting to produce artificial rainfall would most respectfully ask you to make an appropriation out of the treasury for the purpose of such experiments either by cannonading or otherwise as may be deemed best."

The Great Newspaper of the South.

The Age-Herald, in addition to covering the field most thoroughly with their bright and newsy daily, is getting out the Great Weekly of the South. It is a mammoth 12-page paper at only $1 a year, with a ticket for every subscriber to the largest gift distribution of over $8,000 in valuable and useful articles ever offered by a newspaper. It is a paper for the farm and fireside. Its Agricultural Department is full of practical information for the farmer, while its Household Department renders it a treasure to every housewife in the land. A special feature is also made of a department for Our Little Folks.

We will furnish the Weekly Age-Herald and our paper one year for $2 and give each subscriber a ticket to the gift distribution.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

The "devil" has been sorter puny for a few days.

The bustle as an article of wear has the bulge on nature.

Dr. Burkhead will preach to-morrow afternoon and at night.

Col. W. S. Thorington, of Montgomery, was in town last week.

Miss Nona Torington has returned to Montgomery for a time.

Call at J. H. Aldridge's and see his Novelty brands of dress goods.

Solicitor Ben Fitzpatrick did some good work in court last week.

Insure against accident. Weekly indemnity of $25 in the event of disabling injury from accident.

W. H. LAWRENCE,
Fire and Accident Ins. Agent, Clanton.

The criminal docket was cleared in two days. The criminal docket has always been light since the general sale of intoxicants was prohibited.

The cases of all the prisoners in the county jail were disposed of last week, and resulted in sending all them to the mines.

An item which we overlooked last week was the organization of the Presbyterian Church by Rev. Thos. Ward White, of Troy, Ala. The church hopes to have a house of worship in the early future. Let the good work go on.

A case of public drunkenness under the law making public drunkenness a misdemeanor came before the circuit court last week and resulted in a fine of twenty-five dollars and costs for the guilty party. This is a good law to enforce and its enforcement will increase the fine and forfeiture fund.

Spring Goods.

New dress goods now on sale at low prices for cash. Shoes for spring trade now in. Groceries all the year, the present is no exception. Everything guaranteed as represented. Fair dealing and fair prices is my plan for holding trade, and my sales will prove that the people are treated well. Give me a call.

Respectfully
W. L. BARNEY.

Mr. Phil. Givhan has returned to Birmingham.

Mrs. E. C. Lawrence is visiting friends and relatives in Montgomery.

Capt. M. DeJarnette is in Clanton spending some time with his family.

Mr. Smith, the Episcopal rector, preached an interesting sermon at the courthouse on last Sunday.

Mrs. C. G. Reading, of Montgomery, is visiting her niece, Mrs. W. H. Lawrence.

Mr. F. L. Ashley and family will shortly remove to Avondale, where Mr. Ashley will engage in the business of managing a box factory.

Mr. J. M. Scott, Jr., of Elmore, a brother of Prof. A. J. Scott, is in our midst as a pupil of the law under W. A. Collier, Esq.

Deputy Sheriff Prater, of Bullock county, was in Clanton last week and carried back to Bullock the darkey who was captured here charged with hog-stealing.

Mr. W. D. Lanier, one of the cleverest of the many drummers visiting our town tells us that he is a "pa," and is interested in raising a fine boy just now.

Mrs. Ira Campbell, of Jemison, desires to adopt an orphan boy from six to ten years of age. Any such unfortunate little fellow will be in good luck in falling under her christian care.

Now is the time to subscribe for the Montgomery Advertiser, and get the laws that were passed at the recent session of the legislature. The VIEW and the Advertiser one year for $2.

Tax Collector A. W. Rucker, of Elmore county, was in Clanton on business this week. Mr. Rucker was born in a house situated on the site of the Duke residence in Clanton when this "neck o' the woods" was known as Goose Pond precinct, Autauga county.

The Only Perfect Remedy

For habitual constipation, dyspepsia, and kindred ills is the famous California liquid fruit remedy Syrup of Figs. It strengthens as well as cleanses the system, it is easily taken, and perfectly harmless. For sale in 50 cents and $1 bottles. jul 19

Married,

In the Methodist Church at Jemison, Sunday evening, March 10th, by Rev. D. L. Lindsey, Mr. Claud Mooney to Miss Sallie Patton. It has been our good fortune to be personally acquainted with the bride and groom for several years. To know Miss Sallie implies to love her for a sweet disposition combined with a beautiful face and form with christian graces to give the finishing polish. Mr. Mooney is fortunate in winning such a bride; and he richly deserves his good fortune. He is possessed of true manhood and integrity of character. Who can wonder that the intertwining of love has united those hearts. May Providence deal gently with them as they pass on and on, ever prosperous and happy, till they reach a final home in heaven.

A MOTHER.

The Advertiser was shown on yesterday a beautiful gold badge the work of Mr. C. L. Ruth of this city, executed on the order of the Commercial Fire Insurance Company, for presentation to Miss Daisie Golson, recently of Prattville, but now living at Bessemer.

The incident calling for this presentation was the heroic efforts of this young lady displayed in extinguishing a fire in the roof of the family residence near Prattville on the 6th of Febuary last, and thus saving the valuable property from destruction. Knowledge of the occurence coming to the Commercial Fire Insurance Company prompted them to make this graceful recognition of the heroic act of the charming recipient.—Advertiser.

I have purchased the drug business of W. H. Phillips in Clanton, and will continue the business at the same stand.

I shall also keep a stock of extra quality family groceries. I shall handle none but the very best articles, and my customers can rely upon getting pure, fresh goods.

Answer this Question.

Why do so many people we see around us seem to prefer to suffer and be made miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of Appetite, Coming up of the Food, Yellow Skin, when for 75 cents, we will sell them Shiloh's System Vitalizer, guaranteed to cure them. Sold by A. E. Bivings, Clanton.

A Wonderful Remedy.

Drs. Starkey & Palen's Compound Oxygen Treatment is pronounced by all who have tried it to be one of the most wonderful and harmless of remedies. The writer having used it for dyspepsia and general debility, also in cases of severe cold, can recommend it as worthy of a trial by any one so troubled, as great relief was experienced from its use. The traveling representative of Drs. Starkey & Palen is Rev. A. W. Moore, a Methodist minister of South Carolina, who is himself a living representative of the virtues of Compound Oxygen Treatment. He was snatched from a consumptive's untimely grave by its use. In an interview with him in Clanton this week we were shown recommendations and endorsements of him from such men as Dr. McCoy, of the Alabama Christian Advocate, Dr. H. D. Moore, of the First M. Church, Montgomery, and many other prominent and influential citizens of this and adjoining States. He is a pleasant and agreeable gentleman and is disposed to do much good for suffering humanity in his present work.

Those desiring the treatment can address Drs. Starkey & Palen 1529 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

The Newspaper Man.

It is a curious fact that newspaper men rarely become insane. They do not have the time to spare. The man who is called upon day by day to write a chicken dispute with one hand and an obituary with the other, has no time to be insane. He therefore simply weakens—after the paper has gone to press. And this but for a few moments, for some man, equipped like an arsenal is liable to come in and ask: "Who writ that piece about——?" and the newspaper man must be prepared to cordially welcome him. The writings of some editors may "seem to be born of insanity," but he, the editor knows to the contrary, and continues on in his work of doing good to those who revile him, and sending his paper to those who curse him.

HELP IN TIME OF NEED.

When a man is drowning he will grasp at straws, but straws will not save him. Extend to him a life-boat and his rescue is certain.

Mr. James A. Greer, of Athens, Ga., (endorsed by the editor of the Athens Banner-Watchman) makes the following statement:

"I am first cousin of the late Ex-Governor Alexander H. Stephens, and have been postal clerk on different railroads since 1866. For ten years I have CANCER been a sufferer from a cancer on my face, which grew worse until the discharge of matter became profuse and very offensive. I became thoroughly disgusted with blood purifiers and pronounced them humbugs, as I had tried many without relief.

Finally I was induced to use Botanic Blood Balm, (B. B. B.) The offensive discharge decreased at once and the hardness disappeared. It became less and less in size until nothing remains except a scar. I gained flesh and strength, and all who have seen me bear testimony. I cannot say too much in its praise."

A. H. Morris, Pine Bluff, Ark., writes:

"Hot Springs failed entirely to cure me of several terrible, indolent running ulcers on my legs, with which I have been troubled for many years. Several doctors also attempted to cure me but failed. I

HOT SPRINGS have only used a few bottles of B. B. B., (made in Atlanta, Ga.) and the effect has been truly magical, as they have all healed and I am cured after everything failed. My general health is also improving, appetite and digestion good. I sleep soundly, and never felt better. Doctors told me that I could not be cured.

I refer to every merchant or professional man of Pine Bluff.

AGRICULTURAL.

TOPICS OF INTEREST RELATIVE TO FARM AND GARDEN.

Sweeny and Its Cure.

Sweeny, or the wasting away of the flesh and muscles of the shoulder, is the common result of all injuries which entail a disease of the limb. A sore foot or any injury which will prevent the use of the limb is very likely to cause a shrinking of the muscles in the shoulder or elsewhere. In old and long-standing cases only a partial restoration of the muscles can be effected, but if proper treatment is given in its early stages sweeny can be cured. If there is any swelling or tenderness in the parts, wet cloths should be applied to reduce the inflammation, following with gentle exercise and active friction over the muscles of the shoulder to increase circulation. If early treatment has been neglected then light blisters and bathing in alcohol and dilute spirits of ammonia will be very beneficial. The parts should be rubbed briskly two or three times a day with a wisp of hay, and the animal allowed gentle exercise on soft and smooth ground. The restoration of the parts to their normal condition will necessarily be slow, but by perseverance a cure will usually be effected.—New York Sun.

The Honey Instinct.

How do bees know when there is honey in the flowers? Is it by instinct, or are they first-rate smellers? Do gay colors attract them?

During any warm day, if I melt wax, and have the door or window open, the room will soon be alive with bees, and they will even try to get down the chimney. Dear me! let the wax run over and burn, and there will be a bee convention in short call; or melt honey, and drop some on the stove. Is this instinct, or do they smell?

I've a plum tree out there in the garden that never fails to produce a magnificent crop of blossoms, and is fragrant. Sometimes I'm tempted to put honey on the blossoms to induce the bees to roam over them, but they know the flowers are no good and will not produce plums, and there is no work for them to do. They cannot afford to spend their time enjoying the sweet fragrance and hovering over the delicate white bloom, for pleasure only; they want profit.

If gay colors attract bees, then they ought to hold high carnival over a red clover field, for they could find both bright colors and fragrance. They are not like Oscar Wilde, for they pass great Russian sun-flowers that are over a foot in diameter, and hover over a flower so tiny as to be almost imperceptible. The great bright peonies of our grandmothers' day, and bleeding-hearts of our own time, are passed by for the modest clover. —Prairie Farmer.

Best Feed for Dairy Cows.

Farmers have a much greater sphere of influence on the flavor of milk produced than many suppose, or they are willing to admit. The reason why a certain number of consumers in all large cities are willing to pay what, to a farmer or an average consumer, may seem extraordinary prices, is because they get butters of high flavor which are always uniform. The makers of these butters nearly all use clover and meadow hay and corn meal, in varying proportions with other coarse fodder and meals. The makers who produce the finest flavors prefer clover and meadow hay, cut on the green side just before maturity, and carefully cured, fed with corn meal, ensilage and roots. Forage plants harvested just before maturity contain their maximum of nutritive matter, and therefore their highest flavors. When the coloring matter of plants is allowed to bleach out, as in hay or corn stalks, the flavor, or the best part of it, goes with it. This fact is one of the best reasons for the practice of feeding ensilage, for by no other method of treating fodder corn can the color be so well preserved. The Swedes and Danes use small quantities of rape cake combined with their grains and fodders to produce the uniform flavors which their butters possess. The Englishman uses a wider range of mixtures, including fine clover and meadow hay, small quantities of carrots, or mangels, middlings, shorts, bran, pea and oat meal, corn and cotton and linseed meals in various proportions. In the United States, the farmer has everything at his command for feed which he can desire, with corn ensilage of the best quality. Successful feeders compound their rations from many sources rather than few, as much for the purpose of maintaining health and vigor of digestion as for the food of varied flavors. At present prices, there are no cheaper basis for dairy rations than gluten and cotton seed meals, mixed with enough bran and shorts or whatever else is cheapest on the market. With hay at present prices and plenty of corn stalks, most men will be able to construct cheap rations from the most abundant materials. Due care must be exercised at all times to avoid exclusiveness in compounding rations.

It is assumed that every farmer who feeds for butter will use a cow having a tendency in that direction, and that he will apply the test of market quality as well as the daily aggregate of butter fat in ascertaining what animals in his herd come nearest to this description. Quality and success do not depend on luck or chance. There is a "reason why" in all things. The reason is intelligible to all who desire to learn.—American Agriculturist.

Farm and Garden Notes.

Early feeding is the most desirable for fowls.

The morning meal is important and is always best relished.

Lambs like cottonseed meal, but it should be fed sparingly.

Never worry a generous, honest horse by putting a rogue or a sluggard in the harness with him.

Never use stale eggs for nest eggs. Nest egg gourds are best. A single stale egg may ruin your reputation.

The greenhouse takes a prominent place in gardening, and no large or even small place is complete without its complement of grass.

Fresh bullock's blood put in a woolen bag and boiled, then mixed with the soft food and fed to fowls is the best egg producing food known, as it is exceedingly rich in albumen.

If a hen lays one egg a week she will pay all expenses of keep. Every egg over is profit. The greater the number of eggs secured the lower the cost of each egg proportionately.

Always assort your eggs. Do not have several colors and sizes together. Put the dark eggs in one basket and the light ones in another, and pick out the small ones to be sold separately.

A system of farming which does not provide in an economical way for a return in an available form, of the soil [illegible] by the crop [illegible]

HOUSEHOLD MATTERS.

Effective Eradication of Grease.

There are several effective means of taking out grease spots. Chloroform will do it. So will salt dissolved into alcohol. So will an equal mixture of alcohol, gin and ammonia. Or you can wet the place with ammonia water; then lay white, soft paper over it, and iron with a hot iron. Or rub French chalk on the wrong side; let it remain a day; split a visiting card, lay the rough side on the spot and pass a warm iron lightly over. Or try the old-fashioned "grease balls," a stiff paste made of fuller's earth, saleratus and vinegar, molded into balls and dried. Wet the spot, scrape the ball over it, let it dry, and wash it off with tepid water.—New York Dispatch.

Baby Blankets.

An afghan for carriage or crib is knit either in plain strips or squares, and these are crocheted together with colored worsted, matching a principal color, or else with a vivid contrast.

For a bath blanket, use heavy zephyr and large hardwood or bone needles. Cast on 120 stitches, knit a square and a quarter. If a colored border is made, it should be red, as that is the only color that will wash perfectly where frequent washing is required.

For a cradle blanket cast on 100 stitches, using single zephyr. Stripe prettily with white and baby blue, white and orange, white and scarlet or cardinal, or else make a white center and wide end borders of color. Edge with knitted worsted.—Sturdy Oak.

Home-Made Feather Duster.

I have made a duster or brush of chicken feathers which I find very useful. I selected even, pretty feathers, until I had a quantity saved. Then with a needle and fine strong twine, I strung them through the stem ends of the feathers, hammering the quills flat, so as to make them lie close to the handle. For the handle, I used an old broomstick. I wet this handle with strong glue, secured one end of the string and wound the strung feathers around and around the stick, until I had my brush as large as I wanted it. As I wound, I bound the stems close to the stick with twine, and, in finishing the last row, I bound them tightly and evenly by winding the twine on the outside over all the quills. All the time I was working, I kept the quills wet with glue. The twine was covered with a cap of enameled cloth. This I made and slipped on while the glue was still wet; when the glue dried, I had a nice firm brush.—Prairie Farmer.

Softening Water.

An authority on softening water, making soap and kindred matters says: "For all washing and cleansing operations it is indispensable, if good and economical results are to be obtained, first to soften the water before using soap of any kind. Softening water simply consists in removing the soluble lime salts with which all water (except pure rain water) is more or less impregnated. If this is not done the soluble lime forms an insoluble lime soap from the decomposition of the soap used for washing. This substance is a greasy, sticky, oily compound, perfectly insoluble and more difficult to wash away afterward by any treatment. It is this that causes the yellow grayish deposit on the edges of collars and cuffs washed simply with hard water and soap, and the sticky, greasy deposit on wood when treated in a similar manner and also on the sides and edges of all washing-machines.

"It is a most uneconomical proceeding to wash anything in water and soap alone without previously softening the water. Not a particle of soap can become available for washing purposes until all the added lime in the water has combined with the amount of soap it requires to form the insoluble lime soap. As compared with the pure 98 per cent. powered caustic soda, such as the "Greenbank" brand, it requires twelve pounds of the very finest pure soap or twenty to thirty pounds of ordinary soap, such as is usually sold to manufacturers, to do the same work that can be done with one pound of this soda."—New York World.

Three Good Home Recipes.

Snowballs—Pare and core six apples; fill the space with a little marmalade of any kind, or sugar and spice with a bit of chopped lemon or orange peel. Place each apple in a separate cloth, and scatter over each two tablespoonfuls of rice. Tie rather loosely, and boil for one hour. For the sauce, cream a piece of butter the size of an egg with a cup of fine sugar; add the grated rind and juice of one orange, or its equivalent in any kind of fruit juice from canned fruit. Pour over slowly a pint of boiling water.

Fricandelles—Dishes which call for cold chicken or turkey are in order at this season of the year. Take a half pint of cold minced fowl, and an equal quantity of stale bread that has been softened in cold water; it must be just soft and moist—not soaking. Mix both together, and season with salt and cayenne. Dip the hands into cold water, and make up the meat and bread into small sausage shaped rolls, about two inches long, and one in diameter; roll them in fine cracker or bread crumbs, and fry in a kettle with smoking hot fat enough to float them; take out with a skimmer, and lay on brown paper a moment to free them from grease. Garnish with parsley or cresses and slices of lemon.

To Cook an Old Fowl—Braising is one of the nicest ways in which to serve an old hen. If it is cold weather, let it hang for at least five days after it is dressed. Then stuff as for roasting. If you have a pair of fowls, cut a quarter of a pound of salt pork in thin slices; lay half of this in a broad saucepan, the chickens on top, and the rest of the pork skewer over their breasts, just taking up the skin, and not running the skewers through the flesh. Season with salt and pepper, and pour over a pint of boiling water; cover the saucepan closely and simmer for two hours and a half, or until they are very tender, but cook slowly. This is the secret of cooking all meats over the fire; they must only be simmered. When the chickens are done, lay them on a hot dish in the warming oven, and strain the gravy. Put half of it in a saucepan, and boil rapidly to a bright brown glaze, first adding a teaspoonful of flour wet with cold water. Remove the pork from the chickens, brush them over with the glaze, and brown in a quick oven. Skim the fat from the rest of the gravy; add the giblets chopped fine, and the water in which they were cooked; thicken with browned flour, and season to taste.—American Agriculturist.

WOMAN'S WORLD.

PLEASANT LITERATURE FOR FEMININE READERS.

A Queer Little Woman's Club.

There is a queer little woman's club in Boston which devotes itself to the discussion of any odd and unusual topic which suggests itself to the minds of any of the members. Such outre questions as "Are We Smarter Than Our European Sisters?" "How Should a Woman Educate Herself in Order to Become Truly Cultured?" "Who Is the Ideal American Woman?" and the like, are treated with breezy originality and with a great deal of very good sense. They are now considering "Whether Flowers or Jewels Are the Better Ornaments for the Hair?" and some of the arguments offered are highly diverting. The weight of opinion seems to be in favor of the flowers, both for afternoon and evening dress.—Chicago News.

The Blue-Grass Girl.

The limestone and blue grass together determine the agricultural pre-eminence of the region, and account for the fine breeding of the horses, the excellence of the cattle, the stature of the men, and the beauty of the women; but they have social and moral influence also. It could not well be otherwise, considering the relation of the physical condition to disposition and character. We should be surprised if a rich agricultural region, healthful at the same time, where there is abundance of food, and wholesome cooking is the rule, did not effect the tone of social life. And I am almost prepared to go further, and think that blue grass is a specific for physical beauty and a certain graciousness of life. I have been told that there is a natural relation between Presbyterianism and blue grass, and am pointed to the Shenandoah and to Kentucky as evidence of it. Perhaps Presbyterians naturally seek a limestone country. But the relation, if it exists, is too subtle and the facts are too few to build a theory on. Still, I have no doubt there is a distinct variety of women known as the blue-grass girl. A geologist told me that once when he was footing it over the State with a geologist from another State, as they approached the blue-grass region from the southward they were carefully examining the rock formation and studying the surface indications, which are usually marked on the border line, to determine exactly where the peculiar limestone formation began. Indications, however, were wanting. Suddenly my geologist looked up the road and exclaimed: "We are in the blue-grass region now."

"How do you know?" asked the other.

"Why, there is a blue-grass girl."

There was no mistaking the neat dress, the style, the rounded contours, the gracious personage. A few steps further on the geologists found the outcroping of the blue limestone.—Harper's Magazine.

Girls Who Sell Their Hair.

There is more poetry and romance woven into the history of an auburn wig, more tender sentiment twisted into the traditions of a blond toupee, than the bald-headed man who wears them ever dreams of. The soft locks that shelter his poll from the draught that chills and the migratory fly that fain would choose his shiny pate for the scene of its revels and wanderings once waved above the bright eyes of some fair German peasant maiden or saucy, sparkling Norman lassie who bartered them for a trinket of gold or silver for her Sabbath-day adorning. Just why these peasant women possess such abundant tresses has never yet been satisfactorily explained, but the foreign women, particularly the French and German who toil in the fields, shielded from the sun only by the small close cap which covers their hair but does not shade their faces, invariably have beautiful fine soft hair, and it is from them that all the best hair in the market is obtained, in the following manner: Most of the women have too much hair to be covered entirely by the close cap without being so tightly braided or twisted as to be uncomfortable. Accordingly the itinerant hair buyer fills his pockets and pack with bright ribbons, fine caps, beads, and trinkets, and wanders through the fields where the women work. When the noon-tide lunch has been eaten he spreads his tempting wares beneath some sheltering tree, and the shy, bright-eyed laisies steal up timidly and pick out the brooch or long earrings or pretty ribbons for their Sunday cap for which they long, then snatch off the little caps from their hair, unbraid and shake out all its shining beauty for the peddler's inspection, and when a bargain is made they sit down on the ground while he carefully snips out here and there a tress so cunningly that it is never missed. Usually a girl sells about half her hair, but if it be very heavy two-thirds of it is sometimes cut out, leaving the remainder long and smooth, to be braided up with no trouble and wound about her head. Pure white hair is most expensive because extremely rare. A woman old enough to have white hair has usually very little left, and that is short, yellow at the ends, and split and broken. After this the yellow blond hair is most difficult to find, auburn hair, and what hairdressers designate as drab shades.—New York Sun.

Fashion Notes.

Fringe is again fashionable.

This is emphatically a fur winter.

Some of the newest woolen gowns have deep fur collars and directory revers.

Black lace princess dresses come among late importations of Paris gowns.

Canadian beaver is a favorite fur. Blue fox and Siberian fox are also in high favor.

Flowers are still much worn. In previous seasons they have been discarded much earlier in the winter.

Striped cashmeres, limousines, and fancy woolens are in vogue and make up into very effective costumes.

Rich brocades, heavy and thick, are worn with soft pliable fabrics that drape effectively and modify the severity of the directoire models.

An authority declares that though white fur may be worn in the street, white feather boas there are as inappropriate as a ball costume would be.

The violin gown is made with a full straight skirt, a loose round waist banded with a sling sash of soft folds and the sleeves are loose puffs to the elbow.

With Empire and directoire styles Paris has adopted for day wear, the nets, gauzes, muslins and so on that used to be held appropriate only to evening costume.

WORDS OF WISDOM.

Seek peace and pursue it.

Wealth is but sugar-coated poverty.

Be cheerful; a light heart lives long.

Who keeps his tongue doth keep his soul.

Never press a favor where it seems undesired.

The seeding in sorrow brings reaping in song.

Though feet should slip, ne'er let the tongue.

Thou hast concealed thine age! Surely not thy folly.

The surest way to drive honors from you is to go to them.

To know others, study thyself; to know thyself, study others.

"A tried and trusted friend" is all right usually until he is tried and trusted.

In storms a feather takes higher flight than a stone; and an oak is uprooted more easily than the vine it supported.

Old customs must give way to new conditions or the result is a revolution when "we, the people" who hold the fort must be recognized.

If all the nations of the earth would disband their armies, no wars would be possible; the same would be true if no organizations other than "we, the people" was permitted.

Women are more likely to love those whom they hate than those who appear to them ridiculous. For of the ridiculous we deem ourselves the superior; but those we hate are seldom our inferiors.

Nothing can be more certain than that the character can be sustained and strengthened only by its own energetic action. The will, which is the central force of character, must be trained to habits of decision; otherwise it will be able neither to resist evil nor to follow good. Decision gives the power of standing firmly, when to yield, however slightly, might be only the first step in a downhill course to ruin.

Lighting the Big Hoosac Tunnel.

A year ago last November there began probably the most difficult electric light venture the world ever saw when the Fitchburg Railroad Company contracted with the Westinghouse Electric Light Company, of Pittsburg, to supply the Hoosac Tunnel with electric light. The difficulty of pursuing this work may be imagined when it is understood that a torch sheds but a meagre, uncertain light through the Egyptian darkness, thick with smoke that incessantly prevails in the tunnel, while the workmen had to contend with the constantly dripping water from the roof and sides, the constant passing of trains, the sulphurous gases, and the prevailing damp that quickly rusted and corroded tools and metal parts of the works.

Through this tunnel in the face of these obstacles forty miles of lead-covered cables were laid in wooden conduits, in trenches on each side of the tracks, an undertaking requiring extreme care and watchfulness, for a slight defect or an imperfect joint might have rendered necessary the taking up of miles of cable. Owing to the excessive moisture, the absolutely perfect insulation of the wires for 8000 feet of cable was rendered necessary. Power for the light is furnished from a small building near the west portal of the tunnel, where two 125 horse-power boilers, a 125 horse-power engine, three No. 1 Westinghouse alternating-current dynamos, each of 650 16 candle-power light capacity, and two Westinghouse direct-current machines for exciting the larger dynamos constitute the apparatus. One dynamo will be reserved for use in case of emergency if either of the others breaks down.

The lamps in the tunnel are arranged in sections of twenty fifty-volt lamps each. In case of a break any section can be cut out without disturbing the rest of the system. Each lamp is provided with a choke-off coil, whereby, in case any lamp burns out, the rest of the lamps on the section will be kept burning.

The railroad company's objects were undoubtedly to afford the traveling public as great safety as possible, as well as to facilitate operations in the tunnel. With the tunnel all alight a greater amount of work can be accomplished by the workmen, and engineers can, on favorable days, in the absence of fog, see the track for nearly a mile ahead. A further design may have been to develop the popular interest that centres around the great bore, by making it more attractive to excursionists.—New York Times.

The First Inauguration Ball.

The first inauguration ball known to American history took place at the initiation of General Washington's first Presidential term, on March 4, 1789. The records as to this event are very plain and numerous. W. L. Stone, in his "History of New York City," for instance, tells of the great popular demonstration of joy on this occasion. The inauguration ceremonies, and all the festivities connected with it took place in New York city, and the fireworks and illuminations on the evening of March 4 were of an unparalleled splendor. Of the ball itself this author says:

"The ball was truly an elegant entertainment. The old "City Assembly Rooms," in which it took place, were in a large wooden building standing upon the site of the old City Hotel. In addition to the distinguished few for whom it was given it was honored by the Vice-President, the Speaker of the House and most of the members of both branches of Congress, Governor Clinton, Chancelor Ludington, Chief Justice Yates, of New York, John Jay, General Knox, Mayor Duane, Baron Steuben, the French and Spanish Ambassadors, General Hamilton and many other distinguished gentlemen, both Americans and foreigners. There was much attention paid to General Washington and to the wife of the President on this occasion, and there was more of etiquette in the arrangements for this complimentary ball than was thought to be exactly consistent with our republican institutions, and more, in fact, than was altogether agreeable to the feelings of him in whose honor it was given. The costume even to be worn by the gentlemen on this occasion had been minutely prescribed by the managers, Colonel Humphries and Colonel William S. Smith. They had to dance with small swords on. Each gentleman, on taking a partner to dance, was to lead her to the sofa on which the President and his lady were seated, and to bow low to them. This ceremony of respect had to be repeated before each couple again took their seats. The decorations of the assembly-room were truly splendid and very tastefully disposed."

In a Bad Way.

The London Times will have to abandon, for a time at least, the role of Thunderer and of counselor, and guide to the British nation. In a financial way the blow is a very heavy one. First and last, the forgery publishing business, which has failed so miserably, will cost the Times at least $500,000, and the suits which Mr. Parnell is bringing in Ireland and Scotland may, if persisted in, cost as much more. Young Walter, who owns one sixteenth of the Times, has received about $80 dividends for 1888. The usual profit annually divided among the Times' owners is upward of $450,000. The feelings of the Times' owners, who have lost all that and got only Piggott in return, can be quite easily imagined.

GREAT thought wakens in our mind a whole world of new perceptions, as a sunbeam streaming into the darkness shows a thousand atoms floating in its path.

No sensible man prefers wealth to health. Some few have both; very many haven't either. Well, you may have first choice. Which will you take? "Health." Very well, what's your ailment? "A little of everything." What's the cause? "Blood out of order, kidneys weak, digestion bad, heart's action irregular." Yes, and every disease can be traced to these same sources. Just take a few bottles of Brown's Iron Bitters, it will remove the cause of disease and restore you to robust health.

Now is the Time

To purify your blood and fortify your system against the debilitating effects of spring weather. At no other season is the bitter taste in the mouth more prominent, the breath so offensive, the drowsy dizziness so frequent, or that extreme tired feeling so prevalent. Hood's Sarsaparilla is just the medicine to build up the system, purify the blood, cure biliousness and headache, overcome that tired feeling and create a good appetite. Try it this spring.

"I have taken three bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla and consider it the best blood medicine I have ever taken." MRS. A. P. LINCOLN, Portland, Me.

"I wish to enroll my name as one of those who have derived health from the use of Hood's Sarsaparilla. For many years I have taken it, especially in the early spring, when I am troubled with dizziness, dullness, unpleasant taste in my mouth in the morning. It removes this bad taste, relieves my headache and makes me feel greatly refreshed. The two bottles I have used this spring have been worth a dollar a dose. I advise all my friends to take it." JOHN BINNS, 410 3d Street, town of Lake, Chicago, Ill.

A DELIGHTED YOUNG WOMAN.

Look at my face and my hands—not a pimple,
Such as you saw there some time ago.
See my fresh cheeks, and I'm getting a dimple,
I don't look at all like I used to, I know.

My face was all blotches—complexion like tallow;
No wonder they thought me and called me a fright;
No one need have pimples and skin gray and sallow,
If she'll take what I took, ev'ry morn, noon, and night.

I asked the delighted young woman what she referred to, and she answered, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is the best beautifier in the world, because it purifies and enriches the blood, and pure rich blood gives good health, and good health—beauty.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is guaranteed to cure all Blood, Skin and Scalp Diseases, as Blotches, Eruptions, Salt-rheum, Tetter, Eczema, Erysipelas, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, in short, all diseases caused by bad blood, or money paid for it will be promptly refunded.

REV. DR. TALMAGE.

THE BROOKLYN DIVINE'S SUNDAY SERMON.

Subject: "Shall America be Reserved for Americans?"

TEXT: "And hath made of one blood all nations."—Acts xvii., 26.

That is, if for some reason general phlebotomy were ordered, and standing in a row were an American, an Englishman, a Scotchman and an Irishman, a Frenchman, a German, a Norweigan, an Icelander, a Spaniard, an Italian, a Russian and representatives of all other nationalitities bared their right arm and a lancet were struck into it, the blood let out would have the same characteristics, for it would be red, complex, fibrine, globuline, chlorine and containing sulphuric acid, potassium, phosphate of magnesia and so on, and Harvey and Sir Astley Cooper and Richardson and Zimmerman and Brown-Sequard and all the scientific doctors, allopathic, homeopathic, hydropathic and eclectic, would agree with Paul as, standing on Mars Hill, his pulpit a ridge of limestone rock fifty feet high and among the proudest and most exclusive and undemocratic people of the earth, he crashed into all their prejudices by declaring in the words of my text that God had made "of one blood all nations." The countenance of the five races of the human family may be different as a result of climate or education or habits, and the Malay will have the projecting upper jaw, and the Caucasian the oval face and small mouth, and the Ethiopian the retreating forehead and large lip, and the Mongolion the flat face of olive hue, and the American Indian the copper-colored complexion, but the blood is the same and indicates that they all had one origin and that Adam and Eve were their ancestor and ancestress.

I think God built this American continent and organized this United States Republic to demonstrate the stupendous idea of the text. A man in Persia will always remain a Persian, a man in Switzerland will always remain a Swiss, a man in Austria will always remain an Austrian, but all foreign nationalties coming to America were intended to be Americans. This land is the chemical laboratory where foreign bloods are to be inextricably mixed up and race prejudices and race antipathies are to perish, and this sermon is an ax by which I hope to kill them. It is not hard for me to preach such a sermon, because, although my ancestors came to this country about two hundred and fifty years ago, some of them came from Wales and some from Scotland and some from Holland and some from other lands, and I am a mixture of so many nationalities that I feel at home with people from under every sky and have a right to call them blood relations. There are madcaps and patriotic lunatics in this country who are ever and anon crying out: "America for Americans." Down with the Germans! Down with the Irish! Down with the Jews! Down with the Chinese! are in some directions the popular cries, all of which vociferations I would drown out by the full organ of my text, while I pull out the stops and put my foot on the pedal that will open the loudest pipes, and run my fingers over all the four banks of ivory keys, playing the chant: "God hath made of one blood all nations."

There are not five men in this audience, nor five men in any audience to-day in America except it be on an Indian reservation, who were not descended from foreigners if you go far enough back. The only native Americans are the Modocs, the Shawnees, the Chippewas, the Cherokees, the Chickasaws, the Seminoles and such like. If the principle America only for Americans be carried out, then you and I have no right to be here and we had better charter all the steamers and clippers and men-of-war and yachts and sloops and get out of this country as quick as possible. The Pilgrim Fathers were all immigrants, the Huguenots all immigrants. The cradle of most every one of our families was rocked on the bank of the Clyde or the Rhine or the Shannon or the Seine or the Tiber. Had the watchword "America for Americans" been an early and successful cry, where now stand our cities would have stood Indian wigwams, and canoes instead of steamers would have tracked the Hudson and the Connecticut; and instead of the Mississippi being the main artery of the continent, it would have been only a trough for deer and antelope and wild pigeons to drink out of. What makes the cry of "America for Americans" the more absurd and the more inhuman is that some in this country who themselves arrived here in their boyhood or arrived here only one or two generations back are joining in the cry. Escaped from foreign despotisms themselves they say: "Shut the door of escape for others." Getting themselves on our shores in a life boat from the shipwreck saying: Haul the boat on the beach and let the rest of the passengers go to the bottom! Men who have yet on them a Scotch or German or English or Irish brogue crying out, America for Americans! What if the native inhabitants of Heaven, I mean the angels, the cherubim, the seraphim born there, should stand in the gate and when they see us coming up at the last should say: "Go back! Heaven for the Heavenians!"

Of course we do well not to allow foreign nations to make this country a convict colony. We would have a wall built as high as heaven and as deep as hell against foreign thieves, pickpockets and anarchists. We would not let them wipe their feet on the mat of the outside door of Castle Garden. If England or Russia or Germany or France send here their desperadoes to get clear of them, we would have them [illegible] sent back in chains to the places where they came from. We will not have America become the dumping place for foreign vagabondism. But you build up a wall at the Narrows before New York harbor, or at the Golden Gate before San Francisco, and forbid the coming of the industrious and hard working and honest populations of other lands who want to breathe the air of our free institutions and get opportunity for better livelihood, and it is only a question of time when [illegible]

The parlor is the best room in your house. Your son Philip says to the other four children: "Now, John, you live in the small room in the end of the hall and stay there; George, you live in the garret and stay there; Mary, you live in the cellar and stay there; Fannie, you live in the kitchen and stay there. I, Philip, will take the parlor. It suits me exactly. I like the pictures on the wall. I like the lambrequins at the windows. I like the Axminster on the floor. Now, I, Philip, propose to occupy this parlor and I command you to stay out. The parlor only for Philippians." You, the father, hear of this arrangement and what will you do? You will get red in the face and say: "John, come out of that small room at the end of the hall; George, come down out of the garret; Mary, come up from the cellar; Fannie, come out of the kitchen, and go into the parlor or anywhere you choose: and, Philip, for your greediness and unbrotherly behavior, I put you for two hours in the dark closet under the stairs." God is the Father of the human race. He has at least five sons, a North American, a South American, a European, an Asiatic and an African. The North American sniffs the breeze and he says to his four brothers and sisters: "Let the South American stay in South America, let the European stay in Europe, let the Asiatic stay in Asia, let the African stay in Africa; but America is for me. I think it is the parlor of the whole earth. I like its carpets of grass and its upholstery of the front window, namely the American sunrise, and the upholstery of the back window, namely the American sunset. Now I want you all to stay out and keep to your places." I am sure the Father of the whole human race would hear of it and chastisement would come, and, whether by earthquake or flood or drought or heaven darkening swarms of locust and grasshopper or destroying angel of pestilence, God would rebuke our selfishness as a nation and say to the four winds of heaven: "This world is my house and the North American is no more my child than is the South American and the European and the Asiatic and the African. And I built this world for all the children, and the parlor is theirs and all is theirs." For, let me say, whether we will or not, the population of other lands will come here. There are harbors all the way from Baffin's Bay to Galveston, and if you shut fifty gates there will be other gates unguarded. And if you forbid foreigners from coming on the steamers they will take sailing vessels. And if you forbid them coming on sailing vessels they will come in boats. And if you will not let them come in boats they will come on rafts. And if you will not allow wharfage to the raft they will leave it outside Sandy Hook and swim for free America. Stop them? You might as well pass a law forbidding a swarm of summer bees from lighting on the clover top, or pass a law forbidding the tides of the Atlantic to rise when the moon puts under it silver grappling hooks, or a law that the noonday sun should not irradiate the atmosphere. They have come. They are coming now. They will come. And if I had a voice loud enough to be heard across the seas I would put it to the utmost tension and cry: Let them come! You stingy, selfish, shriveled up, blasted souls who sit before your silver dinner plate piled up with breast of roast turkey incarnadined with cranberry, your fork full and your mouth full and cramming down the superabundance till your digestive organs are terrorized, let the millions of your fellow-men have at least the wishing bone.

But some of this cry, America for Americans, may arise from an honest fear lest this land be overcrowded. Such persons had better take the Northern Pacific or Union Pacific or Southern Pacific or Atlantic and Charlotte air line or Texas and Santa Fe, and go a long journey and find out that no more than a tenth part of this continent is fully cultivated. If a man with a hundred acres of farm land should put all his cultivation on one acre he would be cultivating a larger ratio of his farm than our nation is now occupying of the national farm. Pour the whole human race, Europe, Asia, Africa and all the islands of the sea, into America and there would be room to spare. All the Rocky Mountain barrennesses and all the other American deserts are to be fertilized, and as Salt Lake City and much of Utah once yielded not a blade of grass, now by artificial irrigation have become gardens, so a large part of this continent that now is too poor to grow even a mullein stalk or a Canada thistle, will through artificial irrigation like an Illinois prairie wave with wheat or like a Wisconsin farm rustle with corn tassels. Beside that, after perhaps a century or two more, when this continent is quite well occupied, the tides of immigration will turn the other way. Politics and governmental affairs being corrected on the other side of the waters, Ireland under different regulation turned into a garden will invite back another generation of Irishmen, and the wide wastes of Russia brought from under despotism will with her own green fields invite back another generation of Russians. And there will be hundreds of thousands of Americans every year settling on the other continents. And after a number of centuries, all the earth full and crowded, what then? Well, at that time some night a panther meteor wandering through the heavens will put its paw on our world and stop it, and putting its panther tooth into the neck of its mountain range will shake it lifeless as the rat terrier a rat. So I have no more fear of America being overcrowded than that the porpoises in the Atlantic Ocean will become so numerous as to stop shipping.

It is through mighty addition of foreign population to our native population that I think God is going to fill this land with a race of people 95 per cent. superior to anything the world has ever seen. Intermarriage of families and intermarriage of nations is depressing and crippling. Marriage outside of one's own nationality and with another style of nationality is a mighty gain. What makes the Scotch-Irish second to no pedigree for brain and stamina of character, so that blood goes right up to supreme court bench and to the front rank in jurisprudence and merchandise and art? Because nothing under heaven can be more unlike than a Scotchman and an Irishman and the descendants of these two conjoined nationalities, unless rum flings them, go right to the tip top in everything. All nationalities coming to this land the opposites will all the while be affianced, and French and Germans will unite and that will stop all the quarrel between them, and one child they will call Alsace and the other Lorraine. And hot-blooded Spaniard will [illegible] with matter of fact Norwegian, and a hundred and fifty years from now the race occupying this land will be in stature in purity of complexion, in liquidity of eye, in gracefulness of poise, in dome like brow, in taste, in intelligence and in morals so far ahead of anything now known on either side the seas that this last quarter of the nineteenth century will seem to them like the Dark Ages. Oh, then how they will legislate and bargain and pray and preach and govern! This is the land where by the mingling of races the race prejudice is to get its death blow. How Heaven feels about it we may conclude from the fact that Christ, the Jew, and descended from a Jewess, nevertheless provided a religion for all races, and that Paul, though a Jew, became the chief apostle of the Gentiles, and that recently God has allowed to burst in splendor upon the attention of the world Hirsch, the Jew, who after giving ten million dollars to Christian churches and hospitals, has called a committee of nations and furnished them with forty million dollars for schools to elevate his race in France and Germany and Russia to higher intelligence and abolish, as he says, the prejudices against their race, these fifty million dollars not given in a last will and testament and at a time when a man must leave his money anyhow, but by donation at fifty-five years of age and in good health, utterly eclipsing all benevolence since the world was created. I must confess there was a time when I entertained race prejudice, but thanks to God, that prejudice has gone, and if I sat in church and on one side of me there was a black man and on the other side of me was an Indian and before me was a Chinaman and behind me a Turk, I would be as happy as I am now standing in the presence of this brilliant audience, and I am as happy now as I can be and live. The sooner we get this corpse of race prejudice buried, the healthier will be our American atmosphere. Let each one fetch a spade and let us dig its grave clear on down deeper and deeper till we get as far down as the center of the earth and half way to China, but no further lest it poison those living on the other side the earth. Then into this grave let down the accursed carcass of race prejudice and throw on it all the mean things that have ever been said and written between Jew and Gentile, between Turk and Russian, between English and French, between Mongolian and anti-Mongolian, between black and white, and put up over that grave for tombstone some scorched and jagged chunk of scoria spit out by some volcanic eruption and chisel on it for epitaph: "Here lies the carcass of one who cursed the world. Aged, near six thousand years. Departed this life for the perdition from whence it came. No peace to its ashes!"

Now, in view of this subject, I have two point blank words to utter, one suggesting what foreigners ought to do for us, and the other what we ought to do for foreigners. First, to foreigners. Lay aside all apologetic air and realize you have as much right as any man who was not only himself born here but his father and his grandfather and great-grandfather before him. Are you an Englishman? Though during the Revolutionary war your fathers treated our fathers roughly, England has more than atoned for that by giving to this country at least two denominations of Christians, the Church of England and the Methodist Church. Witness the magnificent liturgy of the one and the Wesleyan hallelujahs of the other. And who shall ever pay England for what Shakespeare and John Milton and Woodsworth and a thousand other authors have done for America? Are you a Scotchman? Thanks for John Knox's Presbyterianism; the balance wheel of all other denominations. And how shall Americans ever pay your native land for what Thomas Chalmers and Macintosh and Robert Burns and Christopher North and Robert McCheyne and Candlish and Guthrie have done for Americans! Are you a Frenchman? We cannot forget your Lafayette, who in the most desperate time of our American revolution, New York surrendered and our armies flying in retreat, espoused our cause and at Brandywine and Monmouth and Yorktown put all America under eternal obligation. And we cannot forget the coming to the rescue of our fathers Rochambeau and his French fleet with six thousand armed men. Are you a German? We have not forgotton the eleven wounds through which your Baron De Kalb poured out his life blood at the head of the Maryland and Delaware troops in the disastrous battle at Camden, and after we have named our streets and our cities and counties after him we have not paid a tithe of what we owe Germany for his valor and self sacrifice. And what about Martin Luther, the giant German who made way for religious liberty for all lands and ages? Are you Polander? How can we forget your brilliant Count Pulaski, whose bones were laid in Savannah River after a mortal wound gotten while in the stirrups of one of the fiercest cavalry charges of the American revolution? But with no time to particularize I say: "All hail to the men and women of other lands who come here with honest purpose!" Renounce all obligation to foreign despots. Take the oath of American allegiance. Get out your naturalization papers. Don't talk against our institutions, for the fact that you came here and stay shows that you like ours better than any other. If you don't like them there are steamers going out of our ports almost every day, and the fare is cheap and, lest you should be detained for parting civilities, I bid you good-by now. But if you like it here, then I charge you, at the ballot box, in legislative hall, in churches and everywhere be out and out Americans. Do not try to establish here the loose foreign Sabbaths or transcendentalism spun into a religion of mush and moonshine, or foreign libertinism or that condensation of all thievery, scoundrelism, lust, murder and perdition which in Russia is called Nihilism and in France called Communism and in America called Anarchism. Unite with us in making by the grace of God the fifteen million square miles of America on both sides the Isthmus of Panama the paradise of virtue and religion.

My other word suggests what Americans ought to do for foreigners. By all practical means explain to them our institutions. Coming here, the vast majority of them know about as much concerning Republican or Democratic form of government as you in the United States know about politics of Denmark or France or Italy or Switzerland, namely nothing. [illegible] their native land, for, no matter how much they may have been oppressed there, in that native land there are sacred places, cabins or mansions around whose doors they played, and perhaps somewhere there is a grave into which they would like, when life's toils are over, to be let down, for it is mother's grave, and it would be like going again into the loving arms that first held them, and against the bosom that first pillowed them. My! my! how low down a man must have descended to have no regard for the place where his cradle was rocked. Don't mock their brogue or their stumbling attempts at the hardest of all languages to learn, namely the English language. I warrant that they speak English as well as you could talk Scandinavian. Treat them in America as you would like to be treated if for the sake of your honest principles or a better livelihood for yourself or your family you had moved under the shadow of Jungfrau, or the Rigi, or the Giant's Causeway, or the Bohemian Forest, or the Franconian Jura. If they get homesick, as some of them are, suggest to them that God is as near to help them here as He was near them before they crossed the Atlantic, and that the soul's final flight is less than a second whether from the beach of the Caspian Sea or the banks of Lake Erie. Evangelize their adults through the churches and their children through the schools and let home missions and tract societies and the Bible translated in all the languages of these foreign people have full swing.

Rejoice as Christian patriots that instead of being an element of weakness the foreign people thoroughly evangelized will be our mightiest defence against all the world. The Congress of the United States recently ordered built new forts all up and down our American coasts, and a new navy is about to be projected. But let me say that three hundred million dollars expended in coast defense will not be so mighty as a vast foreign population living in America. With hundreds of thousands of Germans in New York, Germany would as soon think of bombshelling Berlin as attacking us. With hundreds of thousands of Frenchmen in New York, France would as soon think of firing on Paris. With hundreds of thousands of Englishmen in New York, England would as soon think of destroying London. The mightiest defence against European nations is a wall of Europeans reaching all up and down the American continent, a wall of heads and hearts consecrated to free government. A bulwark of foreign humanity heaved up all along our shores, re-enforced by the Atlantic Ocean, armed as it is with tempests and Caribbean whirlwinds and giant billows ready to fling mountains from their catapault, we need as a nation fear no one in the universe but God, and if found in His service we need not fear Him. As six hundred million people will yet sit down at our national table, let God preside. To Him be dedicated the metal of our mines, the sheaves of our harvest fields, the fruits of our orchards, the fabrics of our manufactories, the telescopes of observatories, the volumes of our libraries, the songs of our churches, the affections of our hearts, and all our lakes become baptismal fonts and all our mountains altars of praise and all our valleys amphitheatres of worship, and our country, having become fifty nations consolidated into one, may its every heart throb be a pulsation of gratitude to Him who made "of one blood all nations" and ransomed that blood by the payment of the last drop of His own.

A decidedly novel plan of shop-lifting has been brought to light in the case of Mary Leonard and Annie Riley in Philadelphia. Their scheme was to go into a store and lift and conceal an article. Then to leave the building and enter another store, where they would purchase something and ask to have the article which they had stolen in the first store wrapped up with the purchase and the bundle kept until they should send for it. The next day they would send for their plunder. The detectives suspected the women for a long time, but could in no way fasten a case upon them, as nothing was ever found in their possession.

Elbridge T. Gerry, Esq., the vigilant President of the New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, appeared at one of the public hearings before the Committee for the [illegible]

St. Valentine's Day.

Tell me, gentle friend of mine,
Do you think Saint Valentine
Can by any fortune know
What is going on below,
On this gay,
Merry day
That his honored name is bearing?
Can he see
Love and glee
Take their February airing?

Gentle lady, some may paint
Valentine a sullen saint,
Who would gaze with clouded brow
On the throngs who praise him now;
Who would frown
On the lover's melancholy:
But he seems
To my dreams
Strong and tender, kind and jolly.

Gentle lady, when we bear
To his shrine and offer there
Stumbling rhymes and painted hearts,
Pierced by Cupid's savage darts;
And in staid
Masquerade
Pass in love-sick lines before him,
Though his smile
All the while
On us beams, I fear we bore him.

Gentle lady, unto me
Count it not impiety
That I think our patron kind
In the day some fun may find;
May recall
One and all
Of its fancies quaint and brittle,
And rehearse
Scraps of verse
Till the angels laugh a little.

ANNA'S VALENTINE.

BY MARY C. PRESTON.

"For me?" asked Anna, coloring a little, and holding out her hand for the pretty lace-like envelope, with the few touches of gilt, which her sister was looking at with admiration.

"Don't be in a hurry," Minna said, coolly. "It's a Valentine, of course, and you shall have it in a moment. I am trying to remember where I saw this writing. Oh," with sudden conviction, "I could swear to it now! It is—it is—a Valentine from George Dennis!"

"It is mine, and I think you might spare yourself all this anxiety concerning the sender of it," said Anna, a little tartly, taking it from her sister's hand.

But Minna was not to be crushed. She followed Anna to the window, and laid her hand coaxingly on the plump shoulder.

"Open it and let me see, too," she said, with all the assurance of 15 years, and an unlimited amount of curiosity in love affairs. "He's so bashful, that I'm sure it will be droll. Perhaps he has taken this chance of proposing to you—he never would find a better, and we all know how much he is in love with you."

"Minna," Anna cried, "you are a perfect little goose! and I shall not gratify your curiosity.

With that, and with a deepened color on either pretty cheek, she ran out of the room.

It was the fourteenth of February, and Anna had surely received a Valentine, which she was carefully opening in her own room, and reading with dimpling smiles and sparkling eyes.

First, there was a lace-work affair, with the prettiest little Cupid, half-hidden by silver leaves, holding in one plump hand an arrow, with a transfixed heart upon it, while the chubby forefinger of the other lay lightly on the little god's lip.

"A pretty idea," Anna whispered, regarding it smilingly. "It surely means a silent love. I never thought George at all romantic before."

Then she drew from the envelope a tinted, gilt-edged card, and slowly read the printed lines thereon:

"I'd rather be thine own, beloved,
Forever in thy heart to dwell,
Than own the treasures of the earth,
In palace, cot, or cell;
For what would such things bring to me,
When joy can only come from thee?"

"Particularly the 'cell' part of it!" laughed Anna.

per, unfolded it hastily, and read the following, her heart giving a few unaccustomed throbs:

"MY LIFE-STAR: I have loved you long in silence, because I dared not speak; but the time has come for confession from me, and I make it here, almost without a hope. You are so beautiful, so winning, that better than I will bring you pleadings and find you more willing to hear. Yet, if a life's devotion is anything to you, send me a line saying I may call on you tonight, and lay my heart at your feet. If I receive no word from you, I will know that there is indeed no hope for me, and you will never see my face again on earth. Do you not realize my suspense? Shorten it, if you care in the least for me. Your lover always, G. D."

Half an hour later, a little fellow was running across the fields, not minding the snow, because Anna had given him a piece of silver, if he would deliver the note he held in his hand to Mr. George Dennis.

And said note ran thus:

"I accept you as my valentine; come tonight, and come in hope. Yours, ANNA SNOWE."

In the evening when a tall, handsom, youth stood tremblingly at the door, waiting for an answer to his ring, and wondering what had happened to make him so unutterably happy, the door was opened by Minna, and he was drawn hurriedly into the hall and detained there.

"I want to tell you—I'm awfully sorry, but Anna would never forgive me if she knew," the girl began confusedly. "I sent her a Valentine, and an awfully silly one, today; and I copied your hand and it looked as if you had written it. Do you not understand? She thinks you have—have proposed to her; and I only meant it as a joke. But when I found that she had sent you word to come tonight, I didn't dare to tell her."

Mr. Dennis took one of Minna's hands and held it firmly, his eyes lighting, his face flushing.

"Tell me what was in the note you sent Anna in my name," he said, quietly. "Perhaps she need not know."

"But I'm afraid she must!" Minna was now almost crying. "I told her you had loved her a long while, and would go away forever unless she could give you hope; and, if she cared at all for you, I told her to send a line, saying you might come tonight. It was all for a jest, but—but I am afraid she took it seriously, and now she will never forgive me!"

"Let me make your peace with her. Where is she?"

"In the parlor."

"Alone?"

"Yes."

"Then, I think, my little Minna, you have been the best friend to me today man ever had."

And he stooped and kissed her on the forehead, then turned hastily in the direction of the parlor.

"I wonder what he means! And I do wonder why in the world he kissed me! May be because I'm Anna's sister," Minna said, sagely, to herself, as she darted off along the hall, feeling very much as though she deserved a sound shaking for the thoughtless prank that was likely to be so resented by her sister.

Meanwhile, George had entered the parlor where Anna was, looking very sweet and very shy and pretending to be very much interested in a novel; and when she looked up, on his entrance, and blushed so divinely, George Dennis, who had always been so bashful and individual, did something extremely bold and daring, for, taking the hand she extended to him, he drew very close to her, looked a moment on the pretty, downcast face, and then—whispering something which sounded like "darling," stooped impudently, and touched the girl's red lips with his.

Half an hour later Minna put her head in at the parlor door, and opened her mischievous eyes widely to see how near together two other heads were.

A very decided "Ahem" from her separated them, [illegible]

"I see you have made my peace, George," she said, placidly; "and I think I really helped you both by what I did; so thanks are due me really, not reproaches. What do you say, sister?"

Anna looked from one to another in a puzzled way, not at all comprehending.

"Did you not tell her?" Minna asked.

And George was very red as he turned to his lady love.

"I have something to confess," he said, confusedly.

And then he told her how Minna's prank had served his need, and made his wooing easy.

"I have tried to tell you how dear you are to me for a whole year," he said, in conclusion, "but I never could. I was afraid you cared nothing for me, and would send me away from you forever. When your note came, today, I was almost wild with delight, although I own it seemed a little strange at first; but I fancied you had seen how it was with me, and so kindly gave me a word of encouragement.

"As if I would!" Anna cried, indignantly. "I'll never forgive you, Minna! What—what could have induced you to do anything so cruel? I'll never in my life forgive you!"

"Oh, yes, you will," Minna said, serenely, skipping to the door. "George promised me your pardon, and I know he'll get it for me."

Which he did, after tears, reproaches and denunciations from Anna, and many and warm protestations on his part.

And six months afterward, Minna was chief bridesmaid, and enjoyed the occasion very much.

"I rather think it was a very nice and sisterly act of mine after all—the sending of that Valentine," she said to Anna, once. "But for it I am sure George would go on loving you in silence for years—all his life, perhaps; and wasn't that a cute little Cupid I sent you? I really think"—laughing—"I have a decided genius for match-making."

But Anna's cheeks were very red, although she smiled.—Saturday Night.

Age Conquers Historian Bancroft.

It is understood that the Historian Bancroft was terribly shocked by the news of the recent death of his old classmate at Harvard, Samuel Sewell. The two men have generally lived apart, both politically and socially, but to a man of Mr. Bancroft's years the death of a compeer is always more or less unnerving. He is now in his eighty-ninth year. It is seventy-two years since he and the late Mr. Sewell received their degrees at Harvard.

Mr. Bancroft has enjoyed an uncommonly vigorous old age, but his friends are agreed that he has taken his last horseback ride, although it is only a year or so since he bought a new steed and only a few months since he took a header without the slightest injury. He may not, therefore, regard the agreement of his friends in this respect. But there is small room for doubt that he is done with his life task of history writing.

Since Mr. Corcoran's death last year Mr. Bancroft enjoys the distinction of being the most venerable among the well known people of Washington. The vigor may have gone, but the sweet serenity and the charming dignity of his old age remain. It is now nearly seven years since he wrote: "Conscious of being near the shore of eternity, I await without impatience and without dread the beckoning of the hand which will summon me to rest."—Atlanta Constitution.

Judge Jno. A. Campbell, an old Alabamian, died at his home in Baltimore, Tuesday evening, at the age of 78 years. At the age of 25 Mr. Campbell was tendered, but, declined, the office of Justice of the supreme court of Alabama. In 1853 Mr. Campbell was appointed, by President Pierce, Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States and was afterwards Assistant Secretary of War of the Confederate States.

The following law passed by the last legislature in relation to pointing weapons carelessly at others is a good law to enforce:

To protect human life.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Alabama. That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person to present at any other person any gun, pistol or other fire arm whether loaded or unloaded.

Section 2. Be it further enacted, That any person who shall violate Section 1 of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than ten or more than one hundred dollars.

Approved February 28.

MONEY.—Money is a legal tender thought, a substitute for legal demands, and hence its name which means established by law because it is in our power to change it and render it useless.

It has no productive force.

It can only pay debts.

It represents a metal conception.

It represents the value of the products of labor only.

It was invented by man to be the instrument of exchange, but not the object.

It has not the power to increase.

It does not grow, and consequently must be the result of a fiat or command.

It is the result of legal custom and may consist of any substance.

When it is plenty, people rejoice and prosper.

When it is scarce people are distressed and want and ruin comes upon them.

The usury of money is a curse to the human family.

The want of money has debauched the world; and has wrecked kingdoms; has ruined nations has blighted the industries of the people; has been the chief source of crime the prime cause of insanity.

CHILTON COUNTY.

Healthy Old People and Numerous Progenies.

Special Correspondence Age-Herald.

STANTON, March 9.—Complying with your request, I give instances of longevity in this and along the lines of adjoining counties. First we will start over and get old man who was born in Ireland, and is 90 years old. He has resided on the same place in this county for 50 years. He is the father of 16 children, and is about the only Catholic in this part of the country.

MRS. POLLY CHAMBERS

lives near this place. She is the mother of 12 children and grandmother and great grandmother of 65 children, making a total of 77 all of whom could be gotten together within 12 hours. One of her great-grand children has five living grandmothers. Mrs. McGinnis, mother of Mrs. Chambers, lives in east Perry county, and is over 50 years old.

JOHN PARNELL,

known as "Honest John," is 71 years of age. He enjoys perfect health and is a successful farmer moderate swearer and a pretty good old man.

MRS. RODAH KLINNER.

is on the shady side of 70 years and enjoys good health, with a team of 25 children to call her grandma.

"OLD UNCLE" CHARLEY INGRAM

is the best preserved man for his age in the county. He is 72 years old, lively, spry and a hard worker. Fifty years ago he removed from Cahaba to Old Maplesville, this county. He has a fine memory and knows a great many remarkable happenings "away back."

WILLIAM HARPER

is now in the 70s. Forty years ago he ran a tanyard on Goose Pond creek, this county.

R. R. ADAMS,

a native of Tennessee, is 70 years old and has resided in this county since boyhood. He served in the Mexican war and now draws a pension from the United States goverment.

WASH FOSHEE

represented this county in the legislature a few years ago. He is over 80 years old, and is a substantial citizen, with prospects for twenty-five or thirty years more of life.

A. G. PATRICK

is a native of South Carolina, and has been living in this county forty years. He is a Baptist preacher, and his years number above 80.

J. A. MINOR

will be 70 years of age the 6th day of this month. He is a stirring farmer, and is as active as a cat. Upon the whole, a most remarkable man for his age.

MRS. J. A. BROWN,

a sister of Mr. Minor's, resides at Vine Hill, Autauga county. She is 85 years of age well preserved and in good heath.

MRS. AMELIA SEXTON, known all over the country as "Grandma Sexton," was born in Camden, S. C., and on the day Mr. Harrison took the presidential chair "Grandma Sexton" reached the age of 84 years. She enjoys pretty fair health, and attends to all her household affairs. She lives at Clanton, this county.

WM. VINZANT,

who died in 1887, lived in upper Autauga county. He was 108 years old, and the oldest man in that section of country.

There are many whose names I could not get. In all probability there are some living among the healthy hills of Chilton county who will "live for ever and never die."

Among the other old people of Chilton the VIEW knows of Judge Jefferson Falkner, of Mountain Creek. He was born April 12, 1810, and will be 79 years old next month. He was a member of the State Senate in 1845 from the counties of Randolph and Chambers at which time Tuskaloosa was the State capital. He is a Baptist minister of high standing in the councils of his church. He was again in the State Senate from this district from 1884 to 1888, and was the oldest member of the body. Two other men living in the same neighborhood are Joel and Samuel Dennis. The last named being about 80 years old and the former a year or two younger. Mrs. Davenport at Strasburg, is reported to be 103 years of age.

Another old land-mark of this particular locality is Squire Jesse R. Jones. His age is 76 years. He was born in Richland district, S. C., his parents moving to Alabama after the close of the war of 1812, settling in the neighborhood of Fort Claiborne, Monroe county, when there were many roving bands of hostile Indians in the county. He speaks of having to hide out on several occasions to prevent being murdered by them. He remembers in his early boyhood hearing Col. Sam Dale narrate his adventures among the red-skins around his father's fireside, and says he has seen every person who escaped alive from the Fort Mims massacre. He remembers seeing William Weatherford, the the Red Eagle, Pushmataha, the Choctaw chief, and Manack, the chief of the Creeks, several times, and speaks of Weatherford as a very fine looking specimen of manhood, showing more of the white man than of the Indian. He was in Cahaba when the seat of government was there, and saw Selma when there were but three small frame store houses in the place. He settled in Autauga in 1837 and was admitted to the bar and began to practice law in 1840 entering the Tippecanoe campaign of that year as a Whig. He canvassed this section of the State in 1844 in the interest of Henry Clay, being a leader of that party in Autauga. He now resides in Clanton.

Breezy.

Tuskaloosa Gazette.

Circulars were scattered here and there and everywhere over the city yesterday announcing that a new candidate for public favor would make its appearance on the 4th of April, in North Port. This new candidate is a weekly newspaper to be called "The West Alabama Breeze," to be edited and published by Mr. Jno. C. Lawrence who for the past several months has been the local reporter on this paper. The Gazette welcomes the Breeze and wishes it success.

The New Insanity Law.

The insanity bill drafted by Judge Somerville and introduced by our representatives in the General Assembly, passed both houses and was approved by the governor. It is believed that it will reform the whole procedure of trying insane criminals upon a basis beneficial to the public welfare.

One provision of this law requires the governor to appoint three suitable persons, two physicians and one lawyer, to constitute a "Commission of Lunacy," whose duty it shall be to examine and pass on the mental condition of criminal patients committed to the Hospital, and report to the governor whether their release will prove dangerous to the public safety. If the law is properly enforced the DISEASED will be taken care of as such, and CRIMINALS, simulating insanity will be incarcerated either in the penitentiary or in the insane asylum. They will not be turned loose on society as heretofore.—Tuskaloosa Gazette

Business Courtesy.

Business courtesy pays. Some men have an idea because "business is business," that much of the common politeness of life is to be dropped as soon as they touch their office chair, or their store door closes them in. In other words they seem to act "now look out for me I am your friend in a social way but I'll skin you alive if you have anything to do with me in a business way." It is very true that "business is business," and any man who uses the fact of any friendly social relation to advance his own ends at the expense of yours should "be fired." This is no excuse for your cold, ill-mannered behavior and boorishness. A gentleman is a gentleman inside his place of business as well as outside of it and it pays to be a gentleman in business as well as out of it.

Gems of Thought.

[Mary C. Jean in Chicago Express.]

As a nation advances in knowledge, in the same proportion it should advance in prosperty and happiness.

No society can be flourishing and happy while the greater part of the members are poor and miserable.

There can be no production of wealth in a country except by labor.

Persons who have attained to eminence in any vocation of life have followed one uniform course that of hard earnest work and application.

Real happiness lies in useful work of some kind, either of the hand or of the head, so long as over-exertion of either is avoided.

The experience of the world invariably proves that whenever and wherever the people have been most generally employed, and best compensated, that there has society been most prosperous, and increases of wealth and material development the most rapid.

Labor has a value besides that for which it can be exchanged at forced sale. It takes value from what it produces and its rewards should be a just share of its production.

There is a law of right and justice which should be applied as well as a law of supply and demand.

It is to be hoped that the law passed by the last legislature making it a misdemeanor to point an unloaded gun at a person, will do-a-way with the old chestnut of "didn't know it was loaded."

Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint.

Is it not worth the small price of 75 cents to free yourself of every symptom of these distressing complaints, if you think so call at our store and get a bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. Every bottle has a printed guarantee on it, use accordingly, and if it does you no good, it will cost you nothing. Sold by A. E. Bivings, Clanton.

O, What a Cough.

Will you heed the warning. The signal perhaps of the sure approach of that more terrible disease, Consumption Ask yourselves if you can afford, for the sake of saving 50 cents, to run the risk and do nothing for it. We know from experience that Shiloh's Cure will cure your cough. It never fails. This explains why more than a million bottles were sold the past year. It relieves croup and Whooping Cough at once. Mothers do not be without it. For lame back, side or chest, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by A. E. Bivings, Clanton.

The Great Newspaper of the South.

The AGE-HERALD, in addition to covering the field most thoroughly with their bright and newsy daily, is getting out the Great Weekly of the South. It is a mammoth 12-page paper at only $1 a year, with a ticket for every subscriber to the largest gift distribution of over $8,000 in valuable and useful articles ever offered by a newspaper. It is a paper for the farm and fireside. Its Agricultural Department is full of practical information for the farmer, while its Household Department renders it a treasure to every housewife in the land. A special feature is also made of a department for Our Little Folks.

We will furnish the WEEKLY AGE-HERALD and our paper one year for $2 and give each subscriber a ticket to the gift distribution.

Col. R. M. Williamson has moved his office into the Sarter building near the post office.

Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Herbert, of Jemison, visited friends in Clanton the past week.

Terry Frazer is up and about after his very painful accident in having a foot run over by a car.

Mrs. Lamar and her mother, of eatsville, have been visiting Mrs. O. A. Duke, of this town.

Miss Florence Williamson, a charming young lady from Montgomery, has been visiting her father in Clanton.

If you want something real nice in the way of a pair of new spring pants go to Bloom the tailor, No. North Court Street, Montgomery.

The Only Perfect Remedy

For habitual constipation, dyspepsia, and kindred ills is the famous California liquid fruit remedy Syrup of Figs. It strengthens as well as cleanses the system, it is easily taken, and perfectly harmless. For sale in 50 cents and $1 bottles. jul 18

Dr. A. E. Bivings has an attractive new advertisment in this issue of the VIEW to which the attention of his many friends and the public generally is invited.

Spring Goods.

New dress goods now on sale at low prices for cash. Shoes for spring trade now in. Groceries all the year, the present is no exception. Everything guaranteed as represented. Fair dealing and fair prices is my plan for holding trade, and my sales will prove that the people are treated well. Give me a call.

Mr. Wm. Otis, Jr., of Birmingham, representing Jas. F. Meade & Co., was in town on the 13th inst., the guest of the Messrs. Scott.

The old gin house on the Adams property was burn down Saturday night. Supposed to have been the work of an incendiary.

We are having some real Spring weather now, and before long we will be able to have some fine vegetables and fruit.

Mrs. T. G. Holt returned home last Wednesday after spending some time with relatives in Montgomery.

Read the new advertisment of Crellin & Nalls boiler and copper and sheet iron workers of Birmingham. They make a specialty of repairing saw mill machinery and guarantee good work.

"Teacher" calls upon the teachers of the county to organize a county Institute for their mutual advacement and improvement. This is a real good idea and is not a new one, for the plan has been tried successfully in many counties of the State. We commend it to the teachers.

Mr. John Garner went over into Bibb county and captured Mr. H. Bearden last week. Mr. Garner was on the bond of Bearden, who was under indictment for violating the revenue law, and failed to appear to stand trial at the last term of court. So he was hunted up by his bondsmen. He has again made bond and been released.

Mr. J. H. Daniel, formerly of this place, gives notice in these columns that he will be in Clanton on April 15th to remain a few weeks. He is now licensed as a specialist in the treatment of cancer, and makes a "no cure no pay" proposition to all so afflicted. He refers to the following parties living at Jonesboro, N. C., where he is now located: W. E. Murchison, J. H. McIver, S. H. Buchanan, Dr. E. Snipe, Prof. R. M. Brown, Geo. S. Cole, J. W. Buyman, Geo. W. Mann, George B. Caddell and R. Bryan.

Religious Notice.

EDITOR CHILTON VIEW:—Do me the kindness to announce in next week's VIEW that Rev. W. B. Crumpton, Corresponding Sec'y of the State Mission Board of the Ala. Baptist State Convention, will preach at times and places as follows:

Jemison Baptist Church, Monday March 25th, 11 A. M., and 7:15 P. M.

Clanton Baptist church, Tuesday, March 26th, 11 A. M. 7:15 P. M.

Chestnut Creek church, Wednesday March 27th, 11 A. M.

We do hope that members of the churches will give these appointments as much publicity as possible, and all turn out and greet Bro. Crumpton with full houses.

A. E. BURNS,
Pastor.

Cancer! Cancer!! Cancer!!!

All persons afflicted with this terrible disease, may now rejoice. I am coming to cure it, without any failure, unless you are dead when I arrive. I carry with me testimonials which will astonish all sufferers. Cancer can be cured and I can prove it. I make the following proposition, viz: Deposit the amount of my charges in any respectable bank, and if I do not cure you withdraw the deposit; if I cure you the same is to be paid to me. Is this not fair? I cannot believe that a cured patient can be ungrateful to his benefactor, hence the foregoing proposition. The question of cure is left with you.

Will be in Clanton on the 15th of April to remain a few weeks.

J. H. DANIEL,
Cancer Specialist.

The Birmingham Chronicle says the expression "in the soup," is a corruption of the theatrical phrase "in the supe," a very "slangy" vulgarism meaning "in the list of supernumeraries." Either phrase is a corrupton of good English and neither, we apprehend, has the sanction of good writers.

OVER THE COUNTY.

Neighborhood News Gathered by Our Correspondents.

Jumbo Jottings.

Our farmers are busy planting corn.

The ladies are fully as much interested in raising Spring chickens. We wish them much success as they will come in good time for picnics, protracted meetings, &c.

Married, at the residence of the bride's father, on the 7th inst., Mr. Mack Willis to Miss Vannie Marcus. This couple took us by surprise. We wish them good luck all the same.

Mr. Carter Willis has been quite sick for some time.

Mr. Henry Mahan met with a serious accident on Tuesday, March 5th. While in the woods near his saw mill, he was struck on the head by a falling limb, and is seriously though not fatally hurt.

Mr. James Dormerny, who lives about five miles west of this place, lost a fine horse last week. The horse was playing in the lot and fell and broke his back.

Good wishes and much success to the editor of the VIEW.

CLIFFORD.

County Institutes.

Let us have a Teachers' organization in the county. Why?

1. The law requires it of the Superintendent to hold at least two during each year. 2. The law requires a teacher to attend at least one of them. 3. They are the greatest modern help, for there each progressive teacher gives his peculiar features of success and others profit thereby.

The greatest trouble is to secure attendance by teachers. They swear when they sign their reports that they have "fulfilled the requirements of law to the best of my ability." Now let the Superintendent refuse to pay them unless they attend. The State Superintendent will sustain his actions and rule that the teacher perjured himself.

Let us have one in Clanton on the 5th and 6th of April. What say you Mr. Superintendent and Prof. Scott? Publish a program in the next issue of our obliging and valuable county paper.

TEACHER.

Jemison, Ala., March 18.

If the South flourishes under Harrison as it did under Cleveland the former will retire from office four years hence with many more Southern admirers than he had when he took the oath on inauguration. We down here grew in wealth from 1885 to 1889 as never before. In those four years this section made more progress, commercial, industrial, moral and educational than it did the whole previous twelve years. If we are let alone, undisturbed by meddling demagogues or harebrained sentimentalists, we ought to do even better in the four years that will end March 4, 1893. Will Gen. Harrison see that we are let alone? We believe he will; and expressing this belief we merely take him at his word. "I have discarded all suggestions that any peculiar policy should be applied to any section of the country," said the president in his inaugural address.

A PHYSICIAN'S WARNING!

Of all the terrible, soul affrightening curses that afflict all classes of humanity, nothing in all ages has ever approached comparison to the ravages of [illegible] ON that slow, insatiate destroyer [illegible] often just such an [illegible] affect a noble life with its poisonous taint. It strikes with destructive aim the most notable, sparing neither king nor statesman.

SCROFULA Even unto the third generation are the sins of the father made manifest. What a fearful heritage to bequeath an innocent child! Ah! the horrible ravages of this affliction!

SORES To its activity is due sore throat sore liver, sore kidneys, sore lungs, sore skin, great ulcers, internal, external and eternal unless proper treatment is applied. The best remedy is a prescription used extensively in private practice by an old Atlanta physician. It is now prepared a thousand gallons at a time, and PIMPLES is sold in large bottles at only one dollar per bottle. It is called B. B. B. or Botanic Blood Balm. Under its peculiar influence the blood poison first becomes passive, then divided, and lastly is exuded through the liver, through the kidneys, and through the pores of the skin.

It is clearly the duty of every one who suspects the least trace of syphilitic or scrofulous poison in their blood, whether recently from contagion or from inheritance, to get it out of their system thoroughly

PAIN by the use of this great remedy so that pimples, sores, aches, pains, weak kidneys and other symptoms will not be transmitted to innocent posterity.

Demand it of your druggist and take no substitute. Testimonials from those who have used it may be found in the illustrated "Book of Wonders" sent free to any address by the Blood Balm Co., Atlanta, Ga.

PISO'S CURE FOR TWENTY-FIVE CENTS
Piso's Cure for Consumption is also the best Cough Medicine. If you have a Cough without disease of the Lungs, a few doses are all you need. But if you neglect this easy means of safety, the slight Cough may become a serious matter, and several bottles will be required.
CONSUMPTION
Piso's Remedy for Catarrh gives immediate relief. Catarrhal virus is soon expelled from the system, and the diseased action of the mucous membrane is replaced by healthy secretions. The dose is small. One package contains a sufficient quantity for a long treatment.
CATARRH
A Cold in the Head is relieved by an application of Piso's remedy for Catarrh. The comfort to be got from it in this way is worth many times its cost. Easy and pleasant to use. Price, [illegible] cents. Sold by druggists or sent by mail.

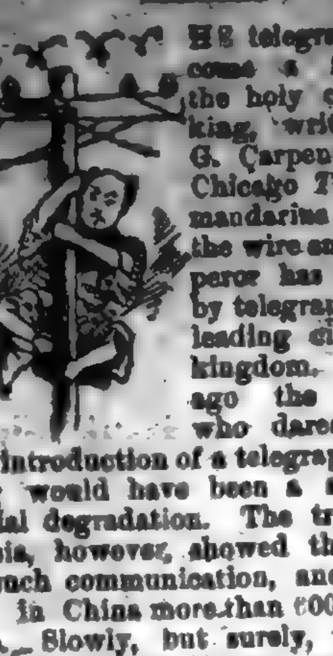
CITY OF PEKING

THE FILTHY CAPITAL OF THE GREAT CHINESE NATION.

The Most Conceited Nation on Earth—The Great Walls of Peking—Lively Scenes in the City.

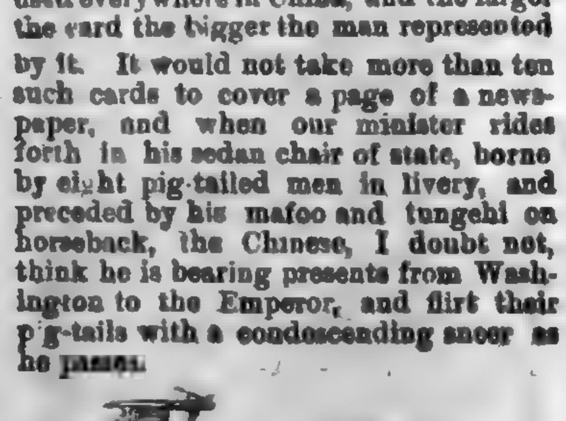


THE telegraph has become a fixture in the holy city of Peking, writes Frank G. Carpenter in the Chicago Times. The mandarins now use the wire and the Emperor has his reports by telegraph from the leading cities of the kingdom. Ten years ago the Chinaman who dared propose the introduction of a telegraph into Peking would have been a subject for official degradation. The trouble with Russia, however, showed the necessity for such communication, and there are now in China more than 6000 miles of wire. Slowly, but surely, western invention is making its way, and Li Hung Chang, the great viceroy, in a visit to Col. Denby at the American legation not long ago, said he expected to ride by railway to Peking within a year. Now the journey of ninety miles from Tien-Tsin has to be made by pony, by donkey, or by cart, or the traveler must come by boat up the winding Peiho. The pony ride requires two days, and the boat takes from three to seven. The winter mail of Peking has to be brought 700 miles through the interior by relays of ponies, and it then takes something like three weeks to get a letter from Shanghai to Peking. The Chinese at present profess to be well satisfied with this arrangement. The majority of them do not want railroads nor telegraphs, and they would, if they could, extend the walls about Peking so high that they would reach heaven itself, and effectually bar out the "son of heaven," as they call their Emperor, from all contact, direct and indirect, with foreigners.

The Chinese are the most conceited nation on the face of the earth, and they think their civilization is the highest in the world. They entitle their Emperor the ruler of the world, and the ordinary Chinaman, which title includes 999,000 of the 400,000,000 people making up their race, believes that all the world is subject to this boy of 17, who rules the nation from his palace within half a mile of where I am writing this letter. He thinks such of the American and European nations as have representatives at Peking are here solely to do honor to the Emperor; that their countries pay tribute to him, and the dirty street of Peking along which the American, German, French, Russian, English, and other legations are located, is called by the Chinese "the street of subject nations."

When it is considered how well the Chinese minister to the United States is treated at Washinton, how he is petted by the best ladies of our society, and how our statesmen throw open their houses and their arms to him, the contrast between his position and that of the American minister to China is a national humiliation. The better class of the Chinese offer no social invitations to the foreign ministers at Peking. Colonel Denby, during his four years of service in China, has never seen the inside of a Chinese gentleman's house. He has never looked into the almond eyes of the boy Emperor, nor has he set his foot inside one of his palaces. He has never had an audience with the Empress Regent through her famous gauze screen, and such calls as he has had from the ministers of foreign affairs have been those of ceremony and business. Nevertheless he has paid his social duties religiously, and yesterday he sent his card to the office of foreign affairs in honor of the Empress's birthday. Our foreign minister uses, of course, a Chinese card. It is a strip of paper four inches wide and ten inches long, and its color is of a hue so red that it would enrage the mildest bull. Upon this, in the blackest ink, is painted the large Chinese characters which represent Colonel Denby's name. Such cards are used everywhere in China, and the larger the card the bigger the man represented by it. It would not take more than ten such cards to cover a page of a newspaper, and when our minister rides forth in his sedan chair of state, borne by eight pig-tailed men in livery, and preceded by his mafoo and tungchi on horseback, the Chinese, I doubt not, think he is bearing presents from Washington to the Emperor, and flirt their pig-tails with a condescending sneer as he passes.

MINISTER DENBY'S CARD.



MONGOLIAN CAMEL.

What a wonderful city is Peking! How big and how little! How strong and how weak! It is a conglomeration—the strangest mixture of matter and mind in the world of cities. It was a city as far back as 1001 years before Christ, and it was the capital of China 1000 years after Christ was born. It was the capital of the whole Empire in A. D. carts are dragged along up to their hubs in mud and filth. The streets are the sewers, and the most degraded savage of our western plains has more regard for the exposure of his person than have these pigtailed, silk dressed, gaudy, fat, Pekingese. The streets are not lighted, and the only lanterns known are small ones of paper, which make it unsafe to move through the dirt in the night time. Personal cleanliness is at 1264, and with the exception of a short time it has been the seat of Chinese Government since the reign of Kublai Kahn. Its hair is thus gray and its skin wrinkled in its years of cityhood, but as a modern city it is still in its swaddling clothes; nay, rather it is just born and it sprawls about in all the dirt of neglected babyhood. It is the most filthy spot on this fair earth's face, and the smells of Naples, the dirt of Corea, and the slums of New York and London cannot compare with it. It knows nothing of modern city improvements. Its wide, miry, unpaved streets have no sidewalks, and the rude Chinese [illegible] as the city cleanliness, and the average Chinaman has only one [illegible] more than a million inhabitants, and these are made up of the widely diverse elements of the Chinese Empire.

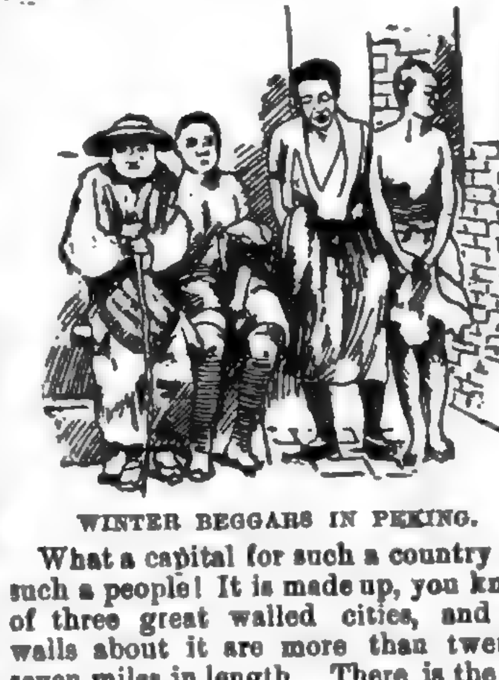
We have in America only the Chinese of Southern China, and our idea of the Chinese people is derived solely from them. Here at Peking are the Thibetans, the Mohammedans, the Tartars, and the Mongolians, and the round-faced celestial rubs his pigtail against the big hats of the Coreans as he wades along the streets. The Chinese Empire is representative, and one sees here what might be called cosmopolitan Asia. The strangest sights to me on first entrance were the nomadic Mongolians, who rode into the city on great camels dromedaries, as unlike the camels of the Egyptian desert as the fellaheen of the Nile are different from the coolies of the Yellow River. They are larger and they have two fat humps on their backs instead of one. They are covered with wool instead of hair, and this long, curly coating appears in all the various shades of tan. They come here from the cold regions of Mongolia or Siberia by the thousands, and during my visit to the Chinese wall I passed caravans, each of which numbered hundreds of these camels marching in single file led by ropes fastened to sticks thrust through the thick flesh of their noses, and bringing great loads of furs from the north for the use of the dilettant mandarins of Peking, and carrying back brick dust, tea, and coal to the Tartars and Russians. Some of them are ridden by brown-faced Mongol women, who, in coats, pantaloons, and fur caps, ride astride, and the men are clad in sheepskins with fur caps pulled well down over their fierce Tartar eyes. I see the Thibetan lamas in their gorgeous robes, and we have here a large lama temple or monastery, where these men have one of the two living Buddhas of the world. He is worshiped as a god, and when he dies another Buddha will be chosen and the great spirit will inhabit him and continue the spirual reign. Thibet, Corea, Siam, Burmah, Mongolia, Mantchooria, and parts of Afghanistan are all tributary to China, and their representatives are all here. This city is the capital of nearly one-tenth the cultivable surface of the earth, and from one-third to one-fourth of the people of the earth are governed from it and pay homage to it. The great Empire of China has a territory much larger than that of the United States, and its population is greater than that of the United States and Europe added together.

WALL OF PEKING.



WINTER BEGGARS IN PEKING.

What a capital for such a country and such a people! It is made up, you know, of three great walled cities, and the walls about it are more than twenty-seven miles in length. There is the big Tartar or Manchoo city, in the interior of which is the forbidden city inside whose walls is the home of the sacred Emperor, and where the great palaces are located. There is the Chinese city outside, where the most of the business of North China is done, and where the sights and building do not differ much from those of the narrow streets and low buildings of other Chinese cities. There are in the Tartar city the thousands of residences of the great officials of the Government, and here are the great Government departments, which look for all the world like a set of western cattle-yard stables roofed with heavy tiles, and ranged around barnyard courts which are no cleaner nor better kept than our stables themselves. From the walls the whole great city looks like an immense orchard sparsely filled with trees, which rise high enough to shut out the view of the low, one story buildings composing its houses. In one corner rises the great temple of heaven, a round-towered, pagoda-like structure, where the Emperor periodically watches the slaughter of oxen and burns them as sacrifices upon a big marble altar. In another direction you can see the walls of the forbidden city, with its many-tiled palaces shining in the sunlight, and all around standing out against the sky are the great towers which rise story above story over the gates which lead through the walls.

They are, to me, the most wonderful things I have yet seen in city architecture. Peking is said to be the finest walled city in the world. It is made up of the three cities, all of which are surrounded by walls, the greater part of which are as firm to-day as when they were built hundreds of years ago. These walls must have cost many million dollars, and, though useless now, they once made Peking a fortified city. The wall of the Tartar city is the strongest. It is as high as a city house of four stories, and its top has a width of forty feet, or nearly the width of many a city street. It is sixty feet wide at the bottom, and you could drive four wagonloads of hay along the top without crowding. It is made of large, gray bricks laid in blue mortar, and the whole has become, through age, one mass of stone. At the top the outside walls, perhaps two feet thick, rise four feet and make a fence to the pathway between them. This is flagged with stones, in the crevices of which the grass is growing, and through which here and there a tree has forced its way and grown big-trunked and long-branched amid its rocky surroundings. The space between the facings of the wall is filled with earth, and the sixteen great gates of the city have brick towers of many stories, some of which are built in galleries with port-holes, and which, over certain gates, rise to the height of 100 feet. The gates are faced with stone, and their arches are of solid granite. They are great, round holes cut through this massive wall, and within them swing heavy, wooden doors studded with many iron rivets. These are closed when the sun goes down, and are not opened again until the morning. Through these outside fences above the walk on the top of the wall are holes through which arrows might have been shot or perhaps a musket barrel pushed through. They are not large enough for cannon, and to-day there are no soldiers keeping guard along these great military highways. Here and there is a [illegible] they form the promenade for the foreign residents of the city. At each of the gates there is a third wall, which runs around it, inclosing a space of several acres and making a double fortification at this place.

The scenes about these gates are among the liveliest in China. A ceaseless stream of yellow humanity of celestials high and low, and of Asiatic four-footed beasts continuously pushes its way through them. Here goes a caravan of camels. There comes a dozen men, each pushing a Chinese wheelbarrow loaded with goods, and behind them is a Manchoo woman astride of a donkey. She has paper flowers in her hair and rouge a quarter of an inch deep upon her cheeks. Here is a half-naked beggar who howls for alms as he crowds his way through the dirty mass, and there is a Manchoo officer who canters along with his pony and does not seem to care whether he knocks down the poorer people or not. Behind him is a mandarin in a blue sedan chair, a train of fifty servants before and behind him, and a drum major leading the list with a red umbrella on a pole about twenty feet long, which he holds up in front of him, and warns the people to get out of the way for the great man who comes. Outside the gates and inside the inclosure are a thousand and one street cookshops, whose greasy food is cooking in the open air and is being eaten by greasier Chinese. There are poor men on foot and noblemen on horseback; high muckamucks in carts and coolies carrying great loads on their shoulders. It is a queer conglomeration, but it is a business one from the word go. There is no foolery about these Chinese. Life is a serious matter to them and they are working the world for all that it is worth.

THIBETAN LAMA.

One sees very little of the residences of the Chinese nobles. They live in large inclosures surrounded by walls so high that it is impossible to look over them, and entered by gates which are guarded by doorkeepers who admit only the favored few. Some of the residences contain many acres inside of these walls, and the buildings are made up of a number of one-story structures scattered here and there about the grounds. All of the foreign legations are of this nature, and the secretaries and the minister of the American legation lives in such an inclosure. The government pays between $2000 and $3000 a year for it, and America is, I am told, the only foreign nation represented at Peking which does not own its own building.

The foreign ministers have some curious duties, and their mail as to Chinese matters contain requests quite as queer as some of those made to the President of the United States. Several score of autograph fiends have been pestering Colonel Denby for autographs of the Chinese Emperor—a signature as difficult to procure as that of the angel Gabriel written with a quill from his own wings. The Chinese Emperor is quite as sacred in China and to Chinamen as Gabriel is to Christians. Other Americans want contracts from the Emperor, and they evidently suppose that China is jumping at western ideas and western brains. They put the celestial intelligence on a very low plane, indeed, and ask the most ridiculous questions as to whether if they bring their wives to China they can find suitable accommodations for them. They do not realize that the open ports of China have as good hotels and as pleasant social circles as you will find in any American city, and they evidently think that foreigners here live in mud huts, sleep on the Chinese bake-oven beds, and eat with chop-sticks.

Duels of Stupid Rams.

It may perhaps throw some light on the obscure causes of the stupidity of sheep to see them fight. To watch two rams engage in a duel, which they do in a most gentlemanly manner, as if it were as much a matter of etiquette as an engagement with swords in the environs of Paris, is better than most farces nowadays. Perhaps there are some ten or twenty rams in a yard or corral, and presently two put their heads together. Probably they are having a conversation, and in it some debatable matter crops up, for one shakes his head impatiently as if doubting the word of his interlocutor. The insulted ram looks up, advances a step or two, and they rattle their horns together. Instantly all the other gentlemen gather round as the two intending combatants march backward step by step with an admirable slowness and deliberation. They are the two knights at the ends of the lists. There is an instant's pause, and then they hurl themselves violently forward to meet forehead to forehead with a shock that ought to break their skulls. Then the solemn backward march recommences, the pause is made, and the two belligerents leap at each other once more, and the terrible thud is heard again. Sometimes they run ten courses before one turns dizzy and declines the battle, but oftener five or six blows make the thinner-skulled turn away, to be contemptuously hustled in the rear by the conqueror. Occasionally the sight of one set of duelists inspires the unoccupied lookers-on with a noble ardor, and couple after couple join in to march backward side by side and rush forward in line to meet the opposing forces. It seems to me that there is no more interest in this than in the mere farce of the display. However such a habit arose it can hardly now be advantageous to the species, and must tend to lower them in the scale of intellect, for while the thickest-skulled remain lords, those with the most room for brains often get their craniums cracked with fatal results. This may help to explain the very uncommon idiocy of domesticated sheep, just as the duello among the Australian blackfellows may throw light on the dull, thickheadedness of some of the native humans in that country. For their favorite method of dueling—at least it was that of which I heard most—is to take two clubs, and, having drawn lots in some manner for the first blow, to strike the loser on the head as he bends down with the utmost force possible. If that blow is not decisive, and it is not always so, it is the turn of the other man to strike back, and so on until a skull is cracked.—[illegible] Magazine.

NOW! IN THE SPRING OF THE YEAR.

During Winter, Nature wisely ordains that we should live on foods containing much fat, or, as they are known, hydrocarbons, for the purpose of supplying heat to the body: the chemical operation necessary to transform fat into heat is the exclusive work of the liver, and so during the time stated it is constantly congested.

With the approach of warm weather our diet changes to muscle-producing food, and the work of the liver is much lessened. In the majority of cases, however, it is ☞ unable to completely throw off the excess of bile, but remains congested, causing that ☞ lazy, tired feeling which many have in the Spring months, when the weather becomes warm.

☞ This is evidence of an unhealthy condition, and though people appreciate the necessity of an alterative at this period, the common idea is to take drastic pills and produce a cathartic effect, only to make matters ☞ worse. The liver must be unloaded, and its proper action restored before hot weather, if you wish to ☞ preserve health, and if this distinct call of nature is unheeded, serious results will occur.

☞ The blood will become loaded with bile and lithic acid, and as ☞ every drop of vital fluid passes through the kidneys to be purified, they soon break down and are unable to carry out the deadly poison. Warner's Safe Cure and Warner's Safe Pills have not only a ☞ specific action on the kidneys, but on the ☞ liver also.

☞ They thin the thickened bile so that it will pass out through its ducts, enable the glands to unload themselves, act as a solvent on all biliary acids, and in a word, ☞ fit these great organs for the season's work, ☞ preventing blood poisoning, inflammation, abscess, and all affections to which they are so liable.

☞ As you value the blessings of health, do not allow the summer to approach without giving your system a "general house-cleaning," in the manner we have indicated.

☞ "To be forewarned is to be forearmed."

Icy Facts.

If we had plenty of wheat the coming crop, we may be able to teach Russia a mild lesson as to our supremacy as a mercantile nation when we have goods to market, and we hope we will. Meanwhile, we can furnish her with the motive power to perfect her methods of marketing her vast surplus, and if we can't buy her slaves, can furnish them with clothing, as does our mother country in a world nearer the sun. O[illegible] corn trade is not dead nor yet sleepin[illegible] demonstrates possibilities of pl[illegible] handled. Railroad companies [illegible] always blessings, and foreign st[illegible] ers are frequently the better off. Eastern capital built our roads; Eastern education supplies the craftsmen who run their shops and direct their management, but the West continues to make the rates which has placed wheat, still places flour, and may next threaten to place corn in foreign ports a less tariff than covers its transportation to the seaboard. We will either wind up in Eastern Europe or Western Africa, with a wide waste between.—Baltimore, Md., Journal of Commerce.

Odd People.

The mining population at Zacatecas, as in most parts of Mexico, are a queer folk. The Zacatecanos are more industrious, more sober in their habits, and more respectful of demeanor than their brother-laborers in many of the mining towns. Their hours of labor are from 5 a. m. till 12 m. for those employed in the exhausting toil of the patios, and from 6 a. m. to 6 p. m. for the rest. The wages range from 50c per diem to $1.50, the maximum for certain skilled laborers. They live entirely on frijoles, tortillas and atole, that is to say, broken beans and the unleavened corn wafers of the country, with corn-water gruel, and their meals are two daily, at 10 a. m. and 6 p. m. Their work day garb for the patio men is cotton drawers rolled thigh high, a shirt of a peculiar sort of serge and a straw hat. The tahon and moline men wear no trousers, but a shirt of the serge aforesaid, confined at the waist by a wide sash of the same, and a straw hat. All go barefoot.

"I had 'em all," said a rubicund, happy-faced gentleman. "All what?" asked his friend. "Why, all the symptoms of malaria, viz: lame back, aching joints, sleeplessness, indigestion, dizzy fits, cold extremities, rush of blood to the head, constant fatigue, no appetite, pains in the breast after eating, night sweats, alternate chills and fevers, etc., but Brown's Iron Bitters cured me and I recommend it as being the best tonic made."

A unique attraction is monkeys, dogs, ponies, goats taking part in comedy and tragedy.

A Great Discovery.

The fact that castor-oil, as vile a medicine as was ever discovered, has so long held its own as a laxative, is because, until Hamburg Figs were discovered, no medicine could take its place. Now, however, ladies and children take Hamburg Figs, and like them. 25 cents. Dose one Fig. Mack Drug Co., N. Y.

Catarrh Cured.

A clergyman, after years of suffering from that loathsome disease, Catarrh, and vainly trying every known remedy, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Prof. J. A. Lawrence, 88 Warren St., N. Y., will receive the recipe free of charge.

A Perfect Laxative should be mild, prompt, and pleasant, with no griping or purgative effects. It should also incite the liver to action, aid digestion, and relieve the kidneys. Like nothing else, Paine's Celery Compound is a perfect laxative, and cures constipation where all other remedies fail.

"As a gentle laxative, Paine's Celery Compound is surely without a peer. I think I ought to know, since I have tried remedy after remedy for about five or six years, and have found nothing that equals it in any case of costiveness." J. B. Jackson, Teacher, Cloyd's Creek, Tenn.

"Paine's Celery Compound is prompt and pleasant. As a laxative it leaves little to be desired. I have great confidence in its merits." Albert Leonard, Associate Editor, Journal of Pedagogy, Athens, Ohio.

Good Advice.

It is a story of a very clever actress, whose husband is an actor and a great favorite with the ladies. She was jealous, but he was rather afraid of her, and she could always revenge herself with her tongue. One evening at a little supper they had been chaffing one another, and the husband said: "It's all very well, my dear; I don't mind your bullying me and pitching into me, but it was a mean trick to do to go through my pockets and read my letters. I don't think you ought to do that." She looked at him calmly, and in a drawling tone replied: "My dear, why don't you destroy your compromising letters. I always destroy mine."

Adding Insult to Injury.

It is like adding insult to injury to administer a decoction of poison oak to a sufferer from blood poison. Doctors don't do it. They know it has no real merit, and is often dangerous, yet, because Indians used it and the stuff is cheap, it is a common ingredient in remedies advertised as vegetable cures of blood diseases.

B. B. B. (Botanic Blood Balm) contains no poison oak, no mercury, no hurtful ingredient of any kind. It is strictly a professional prescription with iodide of potash as a basis, and has proven itself the quickest and safest cure for the many evil effects of bad blood, also, for strengthening, regulating and benefiting the whole general system, and as a Spring Tonic, it gives the greatest satisfaction.

L. W. Thompson, Damascus, Ga., writes: "I believe B. B. B. is the best blood purifier made. It has greatly improved my general health."

A minister writes from Miccosukee, Fla.: "I received no relief from a severe case of indigestion and dyspepsia, until I used B. B. B."

An old gentleman writes: "B. B. B. gives me new life and new strength. If there is anything that will make an old man young, it is B. B. B."

M. J. Rossman, a prominent merchant of Greensboro, Ga., writes: "I know of several cases of blood disease speedily cured by B. B. B. Two bottles cured a lady of ugly scrofulous skin sores."

James W. Lancaster, Hawkinsville, Ga., writes: "My wife was in bad health for eight years. Five doctors and as many or more different patent medicines has done her no good. Six bottles of B. B. B. has cured her."

The center of population of the U. S. is supposed to be 500 miles west of Cincinnati.

THE WORLD OUGHT TO KNOW IT.

The world ought to know what S. S. S. has done for me in the cure of a malignant Cancer, which was so bad as to be considered incurable by the physicians in Chicago, where I went to be treated. One of my neighbors sent me a copy of an advertisement in regard to Swift's Specific, and I began taking it. I got relief from the first few doses; the poison was gradually forced out of my system, and I was soon cured sound and well. It is now ten months since I quit taking S. S. ECLIPSE PLANTER

McKENZIE, Tenn., May 22, 1888.
MR. D. C. LYNCH, Laurinburg, N. C.—I have traveled for five years in Tennessee, Kentucky, Alabama, Mississippi and Arkansas; saw a great many different kinds of planters, and yours is the only one I ever saw that I thought a success. I planted two crops besides my own and every one that has seen the planter and its work pronounces it a perfect success. A large number will be sold in this section next season.
Yours truly, B. F. FATE.

Purify Your Blood

When spring approaches, it is very important that the blood should be purified, as at this season impurities which have been accumulating for months or even years, are liable to manifest themselves and seriously affect the health. Hood's Sarsaparilla is undoubtedly the best blood purifier. It expels every taint, drives out scrofulous humors, and gives to the blood the quality and tone essential to good health.

"For five years I was sick every spring, but last year began in February to take Hood's Sarsaparilla. I used five bottles and have not seen a sick day since." G. W. SLOAN, Milton, Mass.

"I think Hood's Sarsaparilla is just the medicine for women, or anyone who has bad blood." [illegible] B. BARRY, East Broad Top, Pa.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.
100 Doses One Dollar

It is true economy to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla, for "100 Doses One Dollar" is original with and true only of this popular medicine. If you wish to prove this, buy a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla and measure its contents. You will find it to hold 100 teaspoonfuls. Now read the directions, and you will find that the average dose for persons of different ages is less than a teaspoonful. This is certainly conclusive evidence of the peculiar strength and economy of Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla purified my blood, gave me strength and overcame the headache and dizziness, so that now I am able to work again. I recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to others whose blood is thin or impure, and who feel worn out or run down." LUTHER NASON, Lowell, Mass.

MAY TO BELL.

Dear Bell: I'll write you a short letter
To say I'm wonderfully better;
How much that means you ought to know,
Who saw me just one month ago—
Thin, nervous, fretful, white as chalk,
Almost too weak to breathe or talk;
Head throbbing, as if fit for breaking,
A weary, ever-present aching.

But now life seems a different thing;
I feel as glad as bird on wing!
I say, and fear no contradiction,
That Pierce's Favorite Prescription
Is grand! Why, I'd have died without it!
Ma thinks there's no mistake about it.
It's driven all my ills away!
Just come and see! Yours ever, MA[illegible]

As a powerful, invigorating tonic, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription imparts strength to the whole system. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, it is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

"Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrappers, and faithfully carried out for many years.

It Cannot Last Forever.

ive a word of comfort for you
Who on life's rugged road
Are toiling 'neath the burden
Of a heavy, hopeless load.
It will make the heart grow lighter
Whatever be your wrong,
And give you strength to bear it
If you take these words along,
And say when clouds of darkness
Around your pathway hover,
'The sun is shining just beyond,
It cannot last forever."

ust try them when you're weary
By each petty care and strife
By each little aggravation
Of your common daily life.
When angry words are rising,
That you can scarcely smother,
And everything seems "twisted up,"
And tied in knots to bother,
You'll find these words are like a knife.
Each twisted knot to sever;
Then straighten out each tangle
"It cannot last forever."

Or if some great disaster
Like a cyclone sweep your sky,
And stunned and helpless with the shock
Beneath the wreck you lie,
Remember that no storm comes
But has a clearing day;
The darkest night a morning,
An end the longest way;
Then take these words to cheer you,
You'll find them like a lever
To raise your sinking spirits up,
"It cannot last forever."

MY MOTHER'S HYMN.

BY W. H. S. ATKINSON.

What an unconscionably long time ems to have elapsed since the old days the far-away homestead in the Berkire Hills! How the years have dragged hemselves along, so that, although I ave several more birthdays to come o me (if I live) in "the twenties," seem to be already an old man, when think upon the farm and mother and he old meeting-house and all the sweet memories of the time when I was a boy and knew nothing—absolutely nothing —of sorrow and trouble and hard knocks.

Even to-day when, young as I am, I have to confess myself worn and wearied, battered, bruised and broken, scarred and seared by contact with all the roughness, the rudeness, the dirt, the grime, the sin and the heartlessness the world—even yet I bless God for halo of goodness which has followed e, in all my wanderings, from my Massachusetts home.

I was the youngest of the merry youngsters who had grown up under our family roof-tree, to youth and manhood, and was the last to break away from the comparative quiet of New England for the bustle and hurly-burly of the great west.

My two brothers were full-grown men while I was a small boy, attending our village school, and nothing could keep them at home when the gold excitement broke out in the Black Hills. After they went away my mother and father never saw them more. The next events of importance in our family were the weddings of my two sisters, following in rapid succession.

Then, more than ever, I became my mother's companion and might have remained so, perchance, to this day had not death claimed her and father for his prey within a few short weeks of each other.

Father was a good man, and I always loved, honored and respected him, but to me I think, nay, I am certain, he was never as dear as mother—and I felt this the more during the few short weeks that mother lingered after father's death.

How she liked to have me sit by her bedside and read to her—sometimes from one of Dickens' masterpieces and sometimes from her well-used Bible! How it pleased her when I would sing (as a boy, I believe I had a pleasant musical voice) one of her favorite songs or a hymn from the little brown covered hymnbook! How contented she was, on the day that she passed away, to have me place my hand in hers while she whispered her farewell words. "Give me the hymnbook, Rod," she said towards the last. I gave it to her and watched her as with much feebleness she tore from it one of the pages—worn so thin and much soiled by constant handling.

"Keep it, Rod, my boy; keep it always, and when you are a man read it and sing it—it is your mother's favorite hymn."

I have never parted with that torn scrap, and while I live it will never be bartered for the largest bank-note in existence. Sickly sentiment is it? Be it so; there has, God knows, been little enough of sentiment in my life, and I can afford to indulge this one soft feeling which I possess and treasure.

* * * * * * *

Ten years passed away. Amid a group of rough men assembled in a saloon in a small frontier town I was the central figure. I was arraigned as a culprit before a mock judge and a mock jury, undergoing a trial for stealing a man's entire outfit—coat, pants, belt, pistols and boots. I was innocent, quite innocent—but the circumstantial evidence was strong against me, and, besides, I had certainly been associating with a very "hard" set. I knew full well that the chances were greatly against a verdict of "not guilty," and I was also well aware that punishments were not graded in that locality. Sentences for all crimes were uniformly severe and execution prompt. The evidence was taken in five minutes and then the judge (a miner like the rest of us) turned to me:

"Hev you got owt to say for yesself, Rod-Kimberly?"

"Only this," said I, "I am not guilty."

"Is that all?" asked the judge, while a low rude laugh went around the room.

"We all thought you was squar', Rod," went on the judge, "and we feel like giving you a fair show. Why don't you own up, now, and throw yourself on the mercy of the court?"

"Judge," I replied, giving the man his mock title. "I am square. All you boys know me," I went on, appealing to the crowd on whose faces I failed to see much expression of sympathy. "You fellows know I don't pretend to be any great shakes, but, before God, I have never told a lie to you or anyone else and neither have I ever taken what don't belong to me. I swear I am innocent of this affair."

"Is that all?" again asked the judge.

"Yes, sir. Stay"—and I fumbled in my pockets for a scrap of paper which I kept inside my shirt. "You fellows all had mothers?"

There was a coarse, loud guffaw, while one man exclaimed:

"Thet's a reg'lar bald-headed, palsied old bluff game, jedge, an' I guess it won't wash with this gang!"

But just then a tall, broad-shouldered man—a stranger, entered the saloon. He had heard my appeal and had also heard the rough words of the miner who had last spoken.

"By the court's leave," said the new arrival, "I am an old regulator, judge, and think the young fellow ought to have his say, whatever it is."

"Good," came from the lips of the judge; go on my lad."

"I was going to say, judge, that I have a little scrap of paper—not much account, certainly, to anybody but myself; but my dead mother gave it to me and I've treasured it about ten years. It isn't scriptural, but it's mighty near it, and I couldn't say anything more solemnly than what I would say with my right hand on that page torn from my mother's hymn book. Judge, I am innocent!"

"Gentlemen of the jury, what do you say? Is the prisoner guilty or not guilty?"

"Guilty!" came from a score of throats.

Now I was not greatly afraid of death, though I would have preferred to live, and anyhow did not particularly fancy death by means of a hempen rope. I felt that I was hardly prepared to die, for I had of late given very little thought to religion and to the teaching of my earlier life. So it was not any morbid and false notion of religion, nor yet the promptings of fear which led me to make a last request of my persecutors.

"Judge," I said, "I should like you to grant me a last request before you pass sentence. On this scrap of paper there is a hymn, which I have a fancy to hear sung before you begin business. Jerry Davis, there, can play and knows all the church tunes. I'd like him to play and sing this one. And, judge, ask the boys that don't want to hear it to step outside, because I shouldn't like to see them poking fun at it."

"Boys, you hear," said the judge, and strangely enough there was absolute silence, while not a man left the room.

There was an old piano in that Western saloon, used for free-and-easys, noisy concerts and occasional dances, though it is doubtful if sacred songs had ever been played upon it during his sojourn at that settlement.

Jerry Davis took the little torn page, struck a chord or two, and then commenced to sing in his rich tenor voice:

"There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Immanuel's veins,
And sinners plunged beneath the flood
Lose all their guilty stains.

'The dying thief rejoiced to see
That fountain in his day,
And there may I, though vile as he,
Wash all my sins away."

Somehow, Jerry Davis' voice weakened and he could not finish the hymn, which must have been familiar to many a hardened man in that strange company. As for me I was sobbing violently—not so much moved by the words of the hymn as by the sadly sweet memories which it brought to me. There was absolute silence for several minutes, when the stranger who had spoken a word in my behalf walked over to the piano where Davis sat with his fingers listlessly resting on the keyboard. He took the torn leaf, examined it critically and then walked over to me. Taking my hand in his strong grip he spoke in a loud if rather husky voice.

"Judge," he said, "I feel certain there is some mistake here, and I ask for a postponement of these proceedings for further investigation. This lad is my brother; my name is Phil Kimberly. I own the Kimberly claim over the hill, and am pretty well known along the Turtle Valley."

It was indeed my oldest brother, whom I had not seen for sixteen years.

That hymn of my mother's had somehow softened the feelings of the boys, they willingly acceded to Phil's request. Two days later I was cleared of all suspicion and became for a time the most popular man in the camp.

It is almost needless to add that I now treasure with more care than ever the little scrap of paper upon which is printed, in old style type, my mother's favorite hymn.—Detroit Free Press.

A Prince's Traveling Palace.

The saloon car in which the Princes of Wales and Prince Albert Victor travelled recently to Copenhagen, in order to be present at the jubilee of the King of Denmark, gave the Danish railway officials much trouble on account of its great length. As very few no doubt have seen the Prince of Wales's continental car, we may mention that its exterior is far from attractive, being plainly painted red and white, without ornaments of any kind. The interior is, however, most comfortably and elegantly furnished. It contains a dining-room, two bedrooms, with two beds in each, and accommodation for the servants at one end of the car. Nothing is wanting to add to the comfort of the royal travelers. The car travels on six bogie wheels, and it is fitted with an ingenious arrangement of springs, preventing all noise and shaking. It is heated by coke stoves.—London Life.

Visitors to Fort Payne, the new "boom" town, find it difficult to obtain accommodation.

A mighty war is going on among the Alabama white radicals over the division of the party appointments. Mosley, Youngblood and Hardy are in the thick of the conflict. Let the war go on.

Tuskaloosa is making a strong effort to have the Alabama Midland Railroad extended from Montgomery to that city, and stands ready to contribute funds to further the project. Such extension would pass through Chilton county and cross the E. T. V. & G. road at Maplesville.

A white woman was assaulted in her own store in Birmingham last week by a negro who knocked her in the head with a piece of railroad iron and left her for dead after robbing the cash-drawer. A white boy was shot and killed without provocation by a young companion in the same store two days later. We will not attempt to keep up with crimes committed in Birmingham. We mention these two as samples and think it will be just as well for our readers to imagine what the other crimes may be.

The Montgomery Advertiser has jumped "out of the frying pan into the fire" by refusing to support the Lawson election bill before the last legislature, and afterwards proposing a legislative basis for representation in the Democratic State Convention. The passage of the Lawson election bill would have settled this question of representation satisfactorily to white and black districts alike. Something in the order of the Australian ballot system seems the only solution of our dilemma, and all this "gabber" about statistics that are ten years out of date, and the miserable logic which they lead to is lamentably out of place.

Mr. Theo. Welch, the very efficient general freight agent of the L. & N. system, is very prominently mentioned for a position on the Inter-State Commerce Commission. If the South is to get this appointment the View would like very much to see Mr. Welch the appointee. It would be difficult to find a man better qualified or more capable of performing the duties of such a position. Mr. Welch is liberal and progressive in his views on public questions. He understands the question of transportation thoroughly, and is familiar with every detail of freight tariffs. While Mr. Welch is a Republican he has never been an offensive partisan, and this is the material the president seems inclined to select his appointees from.

The Clark County Democrat contains some sensible views on a subject that is just now being too freely agitated. The agitation should have been brought on while the Legislature was in session, and when an opportunity was at hand for a growing evil to be corrected. We cannot but endorse what the Democrat says and here quote its views:

The Montgomery Dispatch is of the opinion that if the Lawson bill had become a law through the action of the late legislature the difficulties in the matter of representation would have disappeared, and the apprehensions of Gen. Pettus and many others as to the future unity of the white people of our state and the consequent harmony and predominance of the good old Democratic party been removed. We think our contemporary takes the right view of the matter, and while it is our opinion that the enactment of said bill would have caused considerable dissension in our party at first, it would soon have passed away under an intelligent and patriotic review of the influences leading to its passage, and of the imminent perils to our state which it promised so surely to remove. We now see no hope of a pacific solution of the matter about which Gen. Pettus writes so earnestly except through the patriotism, intelligence and love of justice, which characterize the Democracy of the "Black Belt." These will doubtless be appealed to with increasing earnestness during the next twelve months. But, for the present, the golden opportunity for curing this trouble and of fortifying our party against the dangers of the future has passed.

An Act to Protect the Public Against Riots.

On the last day of the last month the governor approved an act passed by the legislature entitled "An Act for the Better Prevention of Mobs, Riots and Tumults."

The first section provides that "Whenever any mob, riot or tumult occurs in any city, town or village, all persons therein who sell intoxicating liquors, arms, ammunition, dynamite, or other explosive, shall immediately close their bar-rooms, saloons, shops, or other place where any of the business above mentioned are carried on, or who sells, barters, or gives away any of the articles mentioned, after knowing, or having good reason to believe, that a riot, mob, or tumult has occurred or is then going on, shall be guilty of a high misdemeanor, and on conviction, shall forfeit his license and forever thereafter be debarred from engaging in such business and may be fined not less than five hundred dollars nor more than one thousand dollars, and may also be imprisoned for not more than one year, either or both."

Another section of this act confers the authority upon mayors of cities and intendants of towns and makes it their duty to issue proclamations requiring all places mentioned in the first section to be closed whenever any mob, riot or tumult has occurred, or there is reasonable cause to apprehend an outbreak thereof.

Section three of the act gives the authority to the commanding officer of troops called into active service upon such occasion to make and enforce an order requiring such places to be closed.

Section four prohibits the sale, giving or bartering of liquor to any officer or private while on duty.

Section five authorizes the sheriff to exercise the same authority in portions of his county that is given in section three to the mayors of cities and intendants of towns.

Birmingham has an experience which is most positive proof of the wisdom of an act of this kind.

A Strong Cause Strengthened.

EDITOR FARMER:—Saturday the 16th inst. was a happy day at good old Providence Church, situated in the northern part of the county.

It having been previously announced that the state lecturer of the Farmers' Alliance would lecture there on that day, the students of the school at that place had cleared off the vast and spacious grounds about the place, giving an air of a hearty welcome to all, and especially to Dr. Greer who at the appointed hour, 11 o'clock made his appearance, accompanied by our worthy and devoted county lecturer, the Rev. E. M. Honeycutt, who introduced the Dr. to the anxious crowd, and went into the church. A deep silence ensued, not even the yell of a baby was heard in the large audience.

The Dr. rose with all the dignity and earnestness of a great and good man whose mind and heart felt the weight and importance of the great cause he so ably represents, the Farmers' Alliance.

Long may he live to advocate the good cause.

He held that crowd as it spellbound about one hour and a half (I guess at the time) for I don't think there was a watch drawn during the time, so deeply impressed and interested, the audience, the usual cheering on similar occasions was out of place on this, deep thought, feeling, and appreciation reigned supreme.

The style of the speaker was lofty and dignified, his language chaste and captivating, his conclusion clear and logical, his allusions to enemies and opposers showed much respect and charity, his anecdotes few, but well chosen and beautifully illustrative of certain great moral truths. His arguments were driven well through and surely clinched with the proof. This man was wisely chosen by the State Alliance, and the only blunder it made, was that it did not call at least nine other men as nearly his equal as possible, to the work, for I think it is just simply impossible, for any one man to present the great truths, principles, needs and possibilities of the Alliance as Dr. Greer does to as many people so widely dispersed, in any reasonable time.

After the conclusion of the lecture, our county lecturer offered a few brief but very appropriate remarks by way of exhortation to loyalty to the cause, and to vigilance, perseverance and unyielding energy in its support.

I think his exhortation very timely. The conflict has just begun, the enemies have had such ample time to entrench, and to chose their own ground, that nothing but justice of our cause, combined and continued effort, controlled and directed by our best and wisest men aided by the power that [illegible] devils, can ever route them.

Sound and Sensible Advice.

The farmers are organizing Alliances in every beat in Alabama and find it very advantageous and beneficial in many ways. One of their number has recently published some most sensible advice which we would commend to every member of each of the organizations. The words of wisdom and sound common sense, are condensed as follows:

Cut off every unnecessary expense. Abandon whiskey and tobacco. Buy cheap goods woven at our Southern factories, and have them made at home. Sow grain more largely, wheat enough for home consumption, oats and rye in abundance, pay more attention to your pastures, kill off dogs, and raise sheep, goats, cattle, hogs, horses, mules, and do not neglect the dairy, garden and orchard, nor any other industry or economy, however small or insignificant, that will supplement your table or your purse. Patronize home industries and encourage home enterprises, sustain your school and churches, draw the bond of union and co-operation closer and closer, and do not hesitate to take hold of anything honorable to sustain your freedom and independence.

When Marriage is a Failur

The Springfield Union says marriage is a failure:

When either of the parties mar ry for money.

When the lord of creation pay more for cigars than his better ha does for hosiery, boots and bonnet

When one of the parties engag in a business that is not approve by the other.

When both parties persist in a guing over a subject upon whic they never have and never c think alike.

When neither husband nor w takes a vacation.

When the vacations are tak by one side of the house only.

When a man attempts to tell h wife what style of bonnet she mu wear.

When a man's Christmas pr ents to his wife consist of boo jacks, shirts and gloves for himse

When the watchword is "Ea for himself."

When dinner is not ready at di ner time.

When "he" snores his loude while "she" kindles the fire.

When "father" takes half of th pie and leaves the other half f the one that made it and her eig children.

When the children are given th neck and back of the chicken.

When children are obliged clamor for their rights.

When the money that should g for a book goes for what only on side of the house knows anythin about.

When there is too much [illegible] key.

When politeness, fine [illegible] and kindly attentions are rese for company or visits abroad.

Lightning Growth of Our We tern World.

Gen. W. T. Sherman, in a article entitled "Old Times i California," in the March numbe of the North American Revie says:

"California from 1848 to 188 passed through all the phases civilization which England did the past thousand years. In 18 it was an outlying Mexican Pro ince. At that time there w not a shod horse in California, n a tavern, hotel, or even a comm wagon road. We travelled by tra on horse back, sleeping by th road-side, eating jerked meat or sh with our rifles. And now Cal fornia has better markets, mo convenient appurtenances for trav el than London, Paris, or Vienn and as good stores, factories a machine shops."

State Agricultural Commissioner R. F. Kolb has written to Mr. J. M. Ponder, of Clanton, informing him that he thinks we have a good country here in Chilton and that if the people will unite and have some good literature prepared for advertising our section, he will have it distributed where it will do us some good in the way of inducing immigration into this county. Mr. Ponder approves of the Commissioner's suggestion, but says that as he is only one man he can't do much. He would be glad to see a meeting of the citizens of Clanton or of the county called for the purpose of taking some definite and satisfactory action. The village of Fort Payne Ala., has recently come into prominence as one of the growing cities of the State, due to the advertising which her citizens gave her by united action. The same can be said of Florence, in the northwestern part of the State. There are so many communities offering inducements to secure capital and immigration that those communities doing nothing in this way will not be heard of and will surely be left. It would prove a step in the right direction to act upon Mr. Ponder's and Capt. Kolb's suggestions.

To the Teachers.

CLANTON, ALA., Mar. 25, '89.

I am heartily in favor of having an institute in this county, and especially of having one in Clanton. We need an awakening up to our own interest and responsibility. We are all asleep in referance to the importance of a good school in our town. I will do all in my power for the success of the Institute. I cannot speak for our Superintendent, but know it will suit us better to have it on the 26th and 27th of April. We will as soon as possible have a program in this paper. Arrangements will be made for the accommodation of all teachers that may attend. We know all progressive teachers will attend, but we want all to come. We will try to make it pleasant as well as instructive to all. Make your arrangements so that you can come. Very respectfully,

A. J. SCOTT.

Cancer! Cancer!! Cancer!!!

All persons afflicted with this terrible disease, may now rejoice. I am coming to cure it, without any failure, unless you are dead when I arrive. I carry with me testimonials which will astonish all sufferers. Cancer can be cured and I can prove it. I make the following proposition, viz: Deposit the amount of my charges in any respectable bank, and if I do not cure you withdraw the deposit; if I cure you the same is to be paid to me. Is this not fair? I cannot believe that a cured patient can be ungrateful to his benefactor, hence the foregoing proposition. The question of cure is left with you.

Will be in Clanton on the 15th of April to remain a few weeks.

Weather Crop Bulletin.

From the State Polytechnic Institue at Auburn, Ala., for the week ending March 23d, 1889:

The temperature for the week just closed was above the average, and the warm spring like weather was invigorating to all plant and animal life. The rain since the last bulletin came in excellent season, as the land was rapidly becoming dry and hard. The ample precipitation, however, has placed the land in excellent condition and all other weather influences have been as favorable as farmers could desire. Corn planting has been vigorously pushed and other farming interests have been greatly benefited by the favorable change in the weather. Fruit trees have burst forth into blossom with astonishing suddenness and their conditron is equally as far advanced as that of last spring.

A country editor is one who reads newspapers, writes on any subject sticks type, folds papers and makes up mail, runs errands, saws wood, works in the garden, is blamed for a thousand other things that he never thought of, works hard all day, is subject to spring fever helps people into office who forget all about it afterwards, and frequently gets cheated out of his earnings. He puffs up and does more to build up a town than anybody else. the miser and fogy are benefited, yet they do not take this paper, but they will borrow it, and read it, and cuss the fool of an editor.—Alabama Enquirer.

OVER THE COUNTY.

Neighborhood News Gathered by Our Correspondents.

Providence Notes.

We live in the backwoods, but we would have our friends in the balance of the county to know that we are in the land of the living.

Our Wayback saw mill is doing a good business.

Mrs. Shaw is the happy mother of a 14 pound boy, which arrived last Friday. Brother Come filled his regular appointment here last Saturday and Sunday.

Coosa River Alliance is getting along finely.

Mr. Jonathan Calaway's sons are catching some fine fish just below Higgin's ferry. Go get your fish.

ALLRIGHT.

Maplesville Dots.

Farmers are staying so closely at home these days the merchants say there is no news from them.

The chirruping of little chickens is again heard giving the Methodist preachers visions of the good pies they may eat if the hawks do not get ahead of them.

It is supposed our new Methodist Church is indebted to Miss Ella Dudley for a beautiful lamp. It has likewise received the gift of a carpet, table cover and bible cushion from Mrs. Waterworth.

Some of the spry young men risked the breaking of their necks by putting our church bell in order.

We are glad to say our Sabbath school has "unhibernated" and we sincerely hope will keep in this condition until cold weather.

Our punctual pastor, Mr. Nobles kept his last appointment here.

Mr. Frank Kelley has again delighted his old friends with a flying visit.

Mr. Walker is now here in the interest of the Ala. Land and Immigration Co., looking after locations.

REVOLG.

Stanton Notes.

The hand of affliction has again been laid heavily upon our aged friends, Mr. and Mrs. O. P. McGee, in the death of their son Thomas, who died Thursday last in Tennessee, where he was engaged in business.

Our popular and beloved physician Dr. Little is able again to renew his practice after a dangerous and painful illness.

The Stanton Literary Society will give a dramatic performanse on the night of the 29th inst. A treat is in store and the community at large is invited.

Mr. Stephen's new residence is nearing completion and will be quite an attractive building. Our little town is growing slowly but surely.

Mr. Connel, of Selma, preached two able sermons Sunday morning and evening in our little church.

Our prayer meetings discuss a Biblical subject every Wednesday and Thursday nights, making the meetings very interesting and have brought out several orators before unknown to fame.

Our town was flooded the first of last week with agents of immigration societies. I hope they mean business.

The Stanton Institute will give a public exhibition on April 12th, at 7 o'clock p. m. Everybody invited.

It now looks like that if Mrs. Forte is removed from the Selma Post Office by President Harrison that our townsman Mr. J. R. McArthur will succeed her. Mr. McArthur is a good citizen and a very competent man for the place and while we would regret to see Mrs. Forte displaced there is no Republican we would prefer to Mr. McArthur. He was a gallant officer in the Federal army during the late war and we are not afraid of the soldiers who wore the blue in time of peace.

BLOOD AND BRAIN.

Pure blood is what oils the machinery of life, eases every movement of the body, removes stiffness of the joints, drives out pain from the nerves, stimulates the brain, protects the liver and kidneys from irritation, enables physical exertion without fatigue, prolongs life, and makes men and women perfect in health and feature. Good blood and good brain are inseparable. Aim to keep the blood pure by using the only true blood remedy, B. B. B. (Botanic Blood Balm.)

Miss S. Tomlinson, Atlanta, Ga., says:

Rheumatism "For many years I have been afflicted with rheumatism combined with severe kidney troubles, indigestion and nervous prostration. Several physicians were employed and numerous patent medicines resorted to without benefit. At last I began the use of B. B. B., and its effect was like magic. Rheumatic pains ceased, my kidneys were relieved, and my constitution improved at once."

Z. T. Hallerton, Macon, Ga., writes:

Hot Springs "Three years ago I contracted a blood poison. I applied to a physician at once, and his treatment came near killing me. I employed an old physician and then went to Kentucky. I then went to Hot Springs and remained two months, but nothing seemed to cure me permanently, although temporary relief was given me. I returned home a ruined man physically, with but little prospect of ever getting well. I was persuaded to try B. B. B., and to my utter astonishment it quickly healed every ulcer."

W. C. McGaughey, Webb City, Ark., writes:

Bad Blood "I owe the comfort of my life to a use of B. B. B. I was troubled with blood poison for five or six years, and found no relief equal to that given by this valuable remedy."

Mrs. Emma Griffiths, Unitia, Tenn., writes:

Scrofula "The doctors said my boy twelve years old had scrofula. His knees were drawn up and joints were stiff, and for three years he had been unable to walk. One bottle of B. B. B. has done him so much good he can now walk, and his pain has ceased. Its action on my boy has been pronounced most wonderful." (5)

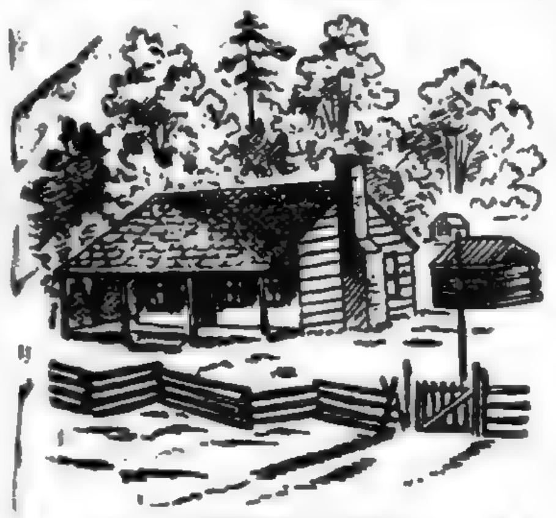
INDIAN NATION.

A GLIMPSE AT LIFE ON THE RED MAN'S RESERVATION.

Through Forests and Jungles that Swarm with Chickasaws and Seminoles—A Territorial Deputy Marshal.

A New York Sun correspondent recently accepted the invitation of Colonel Elias Boudinot, the most famous of all the Indian Territory's citizens, to drive him as far into the country as a journey by daylight would take him. Colonel Boudinot is an Indian. His father was one of the original Cherokees who were transported to the Territory in President Jackson's time, when that usually wise old patriot said they would be undisturbed while grass grew and water ran. The Colonel's mother was a New England woman. His father was massacred while the Colonel was a boy.

The Colonel ordered a team harnessed up, and drove through the town to the Poteau River. On its near bank he clapped one hand to his mouth and uttered a shrill cry. A man in shirt and trousers stepped out of the brush on the further bank, leaped into a scow that rested on the mud, and, catching hold of a rope stretched across the river, pulled the flat boat over in front of the hoofs of the Colonel's horses. They were driven on the boat, and it was pulled over into the Territory. Then began a never-to-be-forgotten ride. The soil was black bottom land between the Arkansas and Poteau, richer than we know of on the Atlantic coast. The air was laden with the odor of the wild grape and the scent of a thousand wild flowers. It was filled with flying feathers, like snowflakes, from the cottonwood trees that reared their immense trunks on every side. Scattered among these forest giants were hackberry, pecan, walnut and willow trees, and the road was embowered by them. In the blue sky over the open fields great buzzards flew in lazy circles, and among the boughs were a myriad of song-birds. The wild grape vines hung in loops as thick as a man's arm from the lowest boughs of the trees, flowers blossomed by the roadside, and the foliage and brush were wondrously green. The mud of the road was black, and the horses disturbed many of the razor-backed pigs and hogs that seemed as common and wild as the birds and the trees. Presently cultivated fields came in view. They were cotton plantations, with the young plants in close rows, and suggesting garden beans in appearance.



A CHOCTAW CABIN.

The fields were always on the left hand side, the Arkansas River on the right, gleaming through the forest and jungle between it and the road. At times the passengers saw cabins on the wooded side—the most crazy, gaping, shabby, tumble-down places imaginable. One of them had a wooden chimney, and, in spite of that, the smoke of the household fire was pouring out of the door. Each time a cabin was seen the reporter asked the Colonel who lived in it. These were his answers; or, at least, a few of them: "A squatter; poor white;" "a negro family, with a lot of children that make a dollar or two a day in the cotton picking season;" "an Irishman, farm hand for some one who leases one of these bottom farms;" "a vagrant colored family." By and by a tidy cabin, characteristic of the Arkansas country on the other side of the river was passed, then another, and then another. "Those are the houses of men who work these farms. Some lease the farms and others are hired by the lessees." Miles were passed in this way. At one time a tent was seen on the river bank. "That is a fisherman's home," said the Colonel. Again people began to be passed on the road, men and women on horseback going toward or coming from Fort Smith. They were white people.

"For goodness' sake!" we exclaimed. "are there no Indians in Indian Territory?"

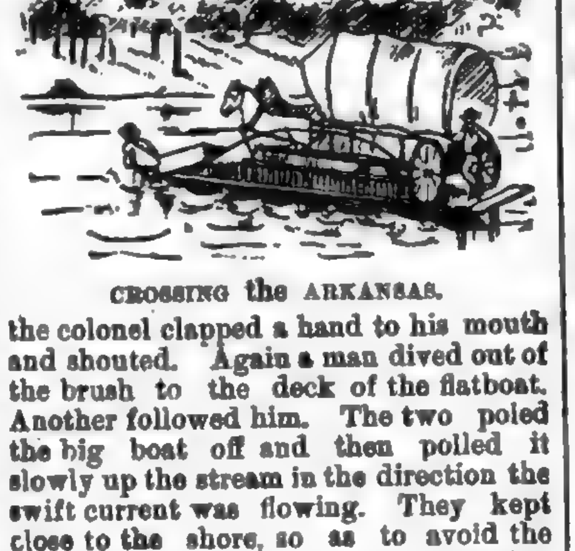
"Not so very many," the Colonel replied. "I think I see an Indian's house over there across the river. There are Indian houses every here and there, though just here this bottom land is so valuable that the whites are even more numerous than elsewhere. In the good farming country along the railroads and in the villages the conditions are about as you see them here. The whites work the Indian lands either because they have married Indians, or are lessees, or are hired hands. The pure Indians, who do not take kindly to education or labor, or intermarriage with the whites, are to be found in the interior living by themselves in the woods and up the creeks."

AN INDIAN WOMAN.

During the long ride the only Indians who were seen were some lads on horseback, and a man and woman also on horseback, the latter with her baby on her knee. The reporter would never have known these were Indians had not the Colonel told him so.

"In five out of seven cases," said the Colonel, "the educated young Indian sees that land is the basis of wealth. He notes how high it is in the States, and how prosperous are those who till it wisely in the Territory. He claims a piece, gets some stock and a nice horse or two, and marries an Indian girl who has been to school in the States, or a white girl in St. Louis, Little Rock, or some other place. The Indians have good schools, and from these schools the smartest boys and girls are sent to institutions for learning in the States. Often their parents send others. The Indian is a quick and an apt scholar. When I taught school I was amazed to and that full-breed indian boys who could not understand any English could read it by the page and entirely correctly. But the race is fading. Worthless and greedy white men see the chance the Territory offers. Here is rich land that pays no taxes to be had for the marrying of an Indian girl, and they seize the chance to get it."

One delightful adventure awaited the colonel and his charge on the journey. The Arkansas was to be crossed. It was greatly swollen and running rapidly. The bank was reached at the ferry by Colonel Watts's house. No rope could be used there because steamboats navigate the stream. The flatboat with its bent rods of iron at the side, curving over a rude fencing of narrow boards, was seen moored in the mud a quarter of a mile away on the farther shore. Again the colonel clapped a hand to his mouth and shouted. Again a man dived out of the brush to the deck of the flatboat. Another followed him. The two poled the big boat off and then polled it slowly up the stream in the direction the swift current was flowing. They kept close to the shore, so as to avoid the worst of the current. It was a blazing hot day and the labor required was excessive. Up the stream the flatboat was poled, and then it was pushed out into the current. Great oars made of whole boards were seized, and the two men rowed with desperate force and energy. They miscalculated the swiftness of the current, and landed a quarter of a mile from the colonel's team.



CROSSING THE ARKANSAS.

"What are they going to charge for all this?" the reporter asked.

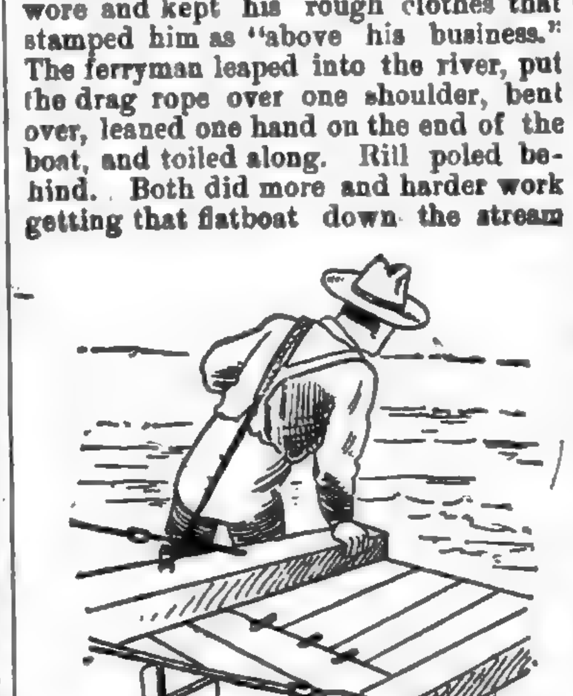
"A quarter," the colonel replied; that's the fare."

"Allow me to pay it," said the reporter. "I have never had $10 worth for a quarter, and want to realize how it feels."

"You have not seen the worst," the colonel replied. "We have not started yet, and when we get over the river we have got to come back."

The boatmen poled tediously up to the bar, in front of which the carriage was standing, and with great effort got the boat in position to receive its freight.

"Now Bill," said the chief ferryman, "let's get out and pull the boat down stream a ways till we think she'll fetch about right on the other shore." Bill did not get out. He was an odd hand, and had an air of neatness the way he wore and kept his rough clothes that stamped him as "above his business." The ferryman leaped into the river, put the drag rope over one shoulder, bent over, leaned one hand on the end of the boat, and toiled along. Bill poled behind. Both did more and harder work getting that flatboat down the stream than all the ferry hands in New York performed that day, all put together. Finally the ferryman leaped aboard and poled the boat out into the stream. Then both seized their oars, the great scow shot up the stream, and they inclined its course toward the further shore. When the landing was made the entire operation had consumed just half an hour.



ALL FOR TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

On the way back there was a sound of crunching sticks and pattering hoofs, and suddenly into full view around a turn in the road came a deputy marshal in full regalia. Great rose spurs were upon his boot heels. A belt of cartridges encircled his waist, with its holster showing the butt of a big Colt's revolver. A carbine was swung, stock upward, on one side of the horse's neck, and near it hung the coiled lariat of a cowboy. He was one of the thirty or forty deputies in the employ of the court, and was bound to make an arrest.

There are 2[illegible],000 Cherokees, 5000 Choctaws, 5000 Chickasaws, and from 2000 to 3000 Seminoles in the Territory. The Creeks number 8000 to 10,000 souls, but it is thought about half of these are negroes. Owing to prejudice among the Cherokees and Choctaws there are fewer negroes in those nations. The Territory has more railroads than any who have not studied the subject would believe. The Missouri, Kansas and Texas, part of Gould's Missouri Pacific line, runs through the northeast corner, through the Cherokee Creek, Choctaw, and part of the Chickasaw Nations. There is a fifty-mile bit of road from Fort Smith, Ark., to Moskogee in the Creek Nation, entirely traversing the Cherokee country. The Atlantic and Pacific road has got the right of way, and has made its survey straight across the Territory. A branch of the Rock Island system crosses the Territory, and a branch of the Southern Kansas route runs across the northeast corner. Diagonally across the State is projected the Dennison and Wachita Valley road, part of the 'Frisco system. This last Congress has passed bills giving the right of way to six or seven other roads.

An official who has spent the best years of his life in dealing with the crimes and the people of Indian Territory talked freely about the condition of things there. He said:

"The end of the present political condition of the Indian Territory is not far off. I look for it within ten years. The railroads, the great number of white men, and the peculiar conditions existing there are hastening a solution of the problem. I find on talking with the principal men among the Indians that they agree with me. The railroads get no grant, but the employes are allowed to settle on the right of way. The towns are full of white men without rights, and in such numbers as to be undisturbed, and to possess privileges that no one disputes.

"The manner in which the soil is worked is most peculiar, and forms one of the greatest abuses and one of the strongest agencies for the overthrow of the Indian supremacy. The fact that the land is rich and valuable, taken in conjunction with the fact that the Indian does not like to work, has naturally brought about a condition in which the whites do the work and take a large share of the profit and give the Indians the rest. Under the law no Indian can sell or rent his property, but he evades the law very easily. He turns his property over to a white man by pretending to hire him as a farm laborer. The white man, to all intents and purposes, becomes the farmer and manages the farm, and yet is registered under the Indian law as a mere farm hand hired by the land holder. The plan of renting is called the third and fourth system, the white man paying the Indian one-third of the yield of corn or a fourth of the yield of cotton.

"This evasion of the law that brings whites in to operate the farms, the intermarriage of whites among the Indians by which the whites become entitled to a full citizen's share of the land as if they were Indians, are all weakening the Indian hold upon his own territory, and tending to bring the present system to an end. What then? That is a serious and peculiar question. An evil of great magnitudes has been allowed to grow up in the Territory. Enterprising Indians, half-breeds, and whites who got full rights by marrying squaws, have done what you or I would do under the law—accumulated large holdings. Many have eight thousand to ten thousand, or even twenty thousand acres in their claims. The law says that a man belonging to any of the nations may preempt a quarter of a mile around his cabin. The enterprising man takes that quarter of a mile, goes a quarter of a mile further on and takes another claim, and so gets all the land that he could improve and till. There are large holdings of this kind all through the Five Nations, and this condition will be used to work a great injustice to the poor Indian, who has not been so greedy. When the change comes and the land is divided it will not do to give these men these thousands of acres, leaving little or none for the rest. They will not expect it. But suppose the plan that obtains when the Territory shall change this form should be the wisest one. That would be to give every Indian (or white man possessing an Indian's right by marriage) a homestead lot of 160 acres, and then to sell all the rest and create a fund, the interest of which would go to support the Indian schools, the sick and the needy. These men who have been getting rich on large farms will, when that time comes, pick out the best parts of their farms and demand pay for the improvements they have made on the rest. They will want as much money as there is in the whole fund coming from the sale of the extra lands. They will rob the poor Indian of every dollar if they can. True friends of the Indian, of which Judge Parker is one, foresee this juncture very plainly, and will make a hard fight against any such injustice being done. When the time comes they will argue that all that the present large holders will be entitled to shall be the right to choose whichever 160 acres of their present holding they prefer to keep. It will be argued that they are not entitled to a cent for the improvements they have made on the rest of the land, because it is fair to presume that they have made the improvements in order to make money, and the profits should satisfy them."

A POINTER.

As every reader of this paper knows, it has become one of the fine arts to write attractive and interesting advertisements—especially medical ones.

Now it seems to us that if, for instance, the world-wide advertisers of Warner's Safe Remedies would adopt a style whereby they could work in a startling story of, say—wolves, we believe the immense sales of their medicines could be still more largely increased. We give them the benefit of the idea at any event. Let us commence like this:

Patter! Patter! Patter!

There it is again. It is not fifty yards from where he last halted. The steps are too light for those of an Indian. A grizzly would rush upon its victim with a roar of defiance and anger. A panther would hurl himself through thirty feet of space, with a scream to unnerve the hardiest hunter. "Wolves," whispers the hunter, as a howl suddenly bursts upon his ear.

Wolves! the gaunt grizzly wolves of the foothills—thin and poor and hungry and savage—the legs tireless—the mouth full of teeth which crack the shoulder-bone of a buffalo. He can see their dark forms flitting from point to point—the patter of their feet upon the parched grass proves that he is surrounded—yet no more in danger and no more effectually surrounded than he who trifles with the symptoms of kidney disease. And you, reader, know whether you are a victim to its insidious encroachment. If your back aches, if your eyesight is failing, if your appetite is fickle, if your urine is not clear and of a pale straw color, do not hesitate on the prairie of danger, but flee to the nearest haven of safety, and resort to the only known cure for kidney and liver troubles, Warner's Safe Cure. It is a duty you owe, not only to yourself, but to your family and society at large.

Delays are dangerous.

Had the traveler not been overtaken in the night, and unarmed, the wolves would have had no terrors for him. We warn you just now, in broad daylight, before the wolves of disease sink their poisoned fangs deeply into your flesh and the night of death settles down upon you, to stop your ears to prejudice and bigotry, and to fly to safety through the means we have pointed out.

A Real Hero.

In all his service to the Confederacy, Capt. Dawson, of the News and Courier Charleston, S. C., so recently murdered by Dr. McDow, distinguished himself by his bravery and devotion to duty, however arduous and severe. In the camp and on the tented field he was genial and companionable, and in the line he was always at his post. He had no property interests at stake; he was not fighting for his own country, his native land; he was doing his duty as a liberty-loving English citizen, fighting for a cause he thought to be just, and for which he was ready to sacrifice his life. His unselfish love of the Southern cause, and noble conduct in the face of his foe, entitles him to the most unqualified praise. Capt. Dawson was one of the men who "went into the War and stayed there." He took part in the following battles: Mechanicsville, Second Manasses, Fredericksburg, Gettysburg, Chattanooga, Knoxville, Wilderness, Spottsylvania C. H., North side James River, 1864; Valley of Virginia, 1864; Five Forks. He was wounded at Mechanicsville, June 26, 1862; at Harrisonburg, Va., 1864; at Five Forks, March 31, 1865. He was taken prisoner of war near Williamsport, Va., on September 14, 1862, and released on parole in October, 1862. He surrendered at the close of the War, and was paroled in May, 1865. A more gallant exhibit it would be hard to make up. Such men live in history. In order to show what estimate was placed upon Capt. Dawson by the Confederate generals, it may not be out of place to refer to certain letters of recommendation given to him when he made application for admission into the Charleston "Survivors' Association," in 1869. These letters are signed by Commodore Pegram, Gens. Longstreet, R. H. Anderson and Fitzhugh Lee, and all agree in saying that "he was a brave soldier and an efficient officer."

Telegraphic Competition.

The Southern Atlantic Telegraph Co., of Baltimore City, has been incorporated by Joseph R. Foard, J. Glenn Pitts and George Blakistone, of Baltimore, and Edward C. Platt and Hiram Smith, of New York. The capital stock of the company is $50,000, divided into five hundred shares of $100 each, and the incorporators are named as directors for the first year. The company's articles of incorporation state that the object is the transaction of a general telegraph business in the state of Maryland, but in reality it aims far beyond this, and is national in its scope. It is said that the new company is to form a link in the Mackay-Bennett Postal Telegraph and Cable Co. system, and is for the purpose of purchasing and owning the lines of that system in Maryland, which are now only leased. The scheme embraces an amalgamation with the Southern Telegraph Co. of Virginia, the Southern Telegraph Co. of North Carolina, and the Southern Atlantic Telegraph Co., whereby lines of wire may be secured extending to New Orleans and covering the entire South and Southwest. This entire system is to be controlled by the Mackay-Bennett management, which already has the North and West well covered by its lines. The new combination promises to be a strong rival of the Western Union, and the aim is understood to be to compete with that company at every point, both in domestic and foreign telegraphy.

New Election Laws.

A bill completely changing the election laws of Arkansas has passed the Senate of that state, and is pretty certain to pass the House and become a law. It creates a board of election commissioners, comprising the governor, auditor and secretary of state, who are empowered to select three commissioners in each county, who, in turn, select judges of election in each township or precinct. Heretofore, the county judge has appointed election judges. The polls will be open form 8 A. M. until sundown. A poll-tax receipt is made a primary qualification for an otherwise legal voter. Voting is to be by secret ballot, and no one is to be allowed in the room where the election is being held except the judges, clerks and sheriff. As soon as the polls close the judges are to count the votes, and they are not to separate or to remove the box until the count is made. The penalty prescribed for stealing a ballot-box is imprisonment in State prison for not less than five nor more than fifteen years. The election judge who shall surrender any duplicate poll book showing the list of poll-tax voters within one year from a general election is subject to a fine of $500.

A Corn Palace.

The management of the Paris Exposition have set apart space free of charge for the proposed American exhibit of Indian corn. The intention is to build a handsome corn palace in which the different kinds of corn will be exhibited. American cooks in attendance will prepare corn for food in all the various ways known to the American housewife, and samples will be freely distributed to all who visit the exhibit. The promoters of this display believe it will prepare the way for a greatly increased demand for the American cereal in European markets.

Ruled Them Out.

The fact that Harding Post, G. A. R., Department of Missouri, did not attend the funeral of Comrade Frank Runge, has caused considerable comment in North St. Louis. Had the remains been interred in Calvary Cemetery, an explanation could have been found in the well-known interdiction of secret societies by some ecclesiastics of the Catholic Church. But the body was borne to a Lutheran burying ground. Mr. Runge, who had been a member of Harding Post since its organization, died. The members of the post met and resolved to attend the funeral in a body. All arrangements were completed, and pall-bearers appointed to carry the dead comrade to his last resting place, but when the commander of the post and several others called upon the family to inform them of the arrangements that had been made, they were informed that the post could not carry out its plans. Relatives of the deceased told them that the rules and regulations of the Lutheran, or Saxon Cemetery, would not allow secret societies to enter, and that if they intended to attend the funeral, they should discard their regalia. The members would not submit to this, but went through their customary ceremony at the residence, and allowed the funeral to proceed without them. One of the directors of the cemetery added: "I would not consider the G. A. R. a secret society, and cannot see why they should not be permitted to enter with their regalia to conduct the obsequies."—Globe Democrat.

The Last Sleep.

While the friends and relatives of Thomas Reynolds, of the Standard theater of New York, were assembled at his home awaiting the beginning of the funeral services of his wife, his 4-year-old little daughter Maggie tip-toed to the coffin, and bending over it, whispered: "Mamma, dere's lots of nice people here. Dit up and see them." No answer coming to her, she turned and said to the listeners: "My mamma is very sleepy, and I know she's sorry not to see you all, but I'll tell her." Then wondering that they too made no answer, and alarmed by the tears she saw on every cheek, she ran crying to her father.

How to Enjoy Life.

It is an acknowledged fact that irritation and inflammation of the mucous membrane, producing both urinary and nasal catarrh, is caused by an unhealthy condition of the blood, and that this condition of the blood will eventually undermine the strongest constitution and weaken every function of the body. Owing to the composition and ingredients of B. B. B., it is safely recommended, and has proven itself an unfailing cure for painful periods, bearing down pains, constitutional headaches, nervousness, hysteria, leucorrhoea or whites, excessive or scanty menstruation, unnatural fatigue, general weakness, indigestion, pimples, etc., so commonly characteristic of invalid ladies. Do not fail to try it, that you may be better able to enjoy life by regaining perfect health.

The deep, briny ocean."

Brown—"Fie, fie, my good friend, don't give way to your ailments so easily, and settle down into such gloom and despondency. There's no excuse for such conduct, when it's a well-known fact that all your bad feelings, terrible headaches, poor appetite, sense of fatigue, and lassitude, low-spirits, and hypochondriacal condition are due to torpid liver and consequent indigestion, and debility, which will all give way and disappear, as the dew before the morning sun, if you but make use of that world-famed anti-bilious, tonic medicine known as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. REV. DR. TALMAGE.

THE BROOKLYN DIVINE'S SUNDAY SERMON.

Subject: "The Moonlight Ride."

TEXT: "Then I went up in the night by the brook, and viewed the wall and turned back, and entered by the gate of the valley, and so returned."—Nehemiah ii., 15.

A dead city is more suggestive than a living city—past Rome than present Rome—ruins rather than newly frescoed cathedral. But the best time to visit a ruin is by moonlight. The Coliseum is far more fascinating to the traveler after sundown than before. You may stand by daylight amid the monastic ruins of Melrose Abbey, and study shafted oriel, and rosetted stone and mullion, but they throw their strongest witchery by moonlight. Some of you remember what the enchanter of Scotland said in the "Lay of the Last Minstrel:"

> Wouldst thou view fair Melrose aright,
> Go visit it by the pale moonlight.

Washington Irving describes the Andalusian moonlight upon the Alhambra ruins as amounting to an enchantment. My text presents you Jerusalem in ruins. The tower down. The gates down. The walls down. Everything down. Nehemiah on horseback, by moonlight looking upon the ruins. While he rides, there are some friends on foot going with him, for they do not want the many horses to disturb the suspicions of the people. These people do no know the secret of Nehemiah's heart, but they are going as a sort of body guard. I hear the clicking hoof of the horse on which Nehemiah rides, as he guides it this way and that, into this gate and out of that, winding through that gate amid the debris of once great Jerusalem. Now the horse comes to a dead halt at the tumbled masonry where he cannot pass. Now he shies off at the charred timbers. Now he comes along where the water under the moonlight flashes from the mouth of the brazen dragon after which the gate was named. Heavy hearted Nehemiah! Riding in and out, now by his old home desolated, now by the defaced temple, now amid the scars of the city that had gone down under battering ram and conflagration. The escorting party knows not what Nehemiah means. Is he getting crazy? Have his own personal sorrows, added to the sorrows of the nation, unbalanced his intellect? Still the midnight exploration goes on. Nehemiah on horseback rides through the fish gate, by the tower of the furnaces, by the King's pool, by the dragon well, in and out, in and out, until the midnight ride is completed, and Nehemiah dismounts from his horse, and to the amazed and confounded and incredulous body guard, declares the dead secret of his heart when he says: "Come, now, let us build Jerusalem." "What, Nehemiah, have you any money?" "No." "Have you any kingly authority?" "No." "Have you any eloquence?" "No." Yet that midnight, moonlight ride of Nehemiah resulted in the glorious rebuilding of the city of Jerusalem. The people knew not how the thing was to be done, but with great enthusiasm they cried out: "Let us rise up now and build the city." Some people laughed and said it could not be done. Some people were infuriate and offered physical violence, saying the thing should not be done. But the workmen went right on, standing on the wall, trowel in one hand sword in the other, until the work was gloriously completed. At that very time, in Greece, Xenophon was writing a history, and Plato was making philosophy, and Demosthenes was rattling his rhetorical thunder, but all of them together did not do so much for the world as this midnight, moonlight ride of praying, courageous, homesick, close-mouthed Nehemiah.

My subject first impresses me with the idea what an intense thing is church affection. Seize the bridle of that horse and stop Nehemiah. Why are you risking your life here in the night? Your horse will stumble over these ruins and fall on you. Stop this useless exposure of your life. No; Nehemiah will not stop. He at last tells us the whole story. He lets us know he was an exile in a far distant land, and he was a servant, a cup-bearer in the palace of Artaxerxes Longimanus, and one day, while he was handing the cup of wine to the King, the King said to him: "What is the matter with you? You are not sick. I know you must have some great trouble. What is the matter with you?" Then he told the King how that beloved Jerusalem was broken down; how that his father's tomb had been desecrated; how that the Temple had been dishonored and defaced; how that the walls were scattered and broken. "Well," says King Artaxerxes, "what do you want?" "Well," said the cup-bearer Nehemiah, "I want to go home. I want to fix up the grave of my father. I want to restore the beauty of the Temple. I want to rebuild the masonry of the city wall. Besides, I want passports so that I shall not be hindered in my journey. And besides that," as you will find in the context, "I want an order on the man who keeps your forest for just so much timber as I may need for the rebuilding of the city." "How long shall you be gone?" said the King. The time of absence is arranged. In hot haste this seeming adventurer comes to Jerusalem, and in my text we find him on horseback, in the midnight, riding around the ruins. It is through the spectacles of this scene that we discover the ardent attachment of Nehemiah for sacred Jerusalem, which in all ages has been the type of the church of God, our Jerusalem, which we love just as much as Nehemiah loved his Jerusalem. The fact is that you love the church of God so much that there is no spot on earth so sacred, unless it is your own fireside. The church has been to you so much comfort and illumination that there is nothing that makes you so irate as to have it talked against. If there have been times when you have been carried into captivity by sickness, you longed for the church, our holy Jerusalem, just as much as Nehemiah longed for his Jerusalem, and the first day you came out you came to the house of the Lord. When the Temple was in ruins as once was years ago, like Nehemiah, you walked around and looked at it, and in the moonlight you stood [illegible]

Skeptics and infidels may scoff at the church as an obsolete affair, as a relic of the dark ages, as a convention of goody goody people, but all the impression they have ever made on your mind against the church of God is absolutely nothing. You would make more sacrifices for it to-day than for any other institution, and if it were needful you would die in its defence. You can take the words of the kingly poet as he said: "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning." You understand in your own experience the pathos, the homesickness, the courage, the holy enthusiasm of Nehemiah in his midnight, moonlight ride around the ruins of his beloved Jerusalem.

Again, my text impresses me with the fact that before reconstruction there must be an exploration of ruins. Why was not Nehemiah asleep under the covers? Why was not his horse stabled in the midnight? Let the police of the city arrest this midnight rider out on some mischief. No. Nehemiah is going to rebuild the city, and he is making the preliminary exploration. In this gate, out that gate, east, west, north, south. All through the ruins. The ruins must be explored before the work of reconstruction can begin. The reason that so many people in this day, apparently converted, do not stay converted is because they did not first explore the ruins of their own heart. The reason that there are so many professed Christians who in this day lie and forge and steal, and commit adultery, and go to the penitentiary, is because they first do not learn the ruin of their own heart. They have not found out that "the heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked." They had an idea that they were almost right, and they built religion as a sort of extension, as an ornamental cupola. There was a superstructure of religion built on a substratum of unrepented sins. The trouble with a good deal of modern theology is that instead of building on the right foundation, it builds on the debris of an unregenerated nature. They attempt to rebuild Jerusalem before, in the midnight of conviction, they have seen the ghastliness of the ruin. They have such a poor foundation for their religion that the first northeast storm of temptation blows them down. I have no faith in a man's conversion if he is not converted in the old fashioned way—John Bunyan's way, John Wesley's way, John Calvin's way, Paul's way, Christ's way, God's way. A dentist once said to me: "Does that hurt?" Said I: "Of course it hurts. It is in your business as it is in my profession. We have to hurt before we can help." You will never understand redemption until you understand ruin. A man tells us that some one is a member of the church. It makes no impression on my mind at all. I simply want to know whether he was converted in the old-fashioned way, or whether he was converted in the new-fashioned way. If he was converted in the old fashioned way he will stand. If he was converted in the new-fashioned way he will not stand. That is all there is about it. A man comes to me to talk about religion. The first question I ask him is: "Do you feel yourself to be a sinner?" If he say: "Well I—yes," the hesitancy makes me feel that that man wants a ride on Nehemiah's horse by midnight through the ruins—in by the gate of his affections, out by the gate of his will; and before he has got through with that midnight ride he will drop the reigns on the horse's neck, and will take his right hand and smite on his heart and say: 'God be merciful to me a sinner;" and before he has stabled his horse he will take his feet out of the stirrups, and he will slide down on the ground, and he will kneel, crying: "Have mercy on me, O God, according to Thy loving kindness, according unto the multitude of Thy tender mercies; blot out my transgressions, for I acknowledge my transgressions and my sins are ever before Thee." Ah, my friends, you see this is not a complimentary gospel. That is what makes some people so mad. It comes to a man of a million dollars and impenitent in his sins and says: "You're a pauper." It comes to a woman of fairest cheek who has never repented, and says: "You're a sinner." It comes to a man priding himself on his independence and says: "You're bound hand and foot by the devil." It comes to our entire race and says: "You're a ruin, a ghastly ruin, an illimitable ruin." Satan sometimes says to me: "Why do you preach that truth? Why don't you preach a gospel with no repentance in it? Why don't you flatter men's hearts so that you make them feel all right? Why don't you preach a humanitarian gospel with no repentance in it, saying nothing about the ruin, talking all the time about redemption?" I say: "Get thee behind me, Satan." I would rather lead five souls the right way than twenty thousand the wrong way. The redemption of the gospel is a perfect farce if there is no ruin. "The whole need not a physician, but they that are sick." "If any one, though he be an angel from heaven, preach by any other gospel than this," says the apostle, "let him be accursed." There must be the midnight ride over the ruins before Jerusalem can be built. There must be the clicking of the hoofs before there can be the ringing of the trowels.

Again. My subject gives me a specimen of busy and triumphant sadness. If there was any man in the world who had a right to mope and give up everything as lost, it was Nehemiah. You say: "He was a cup-bearer in the palace of Shushan, and it was a grand place." So it was. The hall of that palace was two hundred feet square, and the roof hovered over thirty-six marble pillars, each pillar sixty feet high; and the intense blue of the sky, and the deep green of the forest foliage, and the white of the driven snow, all hung trembling in the upholstery. But, my friends, you know very well that fine architecture will not put down homesickness. Yet Nehemiah did not give up. Then when you see him going among those desolated streets, and by those dismantled towers, and by the torn up grave of his father, you would suppose that he would have been disheartened, and that he would have dismounted from his horse and gone to his room and said: "Woe is me! My father's grave is torn up. The Temple is dishonored. The walls are broken down. I have no money with which to rebuild. I wish I had never been born. I wish I were dead." Not so says Nehemiah. Although he had a grief so intense that it excited the commentary of his King, yet that [illegible] Nehemiah rouses himself up to rebuild the city. He gets his [illegible] of absence. He gets his passports. He hastens away to Jerusalem. By night on horseback he rides through the ruins. [illegible] ferocious opposition. He arouses the piety and patriotism of the people, and in less than two months, namely, in fifty-two days, Jerusalem was rebuilt. That's what I call busy and triumphant sadness.

My friends, the whole temptation is with you, when you have trouble, to do just the opposite to the behavior of Nehemiah, and that is to give up. You say: "I have lost my child and can never smile again." You say: "I have lost my property, and I never can repair my fortunes." You say: "I have fallen into sin, and I never can start again for a new life." If Satan can make you form that resolution, and make you keep it, he has ruined you. Trouble is not sent to crush you, but to arouse you, to animate you, to propel you. The blacksmith does not thrust the iron into the forge and then blow away with the bellows, and then bring the hot iron out on the anvil and beat with stroke after stroke to ruin the iron, but to prepare it for a better use. Oh, that the Lord God of Nehemiah would rouse up all broken-hearted people to rebuild. Whipped, betrayed, shipwrecked, imprisoned Paul went right on. The Italian martyr Algerius sits in his dungeon writing a letter, and he dates it "From the delectable orchard of the Leonine prison." That is what I call triumphant sadness. I knew a mother who buried her baby on Friday and on Sabbath appeared in the house of God and said: "Give me a class; give me a Sabbath school class. I have no child now left me, and I would like to have a class of little children. Give me real poor children. Give me a class off the back street." That, I say, is beautiful. That is triumphant sadness. At 3 o'clock this afternoon, in a beautiful parlor in Philadelphia—a parlor pictured and statuetted—there will be from ten to twenty destitute children of the street. It has been so every Sabbath afternoon at 3 o'clock for many years. Those destitute children receive religious instruction, concluding with cakes and sandwiches. How do I know that that has been going on for many years? I knew it in this way.

That was the first home in Philadelphia where I was called to comfort a great sorrow. They had a splendid boy and he had been drowned at Long Branch. The father and mother almost idolized the boy, and the sob and shriek of that father and mother as they hung over the coffin resound in my ears to-day. There seemed to be no use of praying, for when I knelt down to pray, the outcry in the room drowned out all the pray. But the Lord comforted that sorrow. They did not forget their trouble. If you should go on the snowiest winter afternoon into Laurel Hill you would find a monument with the word "Walter" inscribed upon it, and a wreath of fresh flowers around the name. I think there has not been an hour all these years, winter or summer, when there was not a wreath of fresh flowers around Walter's name. But the Christian mother who sends those flowers there, having no child left, Sabbath afternoons others ten or twenty of the lost ones of the street. That is beautiful. That is what I call busy and triumphant sadness. Here is a man who has lost his property. He does not go to hard drinking. He does not destroy his own life. He comes and says: "Harness me for Christian work. My money's gone. I have no treasures on earth. I want treasures in heaven. I have a voice and a heart to serve God." You say that that man has failed. He has not failed—he has triumphed. Oh, I wish I could persuade all the people who have any kind of trouble never to give up. I wish they would look at the midnight rider of the text, and that the four hoofs of that beast on which Nehemiah rode might out to pieces all your discouragements and hardships and trials. Give up! Who is going to give up, when on the bosom of God he can have all his troubles hushed? Give up! Never think of giving up. Are you borne down with poverty? A little child was found holding her dead mother's hand in the darkness of a tenement house, and some one coming in, the little girl looked up, while holding her dead mother's hand, and said: "Oh, I do wish that God had made more light for poor folks." My dear, God will be your light, God will be your shelter, God will be your home. Are you borne down with the bereavements of life? Is the house lonely now that the child is gone? Do not give up. Think of what the old sexton said when the minister asked him why he put so much care on the little graves in the cemetery—so much more care than on the larger graves, and the old sexton said: "Sir, you know that 'of such is the kingdom of heaven,' and I think the Saviour is pleased when He sees so much white clover growing around these little graves." But when the minister pressed the old sexton for a more satisfactory answer, the old sexton said: "Sir, about these larger graves, I don't know who are the Lord's saints and who are not; but you know, sir, it is clean different with the bairns." Oh, if you have had keen, tender, indescribable sorrow, that comes from the loss of a child, do not give up. The old sexton was right. It is all well with the bairns. Or, if you have sinned, if you have sinned grievously—sinned until you have been cast out by the church, sinned until you have been cast out by society, do not give up. Perhaps there may be in this house one that could truthfully utter the lamentation of another:

> Once I was pure as the snow, but I fell—
> Fell like a snowflake, from heaven to hell—
> Fell, to be trampled as filth in the street—
> Fell to be scoffed at, spit on and beat;
> Praying, cursing, wishing to die,
> Selling my soul to whoever would buy,
> Dealing in shame for a morsel of bread,
> Hating the living and fearing the dead.

Do not give up. One like unto the Son of God comes to you to-day, saying: "Go and sin no more," while he cries out to your assailants: "Let him that is without sin cast the first stone at her." Oh! there is no reason why any one in this house, by reason of any trouble or sin, should give up. Are you a foreigner, and in a strange land? Nehemiah was an exile. Are you penniless? Nehemiah was poor. Are you homesick? Nehemiah was homesick. Are you broken-hearted? Nehemiah was broken-hearted. But just see him in the text, riding along the sacrileged grave of his father, and by the dragon well, and through the fish gate, and by the King's pool, in and out, in and out, the moonlight falling on the broken masonry, which throws a long shadow at which the horse shies, and at the same time that moonlight kindling up the features of this man till you see not only the mark of sad [illegible], but the courage, the hope, the [illegible] of your sins and out of your sorrow, and I put you against the warm heart of Christ. "The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms."

The Only Colored Congressman.

The successor of Congressman F. M. Simmons, of the Second North Carolina District, is H. P. Cheatham, who will be a conspicuous member by reason of the fact that he will be the only colored man in Congress. He was born near the town of Henderson, North Carolina, thirty-two years ago. He is a graduate of Shaw University, of Raleigh, which institution conferred on him the degree of A. M. Immediately after graduating he was chosen Superintendent of the Colored State Normal School at Plymouth, North Carolina, where he remained until 1885, when, with little or no opposition, he was elected to the office of Register of Deeds of Vance County. He performed the responsible duties of this position with very general satisfaction up to his election to Congress in November last. He has read law, and would have obtained his license but for the duties of his office interfering. The Congressman-elect is a bright mulatto of good address. He is an effective stump-speaker, and is very popular with his race, while enjoying the friendship of many white people in his district. He is very ambitious to do something toward elevating his race, and he will be pretty sure to be heard from when the new Congress assembles.—Harper's Weekly.

HON. H. P. CHEATHAM.

Hats of the Coreans.

The most distinctively characteristic part of the ordinary Corean dress is the peculiar gauze hat. It is made of bamboo, silk and horse hair, all of shiny blackness. The stiff brim is some five or six inches wide, from which the crown rises eight or ten inches, with a smaller circumference at the top than at the base. These hats are almost without weight or protection except against the sun's glare. They are held on by black ribbons or strings of amber beads, as the case may be, while a band of open-work silk about the brow holds the hair in a neat knot on top of the head. Custom is law in Corea, and, like many others, their custom of wearing hats is founded on a tradition to the effect that once conspiracies were very frequent, to prevent which an edict was issued compelling all men to wear large earthenware hats of the size and shape of the umbrella hat now worn by the man in mourning. Thus it was impossible for more than four persons to get close enough to converse readily, as the hats were also to be worn in the house, and even whispering would have to be so loud that detectives could easily ascertain the purport of their conversation. Whether this law was repealed or not is not stated, but little by little the people began to infringe upon it by decreasing the shape and weight of their hats, till they eventually got down to the light bird-cage affair of the present day, than which a lighter hat could not well be constructed.

An Old Dynasty.

Just one hundred years before Columbus discovered America, generations before Shakespeare was born, more than two hundred years before Luther stirred up Germany with his preaching, a hundred years before the first Bible was printed, when all England was sleeping on straw, and when pins had yet to be known, the present dynasty of Corea sat upon its imperial throne and governed its cream-faced, almond-eyed subjects.

The blood that flows in the veins of Li Hi, the present King of Corea, is the same continuous royal stream which has flowed over the Corean throne since 1392. During that time twenty-nine kings have reigned and the power of each has been more despotic than that of the Czar of Russia. The royal blood has not weakened in the flowing, and his Majesty of to-day has the best qualities of his ancestors and is one of the most progressive of Asiatic rulers [illegible]

CHINESE TRAITS.

OBSERVATIONS OF AN AMERICAN CORRESPONDENT.

Barbarous Punishment of Criminals—Wretched Beggars—The Six Great Boards of Government—Chinese Civil Service.

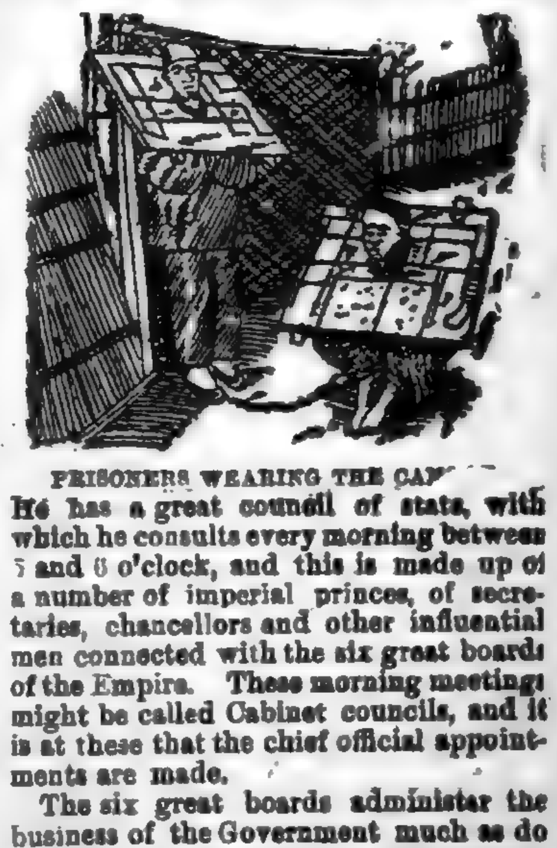
THE crime notes of the Peking Gazette, the official paper of China, says Frank G. Carpenter, are numerous and the horrors of purgatory may be read in the lines fixing the punishment. The sentences where the criminals are to be sliced to death are many. Strangling is common and decapitation is an easy method of taking off. The bastinado and flogging are found in nearly every issue, and I see that corrupt officials are often degraded from their ranks. In a country where ancestral worship prevails, the most terrible crime is the killing of parents, and parricides are, in China, invariably sliced. The punishment of slicing to death means the cutting off of one member at a time. Finger by finger, ear by ear, toe by toe, and the legs by inches, until the criminal at last dies under the torture. Here is a decree of such a punishment which shows that the insanity dodge does not prevail in China, and that the insane murderer gets the same deserts as the sane one. The decree was published on the 16th of last July, and the crime occurred in the province where I write this letter. I copy the decree verbatim. The article is headed "A Parricide by a Maniac."

On the 27th of last September I see that a murderer who killed a rival through jealousy was sentenced to be strangled and that the woman in the case was flogged with one hundred blows for loose living.

It is almost impossible to conceive that such cruelties exist in this latter part of the nineteenth century, but they do exist here in full force, and the Board of Punishments of Peking passes upon such sentences daily. Even the most ordinary punishments of China are horrible to us, and the torture of the cangue can hardly be appreciated. During this cold day I was sitting on one of the narrow streets near the Tartar wall, a Chinaman with a board four feet square so fastened about his neck that he had just room to turn his head through the hole in the centre. His hands were tied and his bare feet were bound by a chain. His queue was unkempt and black bristles two inches long had grown up all over his unshaved head. Beside him stood another man with a similar board about his neck, and the two were chained together. Upon these boards were pasted bills containing Chinese characters showing that they had committed some petty offense and were doomed to wear these boards for weeks. The boards were so fixed that they could not feed themselves, and they shivered and howled as the cold winds from the Mongolian Mountains came through their ragged clothes. I snapped my camera upon them and took their photographs, but I cannot photograph the heart-sickening sight in pen and ink.

One's feelings are severely worked upon by the poverty and cruelties of China. I have seen beggars who shivered and howled for alms, covered by nothing more than a strip of loosely woven coffee-sacking, and every time I go on the wide street which runs toward the palace I am pursued by a half-naked boy without arms. He holds up his bare stumps of shoulders at me and keeps pace with my donkey until I threw him some cash. Whether he was born as he is I do not know, but I am told it is not an uncommon thing for parents and others to mutilate children in order that they may be used as beggars. Beggars sometimes cut themselves, and there is a priest here who goes around begging with an iron skewer stuck through his cheek. He moves this about so as to keep the cheek continually sore, and goes along with a brass basin which he pushes into your face as he asks for alms. He has a keen eye to business, too, and he would not allow himself to be photographed for less than six Mexican dollars. He forms a horrible sight, and one gladly gives to get rid of him.

Speaking of the Board of Punishments, this board has the control of all the punishments of the Empire, and it might be called the Judicial Department of the Emperor's Cabinet. The Emperor is an absolute monarch. His word is the word of God to the Chinese, and he does as he pleases. He has, however, his Cabinet, and this great Empire has its Government organization even as have the other nations of the world. It has its civil service, founded largely upon literary culture, and the literary graduates here rank higher than the military here. The Emperor has his grand secretaries, [illegible]



PRISONERS WEARING THE CAN[illegible]

He has a great council of state, with which he consults every morning between 5 and 6 o'clock, and this is made up of a number of imperial princes, of secretaries, chancellors and other influential men connected with the six great boards of the Empire. These morning meetings might be called Cabinet councils, and it is at these that the chief official appointments are made.

The six great boards administer the business of the Government much as do our great departments at Washington. Each has two Presidents, four Vice-Presidents, and a number of clerks and directors. The best of the officers are equally divided between the Manchus and the Chinese, for it must be remembered that the Manchus, or Tartars, are practically the governing class of China, and that a Tartar Emperor has sat on the throne for hundreds of years.

These six boards are the Treasury Department, the Board of the Civil Office, the Board of Rites and Ceremonies, the Board of War, the Board of Punishments and the Board of Works, which might be called the Interior Department. It is the Treasury Department which takes charge of the Government funds, which makes out the list of girls eligible for the imperial harem, and which has charge of the revenues. I visited this great department of these 400,000,000 of people recently. It looked more like a barnyard than a Government office, and Colonel Denby, our American Minister to Peking, and myself had to step carefully to keep our feet clean as we walked within the inclosure. Just outside there was a pool of muddy water covering the entire street, and we walked close to the side of the building to keep from slipping in.

I found slimy pools in the court of the Board of Public Works, and the Board of Rites and Ceremonies, looks as though it might have been shaped out of odd pieces from Noah's ark. This Board superintends the worshipping of gods and it supplies the foods for banquets and sacrifices. Here, however, cleanliness is not next to godliness, for every surrounding is that of dirt and filth. I could not get into the Board of Punishments, though Mr. Cheshire, the Chinese Secretary of our Legation, who talks Chinese like a native and who knows the people thoroughly, went with me and tried to persuade the keepers. In none of the departments was I able to get at the clerks, or to see much of their mode of working. There is no doubt, however, that the Government is thoroughly organized, and that it keeps good track of the doings of this great nation. As to how honestly it does so is a question which I shall discuss in the future.

There is one branch, however, which does not exist in any of our Governments, and that is the censorate. There are censors everywhere in China. These keep their eyes upon the various officials and they report whether they do their work well or badly. They have the right to reprove every one from the Emperor to the cooly, and though the Emperor can degrade them they often criticise his actions. They pass their comments upon the eunuchs of the palace, and only a few weeks ago a favorite eunuch of the Empress dowager had his head cut off for putting on too many airs and for improper acts while on a trip away from the capital. If one Chinaman wrongs another he can appeal to the censor, and the censor will take his case and see that he is righted. They act thus as spies upon the officials, and the spy system of China extends to its custom house offices and to every part of its Government.

great boards of the Government, and there are a number of subordinate boards in addition to the ones above mentioned. The civil service of China would furnish the material for a large book in its description. It is estimated that about two million persons are examined every year in China and that only two per cent. of these pass. The candidates for office are of all ages, but of only one sex—the male. Women have no chance in China. The candidates among the men range in years from sixteen to eighty. Instances have occurred of father, son and grandson appearing at the same examination for the same degrees. The man who fails honorably in an examination has the right to enter for the next examination and try again.

Examination halls exist in every province of the Chinese Empire, and the hall at Canton covers over sixteen acres and has more than 8000 cells, in each of which a student is penned while he writes his examination essay. It is necessary to pass three examinations before one can get a high place under the Government. The first is held in the district in which the student lives, and if he gets this degree the graduate is not subject to corporal punishment for ordinary offenses, and he has the chance, I think, at minor offices. This might be called the degree of bachelor of arts. The examination for the second degree is held at the provincial capital, and from four to eight thousand and upward appear at each examination. At one such examination held not long since the average age of the students was thirty. Sixteen per cent. were over forty. One student was sixty-two and another eighty-three.

Supposing the student passes this examination, he has then the right to enter the great examinations at Peking, where, if successful, he will get an appointment for office. There is still a higher examination, which makes him one of the members of Hanlin College, and this rank is the highest literary rank in the Empire. Li Hung Chang is a Hanlin, and so are many of the other high officials. I visited this college the other day. It is as dirty and barn-like as are the other Government departments, and is hardly worth a description.

The great examination hall at Peking covers, I judge, at least twenty acres, and 17,000 students were examined in it a few weeks ago. The number passed was, I think, about two hundred, and there were forty deaths during the three days' test. The students were all examined as to their clothes and persons to see whether they had any notes concealed upon them, and such as were found guilty were prohibited from future examinations and were punished by the cangue in the same way as for stealing. Their fathers and tutors were also punished. I visited these halls to-day. They are not what would be called halls in America, and they look more like a stock-yard than anything else. Take a level twenty-acre field and build within it long rows of narrow pen-like cells. Your material is of brick and the walls between the cells are thick. The roofs are of heavy tile and the cells have no windows and are open at the front. They are not as high as your head and they are not more than five feet deep nor more than four feet wide. In the walls at distances of two and three feet from the floor are ledges, in the tops of which boards are put to form seat and table, and the whole is so arranged that when the scholar is in he cannot get out. He is furnished here with pen, ink and paper, and here he sits for three days and three nights and writes his essay and answers certain questions. The examination is on the Confucian philosophy, on the repetition of passages from the Chinese classics and on agriculture, war, poetry and finance. Only lately mathematics and some of our sciences have been added to this, and it is a curious fact that at the recent examination the highest grade in mathematics was taken by a youth from the far west province of China. The boy had studied his way through mathematical science by books alone, and he distanced the men of the colleges.

It is impossible to appreciate the severity of these examinations. The misplacing of a character, a blot upon the manuscript or the slightest mistake will impair the whole paper and render the examination void. A student at the last test who had done very well up to the last day then became very tired and fell asleep. His candle was overturned and his papers burned up. He was so disappointed by the accident that he killed himself before the examination was over, and, as is the custom [illegible] for dead students at such times, his body was dragged through a hole in the walls and handed over to his friends for burial.

The Edwardsville Standard has a "Good Conscience" column, in which the names of parties who have paid their subscription appear in bold type.

The Eufaula Cotton Mills sold 200 bales of its shirtings last week to a Chicago party. The management is having no trouble in disposing of all it can make, 45,000 yards a week.

The diabolism of the Birmingham Age-Herald in publishing as an April fool hoax that the triple murderer, R. R. Hawes, had escaped from the Jefferson county jail, is past the limited conception of the average country newspaper. From expressions heard it will cause the paper to lose some patronage in this locality.

There is no mistaking the fact that the passage of any election law, framed on the Australian plan, would act as a stupendous incentive to more and better schools in the South.

The more we dwell upon the principles of the bill, the stronger we are inclined that it is the coming plan.—Coosa Advocate.

A newspaper, if it has any brains conscience and muscle back of it must continually decide between doing its duty and injuring its pocket. In any position but that of an editor the public is able to separate the individual home from the collective citizen. But if the editor does not please them it's his pocket they aim at. Thus it is that newspapers learn who their friends are. The man who reads a newspaper and admires it all the year around, yet gives his business support to some other concern whose principles he detests, is not a friend of the former paper. Admiration alone will not run a newspaper. Sooner or later such admirers will find that the object of their affections has become wedded to other ways that they do not admire—in other words a newspaper is compelled, in order to live, to seek the friendship of those who are not so platonic in their love, but unite that practical esteem with sentiment that binds mutual admiration in other professions. There are too many men who expect an editor to slave in defense of their pet notions and hobbies; advocate their views against the strongest opposition, and coolly withhold the business support by which alone a newspaper can live. Talk about a paper having a public duty to perform and an editor having to labor for his principles is cheap when others stand back, and, while extending a lukewarm neutrality with one hand, are filling their pockets with the other hand as a result of the editor's labor for his principles, which they admire but do not support.—Exchange.

Miscegenation.

In a recent issue of your paper as well as the Atlanta Constitution, appeared a sermon of the celebrated Dr. Talmage, of Brooklyn, N. Y., from the words: "And hath made of one blood all nations," Acts 17:26, that enunciated sentiments which ought not to pass unchallenged in this latitude, and this is written to enter a protest against the publication by Southern newspapers of such sermons, and their introduction thereby into the sanctuary of our homes and families. From the eminence of its author, and the almost countless auditory whom he addresses through the pulpit and press every week, the subject assumes an importance worthy of more than a passing notice, and occasions surprise that no public man or newspaper in our midst, so far as has come to my knowledge, has lifted up a single voice of disapproval or warning; and yet as I understand it the odious doctrine of miscegenation is boldly announced and advocated. That no injustice may be done his language is quoted, "This land is the chemical labratory where foreign bloods are to be inextricably mixed up, and race prejudices and race antipathies are to perish, and this sermon is an axe by which I hope to help kill them." Again, "This is the land where, by the mingling of bloods the race prejudice is to get its [illegible] blow." Now that we may ascertain what races he proposes to intermingle, and thus do away with all prejudices, let him testify, "God is the father of the human race; He has at least five sons, a North American, a South American, a European, an Asiatic and an AFRICAN." And finally he says, "I must confess there was a time when I entertained race prejudice, but thanks to God that prejudice is gone, and if I sat in Church, and on one side of me there was a BLACK MAN, and on the other side of me was an Indian, and before me was a Chinaman, and behind me was a Turk, I would be as happy as I am now, standing in the presence of this brilliant audience, and I am as happy now as I can be and live. The sooner we get this corpse of race prejudice buried, the healthier will be our American atmosphere; let each one fetch a spade, and let us dig its grave clear on down deeper and deeper until we get as far down as the center of the earth, and half way to China, but no farther lest it poison those living on the other side of the earth; then into this grave let down the accursed carcass of race prejudice and throw on it all the mean things that have ever been said and written between Jew and Gentile, between Turk and Russian, between English and French, between Mongolian and anti-Mongolian, between BLACK and white, and put up over that grave for a tombstone, some scorched and jagged trunk of scoriæ, spit out by some volcanic eruption and chisel on it for epitaph, "Here lies the carcass of one who cursed the world, aged six thousand years; departed this life for perdition from whence it came. No peace to its ashes."

From our standpoint can any doctrine than the foregoing, advocated by this Reverend Divine, be more odious, more prolific of consequences alike destructive to our civilization, our society and our religion? Can anything be more "earthly, sensual, devilish," and what confidence is to be placed in the sincerity of a man advocating these views, unless he practically exemplifies them in his own person or family by seeking an alliance with the beloved black man whose praise he chants, and drinks from the chalice he would commend to his neighbor's lips?

"Alas, the rarity,
Of Christian charity,
Under the sun,"

But how must our miscegenating Northern theorists laugh in their sleeves to witness our press, "the palladium of our rights and liberties," scattering broadcast this hideous doctrine throughout the South, without one word of reprobation.

Good School Houses.

The importance of having good school houses is overlooked in almost every community, yes, even by almost every person in the county. A comfortable well ventilated, well lighted, and arranged school house is a necessity in any community. You may say "I went to school in a log hut and sat on a puncheon." Well so did I, but how much did we learn? After I had gone ten months, (and could spell in three letters when I began) they allowed me a first reader as a reward for my rapid progress. If I had not studied at home while lying on the floor before a "pine knot" fire my advancement would not have been half so rapid. A child now with the best advantages which can be given him in our first grade village schools is farther advanced at twelve than we were at eighteen. A child begins school now without knowing his letters and in ten months reads through the fourth reader, writes a legible hand, talks gramatically, and knows more about Geography than one of our public men who contends that the world is flat.

WELL VENTILATED

The subject of Physiology and Hygiene is receiving great attention in our schools, and through it you can find all the arguments necessary to convince any one of the advisability of ventilation. I have not space to dwell on the arguments or even to mention them.

WELL LIGHTED.

To prevent an over strain on the eyes, and thus doing them an injury. Numbers of our educated men and women have defective eyes on account of the insufficient amount of light in their school rooms when they were young. We should prize children's eyes too highly to injure them for the small price of a few windows.

WELL ARRANGED

No teacher can have order or interest the two essentials to success in a disarranged house. Order is heaven's first law. It is the teacher's only method of discipline. As we adopt ourselves to our surroundings a well ordered house, is the main pre-requisite. Any reasonable amount invested by a community to erect a comfortable school building is a grand investment and will never cease in influence as long as time shall last. A log cabin, an old dwelling, or some other old out house badly ventilated, worse lighted and worse arranged is a direct injury to your children, and true index to an unprogressive community without a live, energetic citizen in it, not even the teacher. Let us have more and better school houses then we shall have better teachers and schools.

Miss Edna Wilson is attending school at Pleasant Grove Academy.

In reply to "Teacher" will say that the Superintendent of Education has been interviewed in regard to Institutes. He says that the 6th of April will not be a suitable day as the teachers are to be paid on that day, and he could not possibly give the Institute the attention it would demand, The Superintendent says that he will have a Teacher's organization in the near future. Time and place will be known to all who read the valuable colums of the VIEW and those teachers who do not read the VIEW but ought, will be informed by postal.

The VIEW is a rich treat for us in the Valley

We ever welcome it. Success to it.

Stanton Notes.

The most novel idea of the season originated in the brain of a young painter just 36 years of age by the name of Thompson who was employed to paint the church in which the Methodist and Presbyterian worship. He painted the blinds on one side blue and the other side brown and when asked why he did so, replied that he wanted to represent both churches and that the blue was the Presbyterian color and the brown the Mehodist. Can you Mr. Editor enlighten us by giving us the emblem of these colors.

The Theatrical performance given by the Stanton Literary Society was a perfect success. The Rough Diamond and Sense Versus Sentiment were rendered by the young amateurs so well that it is the universal sentiment that it be repeated.

Mr. L. H. Montgomery of the firm of Montgomery & Norris visited our town to-day.

Mrs Secoe, of New York, sister of our chief Mr. Coe is visiting her brother, accompanied by two fine looking Northern boys.

The Principal of the Stanton Institute most heartily endorses Bro. Scott's call for a Teachers County Institute to be held some time this Spring, say at Clanton and will cordially co-operate and suggests that the Teachers meet at Clanton Saturday 6th inst., and decide on a day and a program.

We had a most welcome rain yesterday and all nature seems to smile this beautiful Spring morning. With the birds and flowers and this beautiful weather to remind us that old winter is gone how happy we should be.

Patience and Perseverance.

Patience is a great possession. No person ever accomplished much who lacked it. When your plans, your hopes, seem all likely to fail don't give up. "All things come to those that wait." It is a fine thing to have the persistence that tires some people out. When the world finds that you have your own way that rebuffs, obstacles, and even disappointments make no difference you will be pretty apt to succeed. "Patience and perseverance conquer all things." Sir Isaac Newton worked twenty years on one problem. Palissy, the potter endured years of disappointment, poverty and ill-luck, but he kept at the purpose of his life and finally won. John Knox endured the torture of the galley ship, but he conquered. It takes fine heroism; it takes a wonderful "staying quality" to succeed under such circumstances. Teach the boys and girls the great need of both patience and perseverance. Show them what patience is by your own life. Show them too how to persevere and how to succeed in life. The most successful people in this or any other country are those who have persevered in respective callings and obtained the long sought prize.

Weather Crop Bulletin.

Precipitation has occurred at all stations except one, but the fall was not heavy. This rain was greatly needed for all crops, and especially for mellowing the ground for the reception of seed.

The farmers are in good spirits and planting is progressing freely. Corn planting has about been completed and cotton seed is being rapidly placed in the soil. Rain however is needed in most sections to keep the ground in a moist condition for the germination of the seed.

Fruits of all kinds are pushing forth buds and the light frost of 26th and 27th seems to have done but little if any damage to the young fruit buds.

From time to time the VIEW will publish the laws passed by the last Legislature that may be of interest to the people of the county. One or more will be published at a time.

Messrs J. M. Brown & Co. have located in this place for the purpose of renovating feathers and appear to be doing a good bussiness. If some folks could see the worms and trash which are removed from the beds they would have all their feather beds renovated. When once put through the renovater all impurities are taken out.

Mr. P. D. Wilson, formerly of Clanton, is now behind the counter at the large dry goods store of D. A. Childs & Co., Birmingham. P. D. is one of the all around jam-up salesmen who never lets you get away without buying something, and with that end in view he will be pleased to have his friends in this section call on him when in the city.

A private meeting of citizens was held on Friday night for the purpose of taking some action in the matter of advertising our town and county with a view of inducing immigration. The only business attended to by this meeting was in the appointment of a committee to take the matter under consideration and report at a meeting to be held to-morrow night. We trust that much good may result.

A correspondent makes a very wholesome and timely objection to one of Dr. Talmage's recent sermons, which was published in the VIEW as well as in many other papers throughout the country. This sermon was one which we had not found time heretofore to read. We have since found it to deserve every whit of the denunciation which our correspondent gives it, as it teaches miscegenation. Hereafter Talmage's sermons will have to be read in some other paper than the VIEW, after this issue, for we agree with our correspondent that nothing can be more "earthly, sensual, devilish," than the preaching of miscegenation. The sermon crept into the press all over the country unnoticed until after its publication, and at least the Southern press should retaliate by refusing to publish another one of these sermons.

Mr. James McDonald is another old citizen of Chilton county who deserves mention. He is 77 years of age was born in Pickens county, South Carolina, and was married in Georgia. He moved to Eufaula, Ala., in 1837. A tribe of Indians that were much feared by white settlers were carried west by the government the same year. He followed the trade of a carpenter and built the first house in Glenville, Barbour county in 1838. Ten years later he built the first house in Opelika, Ala., then a new railroad town. Afterwards he moved to Greenville and from that point to Clanton. He now lives at Strasburg. His wife who is still living, is 71 years of age, and he says they have lived together 51 years and have never quareled, which probably accounts for their living so long. Mr. McDonald's eye-sight and hearing are failing, but he is still able to get about.

Cancer! Cancer!! Cancer!!!

All persons afflicted with this terrible disease, may now rejoice. I am coming to cure it, without any failure, unless you are dead when I arrive. I carry with me testimonials which will astonish all sufferers. Cancer can be cured and I can prove it. I make the following proposition, viz: Deposit the amount of my charges in any respectable bank, and if I do not cure you withdraw the deposit; if I cure you the same is to be paid to me. Is this not fair? I cannot believe that a cured patient can be ungrateful to his benefactor, hence the foregoing proposition. The question of cure is left with you.

Will be in Clanton on the 15th of April to remain a few weeks.

J. H. DANIEL,
Cancer Specialist.

Mr. John Garner informs us that it is Mr. Shep. Allen, of Jemison, who is building the new store in Clanton, and Mr. J. P. Allen informs us that he is not connected with the enterprise.

The board of revenue on last Monday issued an order for the building of a bridge over Mulberry Creek near Dixie to cost $360. The board has so far neglected to furnish a report of receipts and disbursements of county funds during the last half of 1888 for publication, which will account for non-appearance of the report in these columns. We learn from one of the board that the matter has not been intentionally neglected and that a report will be published as soon as one is properly prepared.

Mr. Ackley, the new night operator at the depot, is an old printer and newspaper man. He says he was forced to quit the business because he like to went crazy by continually worrying over where the next meal was to come from. He wanted to know if the large iron safe in which the VIEW keeps its rusty nickles was a coal bin. He says he can't imagine what other use we have for it. He ran a paper in Colorado with a preacher, but the preacher didn't want any "devil" or "hell-box" in the office and it busted the paper, and he then went to railroading in order to get square meals.

Important to Road Apportioners and Overseers.

By request of Judge H. J. Callen we publish the following sections of the old and new codes for the information of parties interested.

OLD CODE.

Sec. 1633. Apportioners and overseers hold their office for two years, and at the expiration of their term are entitled if such term is served out to a certificate of exemption from road service for the next two years.

NEW CODE.

Sec. 1399. Apportioners and overseers must not serve longer than two years from the day of appointment.

RESOLUTIONS

Relative to the Death of Rev. J. C. Hand, Adopted by Jemison Lodge, No. 411 A. F. and A. M., March 22, 1889.

WHEREAS, Almighty God in his infinite wisdom, has seen fit to call from the walks of life our beloved brother, Rev. James Cornelius Hand, that he might put off this mortality for an immortality beyond the grave, therefore, be it Resolved 1st. That in the death of our departed brother, our loss is his gain, and we bow in submission to that divine summons which called him from among us and his spirit back to the God who gave it.

Resolved 2d. That in the death of Bro. Hand, we lose a good citizen, a kind friend, a true mason, a faithful minister of the Gospel, and above all an exemplary follower of the meek and lowly Jesus. For 45 long years the best energies of his life were expended in proclaiming the Gospel of Peace and Love to dying men and women.

Resolved 3d, That his unswerving faith in God, his pure life and his devotion to the principles of Free Masonry should inspire us to higher holier effort to attain that divine life which will surely gain us admission into that celestial Lodge above where the Supreme Architect of the Universe presides.

Resolved 4th. That we tender to his bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy, and point them one and all to the lowly Nazarene, whom our departed brother loved and served, and who is able to comfort the afflicted, heal the broken-hearted, and lead them to Pisgah's heights, from whence they can "look out far beyond the dark portals of the tomb, and be gladdened with a vision of the beautiful gates ajar"! and more—He will give them an abundant entrance into that everlasting habitation—that house not made with hands, eternal in the Heavens.

Resolved 5th. That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes; that a copy be furnished our departed brother's family; that a copy be sent each to the CHILTON VIEW and Alabama Baptist for publication; that a page of the records of the proceedings of this Lodge be set apart sacred to the memory of our beloved brother, Rev. James Cornelius Hand; and that the usual badge of mourning be worn by the craft for thirty days.

Another Kerosine Accident.

Dr. Roberts, an old gentleman of Northport, happened to a painful accident Thursday night, or rather early Friday morning. He was building a fire and was using kerosine. He struck a match and after lighting the fire threw the match down and it caught the can of kerosine which exploded, burning him very severely. This is another added to the list of fearful accidents occuring from the careless use of kerosine. It is a most dangerous material to tamper with and why will not the people let it alone.—Tuskaloosa Times.

UNAPPRECIATIVE.

How little we are apt to appreciate that which we possess. The hardy wood-sawyer envies the wealth of his employer. The rich man envies the health and strength of his poor neighbor.

"Our mind and our time we employ
In longing for what we have not,
Unmindful of what we enjoy."

How much better if all exerted themselves to obtain their heart's longing. If poor in purse seek to gain wealth by industrious and frugal habits. If poor in health seek to use those remedies which are the best and truest medicines. Among remedies sold by druggists none is the equal of Botanic Blood Balm for curing the ills of flesh and blood.

Felix Foster, Atlanta, Ga., says: "I took B. B. B., for several foul ulcers, which had given me much trouble and would not heal from a use of other remedies. Within ten days my health improved, and before I had used three bottles every sore was entirely healed. It improved my appetite and gave me flesh and strength."

ULCERS

Hudson Clark, Camden, Ark., says: "I was afflicted with the severest form of rheumatism for about 12 years, and suffered extreme misery during all that while. I also had catarrh so bad it almost stopped my breathing through my nose. My flesh in some places looked as if it had been charred or scalded. My back was so lame I could hardly stand. I tried nearly everything but found no relief until I tried B. B. B. I used several bottles and am now as sound and well as any man in Arkansas."

BAD BLOOD

CATARRH

RHEUMATISM

J. W. Messer, Howell's Cross Roads, Cherokee County, Ga., writes: I was afflicted with chronic sores nine years, and had tried many medicines and they did me no good. I then tried B. B. B., and eight bottles cured me sound and well."

HERBINE

After ten years exclusive sale, can now be obtained of all Druggists and Dealers in Medicines. It CURES—take notice—not simply helps but CURES LIVER COMPLAINT, Biliousness and Dyspepsia.

Is a strictly vegetable preparation and will CURE MALARIA, and all MALARIAL troubles.

Dr. S. H. Wise, of Boston, Ky. says: "Have practiced medicine 15 years, and find no equal to HERBINE as a Liver Regulator."

Dr. W. A. Baker, of Madison, Fla., says: "A bottle of HERBINE is worth more than $5.00 worth of Quinine in any family."

Acting on the Liver in a different way from any other medicine; it is a positive cure for Chronic Constipation and is cheaper than Pills.

Its peculiar composition is such, that we guarantee to cure any case of Chills and Fever or Billous Fever with one bottle.

It costs but 75 cents and each bottle contains over 40 average doses, making the cost less than two cents a dose. Would you ask for cheaper medicine? It is not a cure-all. But will cure any Liver, Bilious or Malarial Complaint. Manufactured by

PISO'S CURE FOR
TWENTY-FIVE CENTS
Piso's Cure for Consumption is also the best Cough Medicine.
If you have a Cough without disease of the Lungs, a few doses are all you need. But if you neglect this easy means of safety, the slight Cough may become a serious matter, and several bottles will be required.
CONSUMPTION
Piso's Remedy for Catarrh gives immediate relief. Catarrhal virus is soon expelled from the system, and the diseased action of the mucous membrane is replaced by healthy secretions.
The dose is small. One package contains a sufficient quantity for a long treatment.
CATARRH
A Cold in the Head is relieved by an application of Piso's remedy for Catarrh. The comfort to be got from it in this way is worth many times its cost.
Easy and pleasant to use.
Price, 50 cents. Sold by druggists or sent by mail.

WOMAN'S WORLD.

PLEASANT LITERATURE FOR FEMININE READERS.

Woman's Work!

Darning little stockings for restless little feet,
Washing little faces to keep them clean and sweet,
Hearing Bible lessons, teaching catechism,
Praying for salvation from heresy and schism—
Woman's work!

Letting fall her own tears where only God can see,
Wiping off another's with tender sympathy;
Learning by experience, teaching by example,
Striving for the gateway, golden, pearly, ample—
Woman's work!

Lastly cometh silence, a day of deep repose,
Her locks are smoothly braided, upon her breast a rose,
Lashes resting gently upon a marble cheek,
A look of blessed peace upon the forehead meek.

A fresh grave in the valley, tears, bitter sobs, regret;
One more solemn lesson, that life may not forget;
The face forever hidden, the race forever run,
Dust to dust a voice saith,
And woman's work is done!

Kentucky's Girl Preacher.

Mary Semons, ten years of age, has delivered four sermons in Falmouth, Ky., and is becoming quite popular as a preacher. She has a good voice and splendid delivery for one so young. Mary is the daughter of a fairly well-to-do farmer, who lives about four miles from this place. From infancy she displayed unusual brightness. About eight months ago she joined the Baptist church here and said that the Lord had called upon her to preach. She first addressed a small congregation at her father's house, and succeeded so well that she spoke next in a church near by. The little girl soon had a reputation throughout this and neighboring counties. After several months in the country she preached here, and her success was greater than it was in the rural districts. Under her ministry several persons joined the church. Many allege that her sermons cannot be surpassed by any grown man or woman. Mary is rather small for her years, has sharp features, black eyes and hair and is very intelligent. She will continue her services here for several weeks and then she will go to the larger Kentucky towns.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A Smart Blind Deaf-Mute Girl.

A special from Boston contains the following interesting facts concerning the little phenomenal deaf, dumb and blind Alabama girl:

Helen Kellar, the nine-year-old deaf, dumb and blind Southern girl, who has been in attendance for the past year at the Perkins Institution for the Blind, in this city, has made such a marvelous progress as to have attracted the attention of men of science the world over. She carries on conversation by means of the mysterious finger alphabet, telegraphing her thoughts and desires with wonderful facility and clearness. Her desire for knowledge is intense, and she never seems to grow weary of asking questions and receiving replies that might increase her stock of knowledge. She has learned very quickly to do beadwork, to knit stockings and to model in clay, and though eighteen months ago she knew absolutely no form of language except the natural and savage one of signs, now, through the instruction of Miss Sullivan, she can correctly use and spell 2500 words by actual record. Her letters, written in the square hand peculiar to the blind are marvels of neatness and correct orthography.

"Perhaps one of the strongest proofs of Helen's intelligence and command of language," said Mrs. Hall, "lies in the fact that, when talking with her, one forgets to make choice of easy words. There is not the slightest need of limiting the number of one's syllables lest she should not understand one's discourse. She is always anxious to know the height of any person who is mentioned in the conversation, and at rising from her seat holds out her hand that any one may take it and place it at the proper distance from the ground. She did not know what an 'inch' was, and took great delight in having her teacher inform her by means of bits of paper the length of that measure, and the fact that twelve of them made a 'foot,' an assertion that for a time she confounded with the length of her own flesh and bone foot. The child has a surprisingly powerful memory, learning, for instance, the names and spelling of the different States of the Union at a sitting, and acquiring even a knowedge of a number of words in the Greek, French and German languages. No serious attempt has been made to teach Helen any foreign languages; but that she has the linguistic talent strongly developed is clearly shown by her phenommally rapid acquisition of the English tongue."

Fashion Notes.

The long veil grows in favor.

White is the wear alike for youth and age.

Flower garnitures are again in high favor for low-necked evening gowns.

The favorite wrap of the season is the long cloak with long, loose sleeves over another pair that fit the arm.

Parisians now wear the hair in bunches of curls low on the back of the head, but only for the theatre or opera.

Violet and rosy heliotrope colors are in vogue, newly imported shades in these colors being very delicate and pretty.

London not only allows, but approves of gowns of the brightest green, combined with pink or fine faint yellow.

A very fashionable red for street dresses is called Bordeaux. It is like pourpre and garance, and is a very deep shade.

Roses and poppies entirely without leaves are the favorite flowers for trimming tulle or gauze or lisse evening dresses.

Black is used as a garniture upon costumes of all the rich, dark winter colors, braiding passementerie jet, velvet applique gimps, fur, watered silk and fringes all being utilized.

Ripe cherry is the latest addition to the list of red shades. It is bright, yet soft, and combines very effectively with cream tints. As yet it can be procured only in the choicest of silks.

The most elaborate dress designs for evening are wrought in the faintest tones of yellow, green, pink, blue, white and cream, in fine contrast to which are the brilliant poppy reds and soft black.

Turbans and toques for children, made of the same material as the dress and surrounded by a band of fur, have two or three quills to match thrust carelessly through the fold of cloth on one side.

To the full, short-waisted empire dresses are attached small puffed sleeves standing high on either shoulder, or sometimes long silk gloves reach to the shoulder and are slashed over puffs of silk, which [illegible] the long sleeve.

Feeding a Big City.

The business of producing and providing food for mankind furnishes a livelihood to a majority of the race. Generals in command of armies of 20,000 or 50,000 men have been brought to ignominious defeat and flight for the lack of power to supply them with food; and yet a population of two and one-half million people in and around New York is supplied with food every day and for every meal from all parts of the world. Ten thousand head of cattle are slaughtered every week to provide New York with beef, and that is not more than one-half the beef that is consumed there. Some of the beef comes in on foot; the rest in refrigerator cars from the West. Swine are brought in dressed; but sheep are all killed in the city. The greater part of the fresh fish supply of the city comes in refrigerator cars from Boston and Gloucester; the rest comes to the markets in fishing-boats. Enough fish is kept ahead in the cold storehouses to last the city two or three weeks. The vegetables come from almost everywhere. Lettuce is mainly brought from near Boston, where one firm ships $100,000 worth of it each year. Enormous amounts of celery come from Kalamazoo, Mich. The South supplies the early vegetables, and some of them come from Florida. They come on refrigerator cars, and because they can be safely shipped and easily kept they no longer command fabulous prices. But the bulk of the green vegetable business is still done in the old way by farmers who come in from their places five to thirty and more miles away and sell their produce from their wagons. Some of them start in the afternoon and drive all night, often sleeping on their wagons and only waking when their trained horses have brought them to the ferries at 1 and 2 o'clock at night. The Gansevoort market is the only place where they are allowed to expose their "truck" for sale in the city, and there it is sold to dealers. In summer time as many as 3000 wagons a day are driven in. The cattle on a thousand hills daily contribute the milk that New York consumes the next day. The farmer gets from one and one-half to two and one-half cents a quart for it and the consumer pays 8 and 10. The difference is divided among the railroads, commission merchants and peddlers, the latter getting several cents a quart. One of the curious things of the provision business is that eggs laid in Holland and Germany get to New York in less time than from some Western States and are actually cheaper than fresh eggs laid in this country, the reason being that they are rated as "limed eggs."—Good Housekeeping.

From Grave to Gay.

A cluster of ten graves attracts the eye of every one who visits the graveyard at Griffin.

These graves and the legend above them awaken an irresistible sense of humor. At the heads of the five larger graves stand plain marble slabs, each being simply floriated and bearing the name and age of "My wife." The five little graves have small slabs of the same design, each bearing the name of a child.

One husband has buried here his five wives, and one father his five children. By the side of each mother sleeps her child, and one husband and father buried them all.

He said the reason he had the same kind of tombstone placed over them was his strict sense of impartiality. He had loved each alike, and no one wife more than the other. No later Rachel had supplanted Leah; and he did not wish to show any partiality in the matter of their graves.

The slabs are so arranged that the first is that over the first wife, then comes the headstone of the little child grave; then the second wife and the second little child. So that reading them in proper order you get the following legend and moral:

"My wife Mary, aged 25."
"Little Simeon."

"My wife Jane, aged 31."
"Little Georgia."

"My wife Anne, aged 27."
"Little Birdie."

"My wife Maria, aged 28."
"Little Ruth."

"My wife Betsy, aged 30."
"Little Hope."

He has buried the "little hope" he had, but he was still a marrying man, and after being "consoled" he began inquiring among the neighbors "if they knew of a desirable woman who wanted to marry."—Atlanta (Ga.) Journal.

Snake and Hawks in Combat.

Some time ago Bert Coverston, a well-known resident of Barnesville, Kan., witnessed an interesting fight between a blue racer and a hawk. He saw two hawks apparently fighting in a field, and approached them without difficulty. With a pole he killed them, and, upon turning one of them over, noticed the head of the snake sticking out from the hawk's wing. Upon investigation he found that the snake had wound itself about the hawk's neck, and was choking it to death. The other hawk was attacking the blue racer in attempts to release his mate. The hawks were big fellows and the snake of medium size. If left alone it would have, undoubtedly, killed one of the birds.

Microscopic examination of emmensite, the new explosive, tends to confirm the fact that it is a chemical compound and not a mere mixture.

A French scientist holds that the human race has greatly diminished in size since the creation of man, and gives the height of Adam as 128 feet and Eve as 118.

Lead stoppers to soda water siphons, ginger beer bottles, etc., are condemned by medical authorities. Block tin only should be used in contact with carbonated waters.

Among the heaviest locomotives ever built are those recently put on its mountain division by the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad. Their actual weight in working order is 153,040 pounds, and 13?,340 pounds is on the drivers. They have a tractive force of 271 pounds per pound average pressure to the cylinder. Their cylinders are 22 inches in diameter by 28 inches stroke; driving wheels, 50 inches diameter; boiler, 6 feet in diameter and 13 feet 6 inches long over tube sheets. The tubes are 270 in number, and 2¼ inches in diameter. The fire box is over 11 feet long inside by 42 inches wide, and is placed above the frames, but not above the wheels. The heating surface in the fire box is 183 square feet, and the total heating surface 2345 square feet. The engine is designed to burn anthracite, but not like the Wootten engines, buckwheat or refuse coal.

New Chemical Discoveries.

It will be a long time before the farmer finds himself supplanted by the chemical laboratory in the production of such commodities as sugar, tea, alcohol, drugs and dye stuffs, though sanguine chemists tell us that the recent triumphs of their science indicate the probability that these and other articles will some day be profitably produced from purely inorganic materials. Synthetic chemistry, or the forming of compounds by recombinations of chemical elements, is making steady progress, and has already affected agriculture, says the London Tit Bits.

Attention was recently called to the fact that the cultivation of madder has been almost destroyed by the chemical discovery that its identical coloring matter can be cheaply procured from coal tar. The production of indigo is also threatened by an artificial production which the chemists have discovered. A while ago it was found the cinchona tree could be profitably planted in India, and a fine new field of industry was believed to have opened for the farmers of that country.

Scores of chemists, however, have been at work upon the synthesis of quinine, and their researches have advanced so far that the prediction is now confidently made that the manufacture of the principle of quinine will soon be a commercial success, and that cinchona planting will become a thing of the past. These commercial reproductions of the valuable principles inherent in natural products are often easier to handle and utilize than the products from which they have hitherto been derived, and thus the tendency of manufactures is to substitute artificial for natural sources of supply.

The problem of sugar making from inorganic materials has engaged some chemists for a number of years. The synthesis of glucose by Fischer and Tafel is said to promise an ample supply of this commodity without the aid of grapes or starch. Two years ago some German chemists announced that they had produced saccharose, the equivalent of cane sugar, by passing an electric current through a mixture of starch, sulphuric acid and water. Nothing has yet been heard of the commercial value of this new product, and there is no reason to think it will prove a dangerous rival to the sweets we derive from the cane and the beet.

Some sugar growers, however, have been prophesying for years that something would happen to ruin the sugar industry, and their alarm receives a fresh impetus at every new discovery like that of Remsen's saccharine, an exceedingly sweet article produced from coal tar. The day may come when processes of sugar making by the use of inorganic materials will seriously affect the sugar planter, but there is no reason as yet to believe that his industry will soon be imperiled.

The Shamrock.

The emblem of Ireland is not known by its flower, but by its leaves. The tradition runs that St. Patrick, when preaching in Ireland, gathered the leaves of this plant, which contains three lobes, or leaves, and thus illustrates the Holy Trinity. Bentham, in his British Flora, says that oxalis acetocella or wood sorrel, is the original shamrock, having pale pink, or nearly white flowers. This is quite plentiful in the woods, and in a climate like Ireland, easy enough to obtain on the seventeenth of March, the day that all Irishmen like to have a few sprigs for their button-hole, or on the cap or bonnet. Others contended that the original plant is a clover, and the common white or Dutch clover is the plant that at present, at least, is the commonly-accepted plant, called shamrock. There are varieties of this plant that have larger leaves than the common clover; one with dark-brown, the other with purplish leaves, with a [illegible] to each leaf. This [illegible]

OLD HUTCH'S SECRET.

B. H. Hutchinson, better known as Old Hutch, astonished the world by the manner in which he manipulated the Chicago wheat market—making, 'tis said, the enormous sum of $5,000,000, on his wheat deals, in less than a month. Eccentric; possessed of little education, his success seemed marvelous!

His friends and those who know him best are not surprised.

A prominent resident broker of Chicago, who knows him well, tersely sums up Hutchison in these words: "What he knows, he knows well, and that's Old Hutch's secret."

We once heard a prominent stock operator, speaking of Jay Gould, remark: "He knew a year ago what the balance of us are just finding out. Gould knows his business thoroughly and we don't, else we, too, would be Goulds."

A noted manufacturer of certain medicinal remedies has achieved a world-wide reputation simply because he possesses a thorough knowledge of his business.

Enterprising and progressive, he was not disposed to rest content with the introduction of the only genuine remedy for the prevention and cure of all kidney and liver disorders, the name and character of Warner's Safe Cure being familiarly known in every household throughout the entire civilized world—but he concluded to further benefit the world and revive some old fashioned remedies which have, for a period been lost.

Re-discovered, they are the oldest, the newest and the best.

Used when the Pilgrim Fathers landed, they have been much improved upon and are now known as "Warner's Log Cabin Remedies." Chief among them being "Log Cabin Sarsaparilla," for the blood, and "Log Cabin Hops and Buchu Remedy," a tonic and stomach remedy.

Old Hutch's secret is worth its millions of dollars to him, and millions of people in the United States will rejoice that they are now enabled to secure the best of those old-time Log Cabin Remedies through the use of which our grandparents attained and enjoyed rugged, healthy old age.

A Precious Lot.

Lord Carnarvon's bill, which has just been introduced into the House of Lords, aims to prevent disreputable peers from sitting in the House of Lords. The Lords are beginning to reorganize, and it is the general impression that they will have a fertile field for work. The new bill is aimed at such disreputable specimens of mankind and the British peerage as Lord Ailesbury, who by his untiring efforts has managed to reach a point where he can be warned off any race course in England as a blackleg and sharper, but he is still empowered to vote coercion for Ireland. Ailesbury himself, by the way, with his music hall wife, Dolly Tester, is imparting a lurid light to a constantly increasing portion of the Continent. The efforts of the distinguished pair are meeting with more than national success. The begin a new cycle daily, and wind up at sunrise helplessly drunk and proud of the fact. Viscount Mandeville, the heir to the Duke of Manchester, who in the Bankruptcy court pleaded guilty to obtaining money by false pretences, would not be disqualified. The fact was brought out that Mandeville, when his father dies, will be the owner of 12,000 acres in Armagh, 14,000 acres in Huntingdonshire, and 1,000 in Cambridgeshire; but he has already incurred liabilities to the amount of $600,000, of which the Bankruptcy court can not rid him. His unsecured creditors will be lucky if they get sixpence in the pound.

The Tail of a Mastiff.

I was the owner of a mastiff about as large as a yearling calf; but one day he went the way of all dogs, and I employed a taxidermist to set him up in good shape. While this work was being done the tramps began to put in an appearance. While "Jack" was living not one of the fraternity got inside the yard. He had not been dead two days before we had callers. How they caught on I don't pretend to say, but that was the way it worked.

When the dog came home he looked as natural as life. By standing him on the grass beside a rose bush any one looking over the gate would have sworn that "Jack" was alive and ready to tackle an intruder. During the first day as many as five tramps halted at the gate, took a look, shook their heads, and passed on, and three more were scared off next forenoon. Soon after dinner a dilapidated pair, fresh from a long tramp, arrived, and as the first laid his hand on the second exclaimed:

"No go, Bill—there's a dog!"

"Stuffed!" replied the first, as he opened the gate.

"How d'ye know?"

"By the turn of his tail. Ever see a big dog like that with his tail turned to the left? Course he's stuffed."

I gave the men a quarter apiece and then went out to look at the big dogs in the neighborhood. Every one carried his tail to the right. Indeed, nine dogs out of ten do, and that ragged and penniless old tramp was a closer observer than the taxidermist, who had made a life study of posing specimens. I was so hit by it that I stored the dog in the garret and fed every tramp who came for the next three months.—New York Sun.

Europe's Position.

The outlook in the financial world of Europe at the present moment is anything but good. All eyes are turned on Paris, and at present it is difficult to say how and where the situation will end. At any rate, we shall not see the full effects of the downfall of the copper shares the crisis in the Comptoir d'Escompte until the usual liquidation in Paris is well over. The latest news is that the Russian loan, which was to have floated, has been indefinitely postponed. This shows at once how ugly the financial position really is, as full arrangements had been made to bring out the loan. London stocks seem more demoralized than for a long time past, and is generally believed that the market is being manipulated to suit the New York bear party. The short interest is enormous, and any attempt to cover would send prices up rapidly.

God bless the cheerful person—man, woman or child, old or young, illiterate or educated, handsome or homely. Over and above every social trait stands cheerfulness. What the sun is to nature, what God is to the stricken heart, which knows how to lean upon him, are cheerful persons, in their silent mission, brightening up society around them with the happiness beaming from their faces.

A low condition of health is common with many who allow themselves to worry. Mental anguish causes bodily sufferings. Anxiety and care has broken down many constitutions. A train of disorders usually follow mental distress. Heart affections, nervousness, sleeplessness, dyspepsia, liver complaint, kidney troubles, etc., are among the list. A sure remedy for relieving all mental and physical distress is Brown's Iron Bitters. It at once strengthens every part of the body, making work a pleasure and care unknown.

An Important Point.

Persons afflicted with impure blood frequently experience a constant miserable feeling, aching joints, indigestion, skin eruptions, sleeplessness, extreme lassitude, nervous excitability, gloomy imaginations, and general ill health. Good blood gives strength. Bad blood causes weakness. Keep your blood pure. Spring time is the best season to use a blood purifier. As a matter of course, in selecting a remedy, you should choose the best. One that will give satisfaction from the start. One that will not leave any evil after-effect. One that physicians endorse. Such a remedy is B. B. B. It is an important fact to remember that this remedy is the prescription of an eminent physician, and that one bottle will do you more good than 100 bottles of decoctions more largely advertised.

Dr. W. J. Adair, Rockmart, Ga., writes: "I regard B. B. B. as one of the best blood medicines."

Dr. A. H. Roscoe, Nashville, Tenn., writes: "All reports of B. B. B. are favorable, and its speedy action is truly wonderful."

Dr. J. W. Rhodes, Crawfordville, Ga., writes: "I confess B. B. B. is the best and quickest medicine for rheumatism I have ever tried."

Dr. S. J. Farmer, Crawfordville, Ga., writes: "I cheerfully recommend B. B. B. as a fine tonic alterative. Its use cured an excrescence of the neck after other remedies effected no perceptible good."

Dr. C. H. Montgomery, Jacksonville, Ala., writes: "My mother insisted on my getting B. B. B. for her rheumatism, as her case stubbornly resisted the usual remedies. She experienced immediate relief and her improvement has been truly wonderful."

A prominent physician who wishes his name not given, says: "A patient of mine, whose case of tertiary syphilis was surely killing him, and which no treatment seemed to check, was entirely cured with about twelve bottles of B. B. B. He was fairly made up of skin and bones and terrible ulcers."

THE ship canal which is to connect Manchester, England, with Liverpool, is being rapidly constructed, 10,000 men and a great number of steam excavators being used upon it. The canal will be 35 miles long, 26 feet deep, and 120 feet wide at the bottom.

THE colored people of Illinois have an organization incorporated, which proposes to erect a monument at the state capital to Lincoln, Seward, Sumner, Wendell Phillips and John Brown. The cost of the structure is to be $180,000 or $200,000.

Many People Refuse to Take Cod Liver Oil on account of its unpleasant taste. This difficulty has been overcome in SCOTT'S EMULSION of Pure Cod Liver Oil, with Hypophosphites. It being as palatable as milk, and the most valuable remedy known for the treatment of Consumption, Scrofula and Bronchitis, General Debility, Wasting Diseases of Children. Chronic Coughs and Colds, has caused physicians in all parts of the world to use it. Physicians report our little patients take it with pleasure. Try Scott's Emulsion and be convinced.

There is always an exciting inaugural bawl—the howl of the new-born babe.

Catarrh Cured.

A clergyman, after years of suffering from that loathsome disease, Catarrh, and vainly trying every known remedy, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Prof. J. A. Lawrence, 88 Warren St., N. Y., will receive the recipe free of charge.

Rheumatism
and Neuralgia

These twin diseases cause untold suffering. Doctors admit that they are difficult to cure—so do their patients. Paine's Celery Compound has permanently cured the worst cases of rheumatism and neuralgia—so say those who have used it.

FOR SALE. NO USE TO OWNER.

"Having been troubled with rheumatism at the knee and foot for five years, I was almost unable to get around, and was very often confined to my bed for weeks at a time. I used only one bottle of Paine's Celery Compound, and was perfectly cured. I can now jump around, and feel as lively as a boy." FRANK CAROLL, Eureka, Nevada.

"Paine's Celery Compound has been a God-send to me. For the past two years I have suffered with neuralgia of the heart, doctor after doctor failing to cure me. I have now taken nearly four bottles of the Compound, and am free from the complaint. I feel very grateful to you." CHAS. H. LEWIS, Central Village, Ct.

Paine's
Celery Compound

"I have been greatly afflicted with acute rheumatism, and could find no relief until I used Paine's Celery Compound. After using six bottles of this medicine I am now cured of rheumatic troubles."
SAMUEL HUTCHINSON, So. Cornish, N. H.

Effects Lasting Cures.

Paine's Celery Compound has performed many other cures as marvelous as these,—copies of letters sent to any address. Pleasant to take, does not disturb, but aids digestion, and entirely vegetable; a child can take it. What's the use of suffering longer with rheumatism or neuralgia?

Your Blood Needs

A thorough cleansing this spring, in order to expel the impurities which have accumulated during the winter, or which may be hereditary, and cause you much suffering. We confidently recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla as the very best spring medicine. By its use the blood is purified, enriched and vitalized, that tired feeling is entirely overcome and the whole body given strength and vigor. The appetite is restored and sharpened, the digestive organs are toned, and the kidneys and liver invigorated.

"I had boils all over my neck and back, troubling me so much that I could not turn my head around, nor stoop over. Hood's Sarsaparilla cured me in two weeks." DANIEL READ, Kansas City, Mo.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best blood purifier before the public. It eradicates scrofula and all humors, cures salt rheum, boils, pimples, etc. The severest cases of blood poisoning have yielded to its superior curative power. It accomplishes remarkable cures where other preparations utterly fail. Try it this season.

"For years at irregular intervals in all seasons, I suffered the intolerable burning and itching of blood poisoning by ivy. It would break out on my legs, in my throat and eyes. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, as a blood purifier, with no thought of it as a special remedy for ivy poisoning, but it has effected a permanent and thorough cure." CALVIN T. MIRACULOUS RESTORATION.

That dainty lady tripping by,
How light her step, how bright her eye,
How fresh her cheek with healthful glow,
Like roses that in Maytime blow!

And yet few weeks have passed away
Since she was fading, day by day.
The doctor's skill could naught avail;
Weaker she grew, and thin and pale.

At last, while in a hopeless frame,
One day she said, "There is a name
I've often seen—a remedy—
Perhaps 'twill help: I can but try."

And so, according to direction,
She took Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription,
And every baleful symptom fled,
And she was raised as from the dead.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the world-famed, invigorating tonic and nervine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable and perfectly harmless in any condition of the system. It is the only medicine for the distressing weaknesses and derangements peculiar to women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrappers, and faithfully carried out for many years.

ALABAMA.

William Dallas, a young colored man, employed at the Sloss furnaces at Birmingham, on Thursday, fell into one of the furnaces, and was burned to ashes in a few moments. He was doing some work at the top of the furnace, when he suddenly lost his balance and fell in backwards. He had only time to utter a despairing shriek.

A fight to the death, in a dark room occurred at Blocton on Thursday night, between two miners named Jim Brown and Fayette Davis, in which the former was killed. The two men roomed together and quarreled about a loaf of bread. They commenced fighting and overturned the lamp, which was extinguished. After a long fight Davis succeeded in drawing his pistol and shooting Brown dead. Davis escaped.

"That is the man," said Mrs. J. U. Lundy on Wednesday when Jim Williams, alias Ben Elgy, was brought before her. Mrs. Lundy was able to leave her room for the first time since she was assaulted by this negro, two weeks ago. The negro was brought out of jail and taken before Mrs. Lundy, in order that his identification might be complete. As soon as she saw the negro's face, she exclaimed: "That is the man."

About eight weeks ago, the body of J. W. Meadows, a railroad man, was found about two miles from Birmingham. Several parties were arrested for the crime, but no evidence against them being obtained, they were released. On Thursday, four negroes were arrested, and it is believed enough evidence has been secured to convict them of the murder. Their names are Lawrence Johnson, Henry Joe, Lindsy Malachy and Gilbert Lowe. Upon the person of one of them was found the watch and scarf pin of the murdered man, and a number of pictures and photographs which he was known to have had in his pockets.

Some of the doctors of Birmingham are stirred up over the recovery of a negro from what seemed to be a well-developed case of hydrophobia. J. E. Brown, a colored man, had a small dog that was attacked by a strange cur, and in defending his pet, the negro was bitten slightly in several places. Last week Brown's dog showed signs of hydrophobia, and was killed. Monday, Brown himself became violently ill, and developed symptoms of hydrophobia. He grew worse rapidly, and on Monday night it required the combined efforts of six men to tie him on the bed. The doctors applied the usual remedies to relieve the man's sufferings, but they were surprised when he appeared to be growing better on Wednesday, and will no doubt recover.

FLORIDA.

Fred Douglas, the well-known colored orator, was the guest of the colored people at Jacksonville on Thursday. A procession numbering five hundred, including the military companies, escorted him from the station to the Sub-Tropical Exposition, where he delivered a short address, congratulating the colored people of Florida upon their progress since Emancipation.

Ex-President Cleveland and party arrived at Jacksonville on Thursday by the Plant steamer, from Enterprise, which stopped enroute at Orange Grove and the winter residence of H. B. Plant, at Fort Gates. An informal breakfast was given them. No speeches or toasts were offered. The breakfast over, the party took carriages and visited the Sub-Tropical. "I make a prediction," said Mr. Cleveland, "and it is this: Jacksonville is destined to be one of the finest cities in the South, and next year you will have a tremendous influx of Northern visitors, for every one who comes here goes away with regret, and I assure you that I only wish I could linger longer."

SOUTH CAROLINA.

At Yorkville on Thursday, Charles Colston, John C. Feaster, and Charles McMenus, all colored, were tried for the murder of W. O. Abernathy, white. Colton and Feaster were convicted and McManus was acquitted. The Jenkins Rifles are on guard at the jail, but lynching is not feared, as the people are satisfied with the verdict.

Hon. C. R. Breckenridge, congressman-elect from the 2nd district, visited Little Rock on Thursday to confer with the governor about the efforts being made to catch the Clayton murderers. The congressman told the governor to let him know when he needed funds, to speak as often as he needed money, for all he needed and he (Breckenridge), would undertake to go over the 2nd district and raise as many thousands of dollars as was needed, to exhaust all human efforts to bring the guilty to justice.

GEORGIA.

The safe of the Sandersville postoffice was blown open and robbed on Wednesday. The safe front was literally blown to pieces, and the debris covering the end of the room. The money in the safe did not amount to $100, but a number of valuable papers, useful only to Postmaster Roberts, were taken.

Athens is to have a new daily paper. The paper will be an eight page morning daily, and will contain the Associated Press dispatches and special correspondence. It will be edited, in all probability, by Col. Albert R. Lamar, of Macon. The Athens Evening Chronicle is to be merged into the new daily, thus leaving the city with two first-class papers, both morning.

Thomas Woolfolk, in confinement at Macon, on Tuesday made a display of that temper some time exhibited by him during his recent trial. When Jailor Birdsong entered that part of the jail where Woolfolk is confined, he asked the jailer to let him out in the corridor. The jailer told him he should come out in a few moments, but because the jailer would not let him have access to the corridor immediately, he flew in a violent rage and became very abusive and profane, and his curses could be heard in all parts of the jail.

The trial of Hardy Hamilton, charged with the murder of the Chinaman, Joe Lee, was concluded in Rome, Ga., on Wednesday. The evidence made out a clear case of cold-blooded and atrocious murder, whose only motive was robbery. Several silver dollars, stained with blood, were introduced in evidence. The money belonged to the Chinese, and was found in Hardy Hamilton's trunk. The case was given to the jury, and they returned in a very few minutes with a verdict of guilty. The jury did not recommend to mercy and the penalty will be death.

A man who registered at the King Hotel, at Stone Mountain, on Monday night, as Charles Thompson, of Atlanta, was found early Tuesday morning alongside of the railroad track with a bullet hole in his head, and his skull crushed. Near him was a burglar's "jimmy," which had been used no doubt to batter out his brains. He had been seen in company with A. D. Reviere, of Gwinnett county, and Reviere was arrested on suspicion. The general impression is, that the two had planned a robbery, quarrelled about it, and the murder was the consequence.

MISSOURI.

A law and order meeting took action in the matter of the so-called White Caps at Knoblick and Cygnet, who warned foreign-born workingmen to leave the county, was captured by gangs from those two towns. The gangs elected officers and declared against publishing the lawlessness existing in St. Francis county. Shortly after midnight a terrific explosion occurred in front of Gen. McCormick's residence, the shock jarring all the houses in the neighborhood. All outsiders at the meeting carried dynamite in sticks in their pockets. The general is one of the leaders of the movement against the White Caps.

TENNESSEE.

Sheriff Greenlee, of Granger county, was shot and instantly killed while attempting to arrest John Woltbargen, an escaped convict from the penitentiary.

In a collision of two freight trains, two miles South of Nashville, on the Decatur division of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, on Thursday, M. L. Eby and Earnest C. Green, both brakemen, were instantly killed, and Albert Finck had his back broken. The trains were running at about twenty-five miles an hour at the time of the accident. An adjacent curve prevented the engineers seeing each other till it was too late.

One of the boldest schemes for robbing the county treasury has just been unearthed at Murfreesboro, by Attorney-General Moses Priest. In looking over the cost of maintaining the county, his attention was attracted to the fact that costs had been allowed to over 800 cases for burying paupers during the last year. These figures being somewhat large for a county of less than 20,000 inhabitants, he began an investigation with the result, that not one-tenth of that number of actual paupers had died during the year. One woman, according to the books, had been buried three times, and is yet alive and well, in the town of [illegible]

Senator Vance, who is at his home, Gombroon, near Black Mountain, though suffering from nervousness, is being very much improved by rest and the mountain air.

Governor Fowle has issued a death warrant for the execution of Eli Ward, a negro burglar, at Jackson, Northampton county, May 30. Ward set fire to the jail recently and is now in jail at Halifax. His execution will be public and will be the fourth during the present year.

Chas. M. Dudley, a white man, was instantly killed on Thursday at Wilmington, on board the old bark Albados. A colored man, John Johnson, had his thigh crushed. The accident was caused by the falling of the ship's mainyard from a height of thirty feet to the deck.

On Thursday night the planing mills belonging to John M. Wilson, at Wilson's Mills, together with a large warehouse adjoining, were burned. The Richmond and Danville depot was also destroyed. The main line of track was so warped that trains could not pass until it was repaired. The loss on the mill amounted to about $25,000. James Wallace went into the mill during the fire for his tools and was burned to death.

The colored people in the Kinston section are wild over the matter of offices under President Harrison. They are aspirants for places to be made vacant by turning out Democrats, and in addition to employing a special instructor, are sending their petitions to the Throne of Grace. They hold prayer meetings daily, and ask that the hands of the President may be laid upon them, and that their services may be required by the government.

A large party of negroes left Raleigh on Tuesday for Arkansas. Attempts thus far in the more eastern and southern counties to induce the negroes to emigrate, have proved an absolute failure. The labor agents are hard at work to induce them to go to Kansas, Arkansas or California. It is now believed that the exodus has almost ended until in the late Summer, when it will become more extensive and far more systematic, as it will then, it is claimed, be under the auspices and control, to a great extent, of the state immigration association.

Advices received at Brussels, Belgium, from Stanley Falls, state that the Arabs who have arrived there, report that Henry M. Stanley and Emin Pasha were heard from in February. They were then marching towards Zanzibar with several thousand men, women and children. They had 6,000 tusks of ivory.

The British man-of-war Calliope, which escaped possible destruction in Apia Bay during the ravages of the cyclone by being able to put to sea, has arrived at Sydney, New South Wales. She reports leaving Samoa on the 21st of March, and that the United States man-of-war Nipsic had been floated off of the beach, the natives lending material assistance.

Police Lieut. John E. Haines, of Chicago, Ill., was held to the grand jury in bonds of $3,000 by Judge Altegeld on Thursday, on a charge preferred by Lawyer Frank H. Collier, who identified the lieutenant positively as one of the two men who lured Collier, of the La Salle club, by a bogus telephone message one night during the recent political excitement, and sand-bagged him in the dark.

STRICKEN DOWN.

Edwin Booth, the tragedian, was stricken with paralysis during his appearance in "Othello," at Rochester, N. Y., on Wednesday night, and is dangerously ill. Mr. Barrett later appeared before the curtain and announced that Mr. Booth had sustained a partial stroke of paralysis, and feared that it was the beginning of the end. Booth was taken ill upon the stage during the last scene in the second act. He became unsteady, reeled and fell, and had to be assisted off the stage by those near by. The doctor expressed the fear that Booth had sustained a partial stroke of paralysis.

ELECTIONS.

A victory for the Democrats was the result of Tuesday's election in Chicago, Ill. Over 200 precincts, out of 290, had been heard from, showing a majority thus far of 6,420 for Cregier, Democrat, for mayor. Predictions give Cregier the election by 8,000 to 10,000 over Roche, Republican. Two years ago Roche carried the city by 28,000. The municipal election in St. Louis, Mo., passed off quietly. Reports were received at St. Paul, Minn., of a bad railroad wreck on the Northern Pacific, near Missoula, Mont. A passenger train ran into a freight and Green, the freight fireman, and two tramps who were stealing a ride, were killed, and some others injured. The accident was caused by a misplaced switch.

The closing episode in the record of the steamer Haytien Republic as a trader between Boston, Mass., and Hayti occurred Tuesday, when the craft was sold at auction for $41,000. The purchaser is William Lewis, of New Bedford, who will fit the Republic out for Behring's sea and the Arctic ocean as a whaling supply steamer.

Judge Alexander McCue, ex-assistant treasurer of the United States, died at his home in Brooklyn, N. Y., on Tuesday. Judge McCue was stricken with paralysis on the 20th of March, and has been confined to his home ever since. He was appointed by President Cleveland to be Solicitor of the Treasury, which office he held until a year ago, when he was made assistant treasurer in New York.

The recent hurricane in the South Pacific ocean swept over 1,200 geographical miles, embracing in its track the Hervey and Society groups of islands. "The general," adds Cocarde, "will appear when duty requires him. It is our impression that he has hidden temporarily, perhaps in Brussels."

In the Reichstag, on Wednesday, the naval secretary, referring to the loss of the German warships in the recent hurricane at Apia, Samoa, said that the report of the German officer in command there did not show that the lives or property of Europeans were endangered and he was sure that the British warship Caliope would not have left Samoa if the position had been critical. He announced that the government intended to replace the wrecked German vessels as soon as possible, as the United States government was about to send three cruisers to take the place of the American warships that had been lost.

THE FARMERS MEET.

"Millions for cotton bagging—not one cent for jute." That is to be the farmers' shibboleth in Georgia for the coming campaign. By almost unanimous and a very enthusiastic vote, the Farmers' Alliance of Georgia, representing 80,000 farmers, in session at Atlanta, Ga., on Thursday, resolved that they would use cotton bagging for the baling of their cotton—and would not use jute under any circumstances. It is said that three-fourths of the delegates came from their county alliances instructed to vote for cotton bagging under any and all circumstances. While this obstructed impartial consideration, it gives enthusiasm and earnestness to the movement. The size of the bale will remain unchanged. An attempt was made to reduce the bale to 250 pounds, so that lighter osnaburg would would hold it, but this was not done. Such a change would have required a change of presses, compresses, and a large amount of farm machinery, which the Alliance did not think best to undertake. It is the old size bale in a new style dress that has been determined on. And now it is a question of endurance and courage between the farmers and their plunderers.

A BIG CROWD.

The Musical Union, of New York is endeavoring to prevent the landing there of strolling bands from Europe. Almost every incoming German steamer has on board a score or more of musicians, who have been in the habit of coming here in the Spring and returning in the Fall with the money earned during the Summer. It is urged that such immigrants come within the provisions of the foreign contract labor act, but heretofore they have escaped detention by swearing that they came as individuals and not as bands under leaders. When the steamer Westernland arrived Wednesday at New York, from Antwerp, Superintendent Simpson, of the Landing Bureau at Castle Garden, discovered that there were no less than four hundred musicians on board, nearly all of them having spent the Summer in New York and vicinity for years past.

WHIPPED THE FIGHT.

After a vigorous fight in Oskaloosa, Kansas, the female candidates for city offices won the day by sweeping majorities. At Cottonwood Falls, Kansas, the ladies were also triumphant, Mrs. Minnie Morgan being elected mayor with all the members of the council of her sex. The contest for the mayoralty at Leavenworth lay between D. R. Anthony, Republican, and L. M. Hacker, Democrat. Susan B. Anthony, sister of the Republican candidate, worked heroically for him, but Hacker was elected by about 2,500 majority. Nearly 4,000 women voted during the day, most of them casting their ballots for Hacker.

OUR SHIP DISABLED.

The British steamship Fairhall, Bussett, from Cape Verde arrived on Wednesday at Pensacola, Fla. She reported that she passed the U. S. warship Brooklyn in latitude 22.41 north, longitude 62.30 west, one hundred and thirty-six days from Honolulu, proceeding under sail with shaft broken. Assistance was declined. The crew all well. The Fairhall provisioned the Brooklyn, taking her mail, and departed amid the cheers of the tars.

CONGRESS.

With the adjournment of the Senate, on Tuesday, all the nominations sent to it are confirmed, with the exception of Eugene Schuyler as Assistant Secretary of State, and Murat Halstead as Minister to Berlin. There are no nominations hanging fire, and everything was closed up. The special session has been remarkable in one thing, and quite different from nearly all other similar special sessions to confirm the appointments of newly elected presidents. It is not a current thing in history for the Senate to reject any appointments so early made in a new administration.

NOTES.

The Secretary of the Interior, on Wednesday, approved the location of the route for fifty additional miles of railroad to be built by the Rock Island Co. in the Indian Territory.

The three officers mentioned as likely to succeed Adjt.-Gen. Drum of the army are Cols. John C. Kelton, William D. Whipple and Chauncey McKeever. Col. Kelton, however, as the ranking colonel of the corps, is considered most likely to secure the coveted position.

The immediate relatives of those who lost their lives in the great storm in Samoa, will be entitled to pensions under the general law. The pension is $8 per month for a seaman's widow, and $2 per month for each child under 16 years of age. Congress will probably also pass a special act making reimbursement for the effects and baggage of officers and men lost in the wrecks. This was done in the case of the Huron, which went down on the Hatteras coast about fifteen years ago.

Assistant Secretary Thompson, of South Carolina, finally retired from the Treasury Department on Tuesday, and his successor, Col. Batcheller, assumed the duties of the office. As a mark of appreciation of their former chief, the prominent officials of the Treasury gave a dinner in honor of Mr. Thompson and his colleague, Judge Maynard. Secretary of the Treasury Windom presided, and Mr. Thompson, as the honored guest, sat on the right hand of the presiding officer.

The ten delegates that are to represent the United States at the International Conference to be held at Washington this Fall, will have plenty of interesting and important work to do. The nations represented will be the United States, Mexico, the Central and South American Republics, Hayti, San Domingo and Brazil. The conference was suggested by Mr. Blaine in 1881, and among the subjects will be proposals for the establishment of international arbitration, uniform coinage, weights and measures, customs and tariffs, and plans for the more frequent and convenient interchange of commerce.

Corporal Tanner, the new Commissioner of Pensions, is creating something of a sensation in his bureau. When he entered upon his duties he announced the Democrats must go. A clean sweep at once meant chaos and confusion in the business of the Pension Bureau, but the new commissioner declared that he meant what he said. His friends counseled moderation, but the corporal "isn't built that way." He prepared to revolutionize matters immediately, and made so much fuss about it that it came to the ears of the Secretary of the Interior. The result was Secretary Noble's order, on Tuesday, to the effect that heads of bureaus and other officers of the Interior Department would not call for resignations except by his direction.

HE OBSERVED IT.

Representatives of every Catholic society in New York city, were present at a meeting held on Thursday night to consider what part the Catholic citizens should take in the Washington Centennial Celebration. Judge Daily said that there were many reasons why Catholics should honor the memory of Washington. He never failed to observe St. Patrick's day in the time of the Revolution, and on the day the British evacuated Boston, "St. Patrick" was the watchword given to the army.

A Peculiar Wound.

Mr. James M. Wiley of Gwinett county, who applied for his allowance under the maimed soldier act a few days ago, has a peculiar wound, from which he still suffers acute pain at times. He was a member of Company H, 11th Georgia regiment, and at the battle of the Wilderness, May 6th, 1864, a minnie ball pierced the muscle of the back of his neck, ploughed under the skin, and imbedded itself in the angle of his right jaw bone, directly under his ear. The bulk of the ball became encrusted, and for 25 years he has carried it in the point of his jaw bone. The butt of the ball slightly protrudes, and may be plainly seen. The wound still suppurates at times. The ball is firmly incased in the clinging carthilage, and the doctors say that to extract it would lead to decay of the jawbone and probably result in death. Mr. Wiley enjoys fair health, and will probably go to his grave with the bullet in his bone.—Atlanta Constitution.

A correspondent of the Paris Illustration sends from Tonquin a curious account of a public contest in letters, somewhat resembling the old-time "floral games" in France. The competitors are native Tonquinese scholars, and the judges, mandarins of high degree, who, perched upon tall, scaffold-like seats, and sheltered by umbrellas held by their assiduous attendants, call aloud the names of the victorious laureates, whom they have heard and examined. "The West Alabama Breeze" the new paper published in the vigorous little city of Northport, Ala., by Mr. J. C. Lawrence, formerly of the VIEW, has been received. Its appearance and contents speak encouragingly of its prospects and of the future of Northport. The patience and capacity for hard work which has always characterized our frater of the "Breeze," we think will insure the success of his enterprise.

Stanton Notes.

Your correspondent rode from here to Clanton and back Saturday and is badly used up from the effects of the ride.

We noted many improvements on the road made since our trip through the country last January. Many nice little farms and farm houses dot the country and the farmers seem to be tackling mother earth in dead earnest this year.

The lumber men also were making gigantic strides in cutting down the forest. Among these a Mr. Chandler has planted an immence saw mill seven miles from Clanton and is doing a large business. The only drawback we saw to the enterprise was the want of a little narrow guage R. R. to take his lumber to market. Chilton county is improving rapidly and its crop lands and fine long leaf pine forest are bound to attract immigrants. This county also has the best looking school teachers (the writer excepted) it has been our good fortune to witness in a long time.

Mr. Jamie Rhodes a prominent merchant of Eufaula is visting firends in our town.

We are glad to see that the VIEW has the courage to attack Dr. Talmage on his miscegenation sentiments. we have always been an ardent admirer of Talmage and have read his sermons with great interest, but the man who preaches miscegenation in this country cannot be a patriot or a friend of his race. Just think, let the Anglo-saxon, the negro, the chinaman and the Indian intermarrying in this country and in the next generation what sort of a race would we have. Lord deliver us from such a curse. My countrymen keep pure your blood and let not those who have despoiled you of all else, rob you of that which is dearer than life to a true Southerner, his pure Anglo Saxon blood. Let Mr. Talmage have it if he wishes, but let him keep it at home.

It is reliably stated that Major J. G. Harris, register of the United States land office, will be a candidate before the next Democratic state convention for the office of state superintendent of education. While the major has not formally announced he is said to have informed several of his friends throughout the state that he would probably enter the race for that office.—Montgomery Dispatch.

Maj. Harris would fill such a position admirably and is hoped that he will decide to enter the race.

Shiloh's Consumption Cure.

This is beyond question the most successul Cough Medicine we have ever sold, a few doses invariably cure the worst cases of Cough, Croup and Bronchitis, while its wonderful success in the cure of consumption is without a parallel in the history of medicine. Since its first discovery it has been sold on a guarantee, a test which no other medicine can stand. If you have a cough, we earnestly ask you to try it Price 10 cents, 50 cents, and $1.00. If your lungs are sore, Chest or Back lame, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by A. E. Bivings, Clanton. jan 10

Answer this Question.

Why do so many people we see around us seem to prefer to suffer and be made miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of Appetite Coming up of the Food, Yellow Skin when for 75 cents, we will sell them Shiloh's System Vitalizer, guaranteed to cure them. Sold by A. E. Bivings, Clanton.

The Great Newspaper of the South.

The AGE-HERALD, in addition to covering the field most thoroughly with their bright and newsy daily, is getting out the Great Weekly of the South. It is a mammoth 12-page paper at only $1 a year, with a ticket for every subscriber to the largest gift distribution of over $8,000 in valuable and useful articles ever offered by a newspaper. It is a paper for the farm and fireside. Its Agricultural Department is full of practical information for the farmer, while its Household Department renders it a treasure to every housewife in the land. A special feature is also made of a department for Our Little Folks.

We will furnish the WEEKLY AGE-HERALD and our paper one year for $2 and give each subscriber a ticket to the gift distribution.

I have been instructed by Sol W. Palmer, State Superintendent of Education, not to pay any teacher who does not attend the institutes of the county, and I am certainly going to comply with his instructions. But if you do not come for any other purpose than merely to save your salary, you had better stay at home. It will be better for the institute. Come with a purpose to do something and learn something. The object of these institutes are for the proper training of teachers in the different methods of teaching and many other things especially necessary. You will not be required to stand an examination. None are required to take part except those named in the programme. Write to A. J. Scott, teacher at Clanton, immediately, so that he can procure a room for you while attending the Institute. Now let all the teachers make their arrangements to come, and be sure to be on time. Everybody is invited to attend. Very respectfully,

R. E. R. HICKS,
County Supt. of Education.

CLANTON, ALA., April 8, 1889.

EDITOR OF THE VIEW: At a meeting of the citizens of Clanton held on the 5th inst., a committee consisting of the following named gentlemen was appointed for the purpose of writing up the resources of Chilton county, viz., L. A. Thornton, J. Fox Maull, Prof. R. E. R. Hicks and W. A. Smith. I take this method to inform each of the said committee that it is desired that each of the above named gentlemen will, as soon as convenient, prepare a paper on the following named subjects so far as the same shall appear to be of advantage in presenting to the public, viz: Mines, minerals, forests, soils or other products, climate, water and water powers, fisheries, mountains, streams, industries and all such statistics as are best adapted to give proper information of the attractions and advantages which the county affords to immigrants.

It is deemed advisable that each of said committee meet and select what subject each member shall write upon. I would further suggest that said committee meet as soon as possible so that we may get the matter herein referred to in shape so as to have the same published and distributed. This is a matter that should interest all good citizens and we desire the co-operation of all.

Respectfully,
J. M. PONDER.

The State fair will open in Birmingham Oct. 17th to exhibitors and from Monday, Oct. 20th to Nov. 2nd to the public. The premiums are as follows:

Alabama grapes $50, two premiums.

Field crops shown by alliance, club or grange $300, $250, $150, and $100, four premiums.

County displays of field crops including live stock, $600 and $200 two premiums.

County display of home-made leather and wood hollow ware $100, $50, two premiums.

The American Agriculturist offers $500 gold coin for the largest yield of corn on one acre, open to all the states.

The fair association will duplicate that premium if an Alabama acre takes it, making $1,000 for the best acre of Alabama corn.

If Alabama loses this premium offered by the American Agriculturist, then the fair will pay $101 for the best Alabama acre of corn.

Old Folks in Chilton.

Special Correspondence Age-Herald.

CLANTON, April 4.—Since writing about the old people of Clanton and vicinity, have since been informed that Uncle Johnnie Goodgame, who is 92 years old, and his wife, who is 89, have been a prolific pair. They have 259 descendants, including children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren. One of their married daughters gave birth to five children in thirteen months.

MRS. GROSS,

who is a widow and living five miles from Clanton, is 84 years old.

ELIJAH MYARS,

the father of Rev. Mr. Myars, who died three years ago, was 81 years old. He had followed farming all his life, and to this kind of a life he felt that he owed his long life.

REV. W. A. WELLS

will be 80 in July. He was born in Georgia in the year 1809, and moved to this state in the year 1819. His wife is 75 years old. They have been married sixty years. Mr. Wells is a Protestant preacher, and has charge of four churches in different parts of the county. He travels to each of his appointments on horseback. He don't look to be more than 60 years old.

There are perhaps many other aged people in our county, and the large number mentioned is sufficient to indicate that those wanting to live a long life will find conditions altogether favorable here among the healthful pine hills of Chilton county.

The Alliance Meeting.

JEMISON, ALA., April 8.—The VIEW was kind in announcing the farmers' county meeting at Union. Some of us probably would have forgotten the time had it not been for the timely thoughtfulness of the VIEW, which seems always ready to do the most good possible.

And sure it is that every person will aid the noble farmer in every advancing step. For the farmer feeds the world. Then if we will let our minds dwell on that fact a brief time is sufficient to make us wonder why they have so long delayed in organizing if for no other purpose than to exchange thoughts in regard to modes of planting and what and when to plant, and proper harvesting, shipping, &c.

It was plainly seen this week in said county meeting in which there were over forty delegates, besides officers and other members that they mean something in the way of exalting the heretofore poor slighted farmer. We find that their tastes and feelings are the same as other classes. So we are doing a duty when we give them a word of praise and encouragement. Notwithstanding they are opposed by the more thoughtless, they seem to be firm and hopeful.

A MOTHER.

The many friends of Miss Mamie Bivings regret to hear of her illness.

A Home Comfort!

We the undersigned citizens of Prattville, Ala., have each purchased a new Improved Home Comfort Cooking Range from the traveling salesman of the Wrought Iron Range Company, and find them to be far superior in every respect to anything we have ever seen or tried in the way of a cooking apparatus and would advise any friend or neighbor to secure one at their earliest convenience, as we consider them the cheapest stove that can be used, and know by experience that they are the best?

Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy, a marvelous cure for Catarrh, Diptheria, Canker Mouth, and Head-Ache. With each bottle there is an ingenious Nasal Injector for the more successful treatment of these complaints without extra charge. Price 50 cents. Sold by A. E. Bivings, Clanton.

Cancer! Cancer!! Cancer!!!

All persons afflicted with this terrible disease, may now rejoice. I am coming to cure it, without any failure, unless you are dead when I arrive. I carry with me testimonials which will astonish all sufferers. Cancer can be cured and I can prove it. I make the following proposition, viz: Deposit the amount of my charges in any respectable bank, and if I do not cure you withdraw the deposit; if I cure you the same is to be paid to me. Is this not fair? I cannot believe that a cured patient can be ungrateful to his benefactor, hence the foregoing proposition. The question of cure is left with you.

Will be in Clanton on the 15th of April to remain a few weeks.

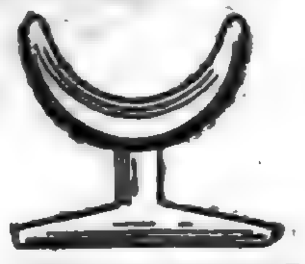
PILLOWS.

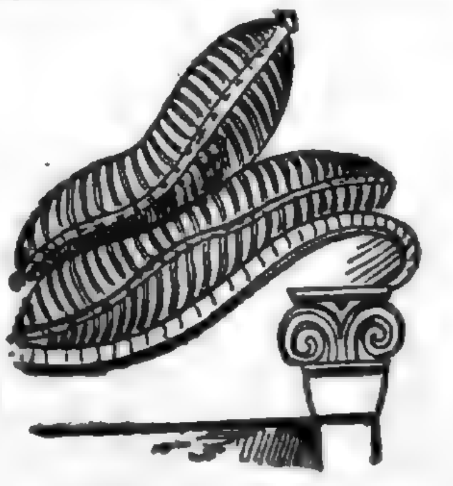
ANCIENT AND MODERN AIDS TO RECUMBENT COMFORT.

A Block of Wood Has Evolved Into the Present Luxurious Headrest—Bamboo Pillows—Early English Bolsters.

There is little doubt that the first pillow used was a block of wood, either hollowed out to fit the neck or a plain section of a stump of a tree. The latter is still used by savages, and no one who has not tried it can imagine how restful such an arrangement is. The prime object of the pillow was not to afford a soft place for the head to lie on, but something that would keep the head in a proper position when the body was in a reclining posture, and to brace the neck. If the reader will observe the tired man he will remark that the first portion of his body that gives way is the head. When sleep comes on this is the portion that first grows heavy and unstable. Not only is this because the muscles of the neck relax in common with all the other muscles of the body, but the head is relatively the heaviest part of the body, and at the same time the least supported. It rests upon the neck, a column often disproportionately small, and at the first symptom of weakness in that quarter the head topples and falls. Again, when one lies down, whether on the side or the back, the head is found to be out of alignment. When lying on the side the arm may be thrown up to rectify this, but this at best is an uncomfortable position and the pillowless sleeper will soon roll over on his back or his face. When lying on his back the head sinks and an arch is formed, with the shoulders and occiput as the supporting piers and the nape of the neck as the keystone. There it is that the first sign of unrefreshed weariness appears, and there it is that the support is primarily needed. Put something underneath the arch to keep off the strain and rest will be the result. So it was that the first observant children of men saw the necessity of supporting the arch and thrust in a log of wood to fill it up. The desired result was effected and, as was said just now, those who have not tried this simple pillow can form no idea of how restful an arrangement it is.



EGYPTIAN HEAD-REST.



THE CLASSICAL PILLOW.

The Chinese and Japanese all use a section of bamboo for a pillow. In fact the wooden pillow, or neck-rest rather, is common throughout all the Oriental nations of arrested civilization. The fashion of their use goes back a long way and the Egyptians used a wooden headrest of the shape shown in an accompanying cut. These were especially adapted to the preservation of the elaborate coiffures so much in fashion among the women during the nineteenth and twentieth dynasties. These head-rests were not only used by those who slept upon the mats or skins of wild animals laid upon the floor, but were also used on the straight couches which did duty as beds.

The Jews, however, never used the head-rest, unless it was during the time immediately following their Egyptian captivity. At first thick cotton quilts were used for a bed, one above and the other beneath, while the third was folded flat and used for a pillow. These in turn gave place to the roomy divan, about which were a number of cushions stuffed with goat's hair, and were undoubtedly used for pillows. The bed which we read about so often in the Bible as having been carried about by the owner was evidently nothing more than a mattress. The Oriental bed gradually developed into a thing of more magnificence than comfort, as may readily be understood on reading Baron de Tott:

AN ANGLO-SAXON PILLOW.

"The time of taking our repose has now come," he writes, "and we were conducted into another large room, in the middle of which was a kind of bed without bedstead or curtains. Though the coverlet and pillow exceeded in magnificence the richness of the sofa, which likewise ornamented the room, I foresaw that I could expect but little rest on this bed; and had the curiosity to examine its make in a more particular manner. Fifteen mattresses of quilted cotton, about three inches thick, placed one upon another, formed the groundwork, and were covered by a sheet of linen sewed on to the last mattress. A coverlet of green satin, adorned with gold embroidered in embossed work, was in like manner fastened to the sheets, the ends of which turned in were sewed down alternately. Two large pillows of crimson satin, covered with the like embroidery in which there was no want of gold or spangles, rested on the cushions of the sofa, brought near to serve as a back, and intended to support our heads. The taking of the pillows entirely away would have been a good resource if we had a bolster; and the expedient of turning the other side upward having only served to show that they were embroidered in the same manner on the bottom. We at last determined to lay our handkerchiefs over them, which, however, did not prevent our being very sensible of the embossed ornaments underneath."

This can evidently mean the luxury of [illegible] show than of use, and even a wooden neck-rest would have been preferable.

The Greeks and Romans, despite their love of the severely classical, were very fond of cushions, and used them as pillows, a specimen of such an arrangement being shown in the cut. The framework of their couches was wrought out of costly wood or metal. Sometimes the lower part of the couch was draped with silk embroidered with gold thread, representing figure scenes, such as hunting parties or banquets. The soft pillows of these couches were stuffed with wool and covered with rich purple or variegated fabrics imported from Babylon.

Stiff and ungainly though much of the mediæval furniture was, the "knights of old" and their ladies were very particular about the comfort of their beds. Norman beds had ornamental testers, and were furnished with quilts, spotted or striped linen sheets and a covering of badger, beaver or marten skins, and pillows stuffed with wool and generally covered with silk.

The bed, indeed, during the Middle Ages was the principal piece of furniture of the sleeping-room. It was originally simple in its forms, although the antique tradition of the bronze bedstead seems to have survived in Merovingian and Carlovingian times. Subsequently the bed was made altogether of wood, which, after the twelfth century, was carved or turned, painted or inlaid with ivory and colored woods. The pillows were embroidered, and a rich coverlet, sometimes made of costly fur, was laid upon it.

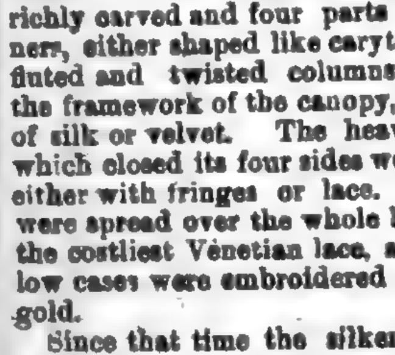
The description of the sleeping apartments of the wife of a retail dealer in cloth, taken from a book called "Le Tresor des Dames," by Christian de Pisar, will give an idea of the extreme luxury which was indulged in by French tradesmen as well as noblemen in the fourteenth century. The two rooms preceding the bedchamber each contained a richly-curtained bed, and the second a great sideboard covered like an altar, upon which stood a great deal of silver plate. The spacious and beautiful chamber of the mistress of the house was hung with tapestry richly worked with her device in gold. The hangings of the large and beautiful bed were very rich, and the carpets about it were worked in gold thread. The sheets, which were of Rheims linen of the utmost fineness, were valued at $650. Over these lay a covering of woven gold, covered with a linen sheet as soft as silk, woven in one piece, and so large that it covered the whole bed and fell to the ground on all sides. It was a novelty valued at $400. The lady lying in the bed was dressed in crimson silk and her pillows were of the same material embroidered with pearls.

The bed and its belongings continued to hold their importance during the Renaissance, and they were always regarded as a work of art and an ornament to the dwelling. The bed retained its canopy, but was freed from the chest-like inclosure with which Gothic taste had surrounded it. The feet were treated artistically; the sides, and especially the inside of the raised headboard were richly carved and four parts at the corners, either shaped like carytides or like fluted and twisted columns supported the framework of the canopy, which was of silk or velvet. The heavy curtains which closed its four sides were trimmed either with fringes or lace. Coverlets were spread over the whole bed made of the costliest Venetian lace, and the pillow cases were embroidered in silk and gold.



AN EARLY ENGLISH BOLSTER.

Since that time the silken pillow has grown out of fashion or is at best but an affectation. Apropos of affectation, however, the recent revival of the silken sheet makes it perfectly possible and indeed probable that silken pillow cases may once more be the proper thing on the bed of the rich. But the cover of the pillow is after all but a matter of minor importance. The size and stuffing of the article are the prime considerations.—San Francisco Chronicle.

A Colored Man Turning White.

Green Howell, of Midville, Ga., has a double claim on the title of colored, for he is a full-blooded negro, but is turning white in great patches—a color which natural philosophy tells us is a blending of all colors. Greene was questioned as to the strange freak of nature wrought in his skin. There are two patches of white on each ear. His lips are turning a pale color, about that of the average Caucasian skin. Beneath the folds of his flannel shirt could be seen the evidence of changing color. His hands, further than several small patches of brown, are as pale as those of any white, and at a moment's glance can be seen to be different from the bleaching of the leper. His scalp is also changed, and is as pale as his hands.

Greene is a successful planter and talks freely of his strange case. He is about thirty-five years of age and of medium height. His face and hair bear out his story that there is no mixed blood in his veins. He says that at the close of the war he had two small blotches on each hand, which remained without change until four years ago last April, when the skin on his hands began to turn a pale red and then white.

While at work ploughing in the fields in summer, he says the perspiration from his hands would be red, as if tinctured with blood. Further than from the evidence of his eyes he was unaware through any sensation of the change which has been going on. There has been no itch or smart, and several doctors whom he has consulted have assured him that the variegated skin is entirely healthy. They all confess that they are puzzled by his case. Greene says his body is almost white, and his feet are turning. He says his father was what is known as a "tender man," that is, he would blister under a hot sun. Greene also blisters when exposed to the hot sun for any length of time. His [illegible]—Augusta [illegible]

OVER THE CATARACT.

When the brave Stanley and his tireless followers were pushing their way into Central Africa, they came one day to the bank of a mighty river. Footsore and weary, they quickly launch their boats, and find rest and change in floating upon the smooth surface of the stream.

Soon, however, the watchful eye of the great explorer sees unmistakable signs of the near presence of a cataract. The current grows swift, tiny bubbles float by. The signal is given to land, and the party seek safety on the low, shelving bank.

One daring spirit, however, pushes his little canoe into the middle of the stream and goes resolutely forward, with the seeming intention of finding whether the river is navigable.

In vain his comrades shout and gesticulate, rushing wildly along the river bank in pursuit. Not until the loud thunder of falling water breaks upon his ear does he attempt to turn.

Alas, it is too late.

The oars are wrenched from his hands, the boat is tossed wildly about, a mere atom in the seething waters, and in a brief moment, which seems an age to the lookers on, it is dashed to pieces against a huge bowlder on the very brink of a frightful precipice.

In vain our comrades are kindly warning us of our danger. Our columns have often portrayed the fearful scourge that surrounds us. Often we hear the expression "Is this fearful scourge more prevalent than in olden times?"

We say "No."

In Brutus and Julius Cæsar's time, in the dark ages, we read of powerful men being stricken down. The same obstacles are met. The victim succumbs to the disease. The recent discoveries of the microscope have developed the real cause of so many terrible fatalities and brought out the fact that many of the symptoms which are called diseases are but symptoms of kidney disorder.

People do not die because of the kidneys ulcerating and destroying their spinal column, but because the poisonous waste matter is not extracted from the blood as it passes through the kidneys, the only blood purifying organs, but remains, forcing its way through the system, attacking the weakest organ.

The doctors call this a disease, when in reality it is but a symptom.

Understanding this, the reason why Warner's Safe Cure cures so many common diseases is plain. It removes the causes of disease by putting the kidneys in a healthy condition; enables them to perform their functions and remove the poisonous acids from the blood; purifies the blood and prevents the poisonous matter coursing through the system and attacking the weaker organs and producing a malady which the unsuspecting victim fears is, and the heartless practitioner pronounces, a disease, because of his inability to remove the cause.

He avoids the real cause and keeps his patient in ignorance because of his inability to cope with an advanced kidney difficulty.

Any honest practitioner will admit that there is nothing laid down in the old or in the modern medical works that is a specific for advanced kidney disorder. His bigotry and code prevent him from publicly adopting any preparation not discovered by his kind, and not recommended by his instructors 25 or 30 years before. He forgets that this is a progressive world, and that most of the great scientific and medical discoveries of the present day have been made outside of the medical profession.

The public, knowing these facts, should heed the warning and seek safety from the great danger that surrounds them, and look for help outside the profession too bigoted and too self-reliant, to learn or concede that science is outstripping their materia medica and leaving them and their obsolete methods far behind.

Zanzibar.

The destiny of the Island of Zanzibar, off the East Coast of Africa, and commanding maritime access to the Lake District of the interior of the Dark Continent, is at this time a consideration of high political importance, with regard to the division of German and British colonizing enterprise on the main-land, the combined naval blockade for the suppression of the slave trade, and the insurrection of the Suheli coast tribes against the German settlements. Zanzibar is an island forty-eight miles long and eighteen miles broad, formed by a reef of madrepore, with hills not above 400 feet high, and covered with luxuriant vegetation, the soil being in most parts extremely fertile. The population, altogether numbering 300,000, includes about 14,000 Banyans of the Hindoo trading class from India, many of whom are British subjects; Arabs, chiefly from Oman or from Muscat; Parsee merchants; free and slave blacks from different parts of Africa, from the Comoro Islands and Madagascar; and the native race, who live in huts of wattle and clay. The part of Zanzibar where the late Sultan Said-Burghash resided, is a fine bay or harbor on the west coast, fronting Africa, and the town has at least 60,000 inhabitants. The connection between Southern Arabia and Zanzibar is of a very ancient date, but was long interrupted by the Portuguese dominion, which on this part of the East African coast has been abandoned, though it is still a reality in the Mozambique Channel and far to the south. Zanzibar, however, did not exercise any functions of actual government on the main-land, while claiming a titular sovereignty along its sea-coast.—Frank Leslie's.

Athletic Sports of the Samoans.

The men of Samoa are a fine athletic race, and it did not take them long to find interest in many of the sports indulged in by their visitors. They soon learned to wrestle and to box, and a number of the natives will not only put on the gloves with you, but give you a lively tussle afterwards. They were apt pupils in cricket also, and can make a very interesting game with the English residents or the officers and sailors from the British men-of-war and merchantmen that sometimes visit their shores. They soon learn athletic sports but take little interest in manual labor of any kind. In fact until about ten or twelve years ago they used to import laborers from the Solomon Islands, who were held to service for a term of years, as were the Chinese coolies at one time in other parts of the world. There are yet in the Samoa and in the Fiji Islands many of these imported laborers, though the traffic has been suppressed for several years.

The Samoans are religious, but while professing Christianity and attending to the duties imposed upon them by the faith taught them by the missionaries, still, when in dire need of more than human aid, they also appeal to the wooden images which, they do not doubt, have brought their forefathers through so many dangers. They propose to leave no stone unturned, or no prayer unsaid, that might possibly bring them benefit in their hour of trouble.—New York Journal.

An Old Dynasty.

Just one hundred years before Columbus discovered America, generations before Shakespeare was born, more than two hundred years before Luther stirred up Germany with his preaching, a hundred years before the first Bible was printed, when all England was sleeping on straw, and when pins had yet to be known, the present dynasty of Corea sat upon its imperial throne and governed its cream-faced, almond-eyed subjects.

The blood that flows in the veins of Li Hi, the present King of Corea, is the same continuous royal stream which has flowed over the Corean throne since 1392. During that time twenty-nine kings have reigned and the power of each has been more despotic than that of the Czar of Russia. The royal blood has not weakened in its flowing, and his Majesty of to-day has the best qualities of his ancestors and is one of the most [illegible] of Asiatic rulers.—[illegible]

The Favorable Side.

It is a strange fact that the ugly girl is rather a favorite than otherwise. When we look at her, we lament the shape of her nose, we sigh over the cast in her eye, we deplore the dullness of her complexion, we can find nothing to praise; but perhaps she smiles, or she has a witching manner. She knows the spell which puts every one at his ease; she owns the charm which makes others pleased with themselves; and then we are wont to say that there is no such person as the ugly girl. The plain face which is alive with intelligence, which beams with an expression of refinement and good nature, which culture and high-mindedness animate, becomes sometimes finer and more effective than mere prettiness, mere pink and white loveliness, mere shapeliness and symmetry of feature. The ugly girl has the advantage over her pretty sister; she does not fade so early, or at least her fading is not so palpable, and she is usually a better looking matron than a girl.

We Are Ahead.

The success of the warships Vesuvius and Yorktown in achieving more than the contract requirements as to speed and horse power, is made more conspicuous by the failure of the British gunboat, the Spider, to do either. She was expected to show a speed of 20 knots per hour, but did not quite reach it. But this is not so important as the failure of her engines to develop the required horse-power. Our Yorktown has exceeded the horse-power guaranteed, and will earn a premium for her contractors. The Vesuvius has greatly exceeded the speed stipulated, and has become famous throughout the world.

THE Ericsson Coast Defense Co., has been incorporated in New York. The company devotes its attention to interesting the government of the United States in the practical results of the studies and experiments of the late Capt. John Ericsson, who devoted many years and much labor to the subject of our coast defences. The most remarkable of his inventions is the Destroyer.

To protect ourselves against the storms of passion, marriage with a good woman is a harbor in the tempest; but with a bad woman it is a tempest in the harbor.

Perfect health depends upon a perfect condition of the blood. Pure blood conquers every disease and gives new life to every decayed or affected part. Strong nerves and perfect digestion enables the system to stand the shock of sudden climatic changes. An occasional use of Brown's Iron Bitters will keep you in a perfect state of health. Don't be deceived by other iron preparations said to be just as good. The genuine is made only by Brown Chemical Company, Baltimore, Md. Sold by all dealers in medicines.

It Makes You Hungry

"I have used Paine's Celery Compound and it has had a salutary effect. It invigorated the system and I feel like a new man. It improves the appetite and facilitates digestion." J. T. COPELAND, Primus, S. C.

Spring medicine means more now-a-days than it did ten years ago. The winter of 1888-89 has left the nerves all fagged out. The nerves must be strengthened, the blood purified, liver and bowels regulated. Paine's Celery Compound—the Spring medicine of to-day—does all this, as nothing else can. Prescribed by Physicians, Recommended by Druggists, Endorsed by Ministers, Guaranteed by the Manufacturers to be

The Best Spring Medicine.

"In the spring of 1887 I was all run down. I would get up in the morning with so tired a feeling, and was so weak that I could hardly get around. I bought a bottle of Paine's Celery Compound, and before I had taken it a week I felt very much better. I can cheerfully recommend it to all who need a building up and strengthening medicine." Mrs. B. A. Dow, Burlington, Vt.

REMARKABLE CASE.

For two years I had rheumatism so bad that it disabled me for work and confined me to my bed for a whole year, during which time I could not even raise my hands to my head, and for 3 months could not move myself in bed, was reduced in flesh from 182 to 86 lbs. Was treated by best physicians, only to grow worse. Finally I took Swift's Specific, and soon began to improve. After a while was at my work, and for the past five months have been as well as I ever was—all from the effects of Swift's Specific.

Mercurial Poison.

Mercury is frequently injudiciously used by quack doctors in cases of malaria and blood poison. Its after-effect is worse than the original disease. B. B. B. (Botanic Blood Balm) contains no mercury, but will eliminate mercurial poison from the system. Write to Blood Balm Co., Atlanta, Ga., for book of convincing proof of its curative virtue.

A. F. Britton, Jackson, Tenn., writes: "I caught malaria in Louisiana, and when the fever at last broke, my system was saturated with poison, and I had sores in my mouth and knots on my tongue. I got two bottles B. B. B., which healed my tongue and mouth and made a new man of me."

Wm. Richmond, Atlanta, Ga., writes: "My wife could hardly see. Doctors called it syphilitic iritis. Her eyes were in a dreadful condition. Her appetite failed. She had pain in her joints and bones. Her kidneys were deranged also, and no one thought she could be cured. Dr. Gillam recommended B. B. B., which she used until her health was entirely restored."

K. P. B. Jones, Atlanta, Ga., writes: "I was troubled with copper colored eruptions, loss of appetite, pain in back, aching joints, debility, emaciation, loss of hair, sore throat, and great nervousness. B. B. B. put my system in fine condition."

Spring Sickness

May be avoided by taking the popular spring medicine, Hood's Sarsaparilla, in season. If you have not felt well during the winter, if you have been overworked, or closely confined in badly ventilated rooms or shops, you need a good tonic and blood purifier like Hood's Sarsaparilla. Take it early and you will ward off attacks of disease or escape the effects of impure blood and that tired feeling so common in the spring. Do not delay. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla now.

"I wish to state the benefit I derived from Hood's Sarsaparilla. I have used it in the spring for three years for debility and can say that I gained in flesh and strength after using one bottle. It also cured me of sick headache."—Mrs. F. H. ANDREWS, South Woodstock, Conn.

The saw mill, planing mill and half a million feet of lumber, belonging to O. A. Dukes, four miles southwest of Clanton, were totally destroyed by fire on Thursday. Loss, $25,000.

A spirited meeting of white Republicans was held in Birmingham on Wednesday, and organized by chosing these officers: Ex-Governor W. H. Smith, president; L. E. Parsons, vice-president; Robert Barber, Montgomery, secretary. The organization has an executive committee composed of two members from each congressional district and a vice-president in each county. Resolutions were adopted favoring white immigration, home protection, Federal aid to open rivers and harbors in the state, and the organization of a Republican Protective Tariff League.

GEORGIA.

Two Morman elders who had located in Glascock county, were waited upon at Gibson by a committee of citizens and warned to leave at once. They left.

The Arkwright Cotton Mills, in Savannah, valued at $100,000, were destroyed by fire on Tuesday. The fire originated in the engine room, and was caused by an overheated journal.

Prince Law, a negro living on Springfield plantation, near Savannah, killed his four-year-old child as a sacrifice to the devil. Law is locked up. He admitted the killing and says he was ordered to do it by Heaven to appease Satan. He is a religious fanatic.

Col. S. A. Darnell, the commander of Blue Ridge post, G. A. R., of Jasper, recently appointed U. S. district attorney in Atlanta, has appointed Gen. William Phillips, of Marietta, as his clerk, and raised the salary from $1,200 to $3,000. Gen. Phillips was a Confederate soldier, and was formerly the assistant district attorney under Mr. Hill.

Col. Evan P. Howell, editor of the Constitution of Atlanta, and Henry W. Grady, of the same paper, with the authority of Col. Wm. Lowndes Calhoun, president of the Fulton County Confederate Veterans, have started a subscription to erect a Confederate Home in Georgia. Already $20,000 has been subscribed, and several soldiers who fought on the Federal side have sent in liberal donations. Governor Gordon, who inaugurated a similar movement five years ago, when he was residing in New York, has gone into the movement with his usual enthusiasm, and no doubt his plan inaugurated five years ago, will be adopted.

Many people visited the ruins of the house of Mr. Woods, near Clayton which was burned and in which six persons were burned to death. Mr. Woods, being a millwright, is away much of the time, and did not know of the disaster until he walked up to the spot and saw nothing but a heap of ashes. When told that the bodies of his wife and five children were in ashes, he became uncontrolable, and had to be borne away. Mrs. Woods must have been awakened by the flames to find herself in the midst of the conflagration, and rushing to the children, all were suffocated and burned to death. There was a camping party near by, who rushed up to the fire, but not in time to save life.

MISSOURI.

The carpenters' strike in St. Louis is still on, with no evidences of weakening on either side. Both the Masters' Builders Association and Carpenters' Brotherhood, hold regular meetings, the latter daily, but cannot come together on the one point of recognition of the brotherhood. On hours and renumeration both agree. President Cook, of the Master Builders' Association, says, however, that he does not believe the master builders will recede from their position, and the prospects for a settlement of the differences are very slim.

The new status of the Virgin, in the chapel of the Convent of the Sacred Heart at St. Louis, has provoked considerable criticism, even from the inmates of the convent. It is described as being a young girl in the bloom of youth, and when it arrived the nuns were more than astonished; but they were assured that it was done in Rome under the supervision of one of the highest authorities of the church, the desire being to have the Virgin considered in her youth as well as in her maturity. The statue stands seven feet eight inches high, and was carved from a single block of Carrara [illegible]

KENTUCKY.

The Louisville Bridge & Iron Company's machine shops were completely destroyed by fire on Tuesday, causing a loss of $90,000. The shops were in a one story corrugated iron building about 400 feet in length. The fire is supposed to be incendiary.

LOUISIANA.

Beginning with May 1, all vessels from the tropical parts of America will be subject to quarantine at New Orleans.

MARYLAND.

A great sugar refinery is to be established in Baltimore, with a capital stock of $1,000,000.

Cardinal Gibbons, of Baltimore, has issued a circular letter to the Catholic clergymen of his diocese, directing that a special meeting be held in all the churches April 30th, the hundredth anniversary of the inauguration of George Washington as president of the United States, and that the church bells be rung for half an hour, as an expression of joy and thanksgiving.

NORTH CAROLINA.

A great number of letters are being received by their former employers in North Carolina, from the negroes who left the Goldsboro section for Kansas. All the letters beg for money with which to purchase tickets to the old homes. The letters are pitiful in their pleading for help. All of them say that the writers only pray for one thing, and that is to get home again.

The particulars of a disastrous fire at Smithfield, the county seat of Johnson county, were received at Charlotte. In all, sixty buildings were destroyed, twenty-eight being business houses. The town has only a population of about a thousand, and has no fire department. The fire originated in the wheelwright shop of S. R. & J. A. Morgan, and, blown by a gale of wind, soon reduced the entire business portion of the town to ashes.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

At Leesville, a town two miles north of Batesburg, the marshal arrested a drunken Irishman and put him in the guard house for safe keeping. During the night the guard house was consumed by fire, and the poor unfortunate was roasted alive. He is said to have been a sewing machine repairer, and his name is supposed to be John Doyle.

The Rivers' Bridge Memorial Association of Kearse will hold its annual meeting in about one month. Gen. Rusk now a member of Harrison's cabinet, will be invited to deliver the memorial address. Gen. Rusk was brevetted brigadier general in 1865, about one mile from the association's cemetery, for bravery in the battle of Salkehatchie, as a Federal soldier.

VIRGINIA.

Further reports of damage by the recent storm are coming in, and show that the loss of oyster vessels on both bay and seaside is much larger than at first supposed, and the loss of life correspondingly greater. Three bodies were washed ashore near Cape Charles Wednesday, one of which was that of Capt. Channock, of Eastville.

The reports which are coming in from Norfolk, Princess Anne and Nansemond counties, show that serious damage was sustained in these counties from the storm and tides. In many localities cattle and other property were destroyed by the extraordinary high tide. The potato crop in the trucking sections will be generally injured by water, which will rot the seed in the ground.

FIRED ON US.

Capt. Stubbs, of the schooner Carrie A. Bucknam, which arrived at New York on Wednesday from St. Domingo City, reports that when off Saona Island, at about noon, he sighted a vessel steaming towards his vessel from land, then distant six or eight miles. The craft proved to be a Dominican war vessel. She laid her course to intercept the Bucknam, but could not do so owing to the strong breeze then prevailing, and fell astern half or three-quarters of a mile. When nearly in the schooner's wake, much to the surprise of the crew she fired a shot which struck the water only a few yards from the Bucknam's stern. She then gave chase, but with a good breeze the schooner soon distanced her. After keeping up the chase for about two hours, she gave it up and, putting about, steamed for land. What her errand was can only be conjectured, as the Bucknam was far outside of their jurisdiction and on the high seas, where they could have no legitimate right to overhaul her. The American flag was flying at the schooner's peak all the time, it having been hoisted as soon as the steamer was made out to be a war vessel.

E. B. Park, of Upper Mystic, Conn., is the champion wood-chopper of the State. For a wages of $5 he recently felled, cut and split into merchantable wood four cords of chestnut wood within six hours and five minutes—an average of a cord in an hour and a half.

Good order prevails at Panama. The troubles which were feared on account of the stoppage of work, have not occurred.

The freight houses of the Boston & Lowell division of the Boston & Maine Railroad, situated between Lowell, Minot and Nashua streets, Boston, Mass., were burned on Tuesday evening, only a portion of the walls remaining. The loss will be $500,000.

The steamship Chattahoochee, of Savannah, Ga., arrived in New York on Wednesday, three days overdue and pretty well stove up. She encountered one of the heaviest gales ever experienced on the Atlantic coast, and came near being wrecked.

It has been discovered that, owing to the faulty construction of a New Jersey law recently passed in regard to city governments, Trenton will be without a mayor for three weeks, and that the newly authorized fire and police commissioner cannot be appointed.

Another attempt to wreck the west-bound limited vestbule express on the Pittsburg, Ft. Wayne & Chicago Railroad, which passed through Canton, Ohio, about midnight on Wednesday, was made near Louisville, at the same place that the attempt to wreck the same train was made the night before.

The town of Fairburg, Ill., has been quarantined on account of the prevalence of scarlet fever. There are more than twenty cases of the disease in the little town, and six deaths have occurred. The families, in which the disease prevails, are not permitted to leave the premises, and provisions are furnished them by a committee appointed by the town board.

A large meeting of farmers was held at Anderson, Ind., on Tuesday, and pledges were made, to pay no more than 15 cents per pound for trust binding twine, and not in any manner to patronize any merchant offering such twine for sale at a greater price. The farmers declare they will allow their hogs to eat the wheat in the fields before submitting to the twine trust.

At the closing session of the Mormon Conference held in Salt Lake City, on Tuesday, George O. Cannon read the statistics of the church, which are, 12 apostles, 70 patriarchs, 3,719 high priests, 11,705 elders, 2,069 priests, 2,292 teachers, 11,610 deacons, 81,899 families, 115,915 officers and members and 49,302 under eight years of age—a total Mormon population of 158,911.

The committee appointed in Sydney, New South Wales, to investigate the discovery of Pasteur for the extermination of rabbits, have made a report that upon experiment, they found that the rabbits which had been inoculated with the virus of chicken cholera, or which ate food which had been infected with virus died, but that the disease was not communicated by one rabbit to another.

Lord Lonsdale, a British nobleman, who made quite a stir in social circles in New York about a year ago in connection with the divorce suit of Violet Cameron, an actress, and then went on a wild goose chase of Arctic exploration by himself, has just been heard from. He lies at Kodiac, Alaska, with a broken arm, arriving there starving and exhausted, and says he is disgusted with exploring.

A few months ago burglars broke into the residence of John Reilly, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., chloroformed the family and stole nearly $1,000. On Monday, Father O'Hearn, pastor of St. Mary's Roman Catholic church, handed Reilly $700, which he said had been given him that evening by a prominent man, who had made a confession to him, and had told the story of the robbery. The story is a secret of the confessional.

Rev. Sam Small conducted one of the most exciting temperance meetings of the prohibition campaign at Pittsburg, Pa., on Wednesday night. He was denouncing the liquor dealers vigorously, as "law-breakers," when Jacob Keller, a wealthy liquor dealer, objected. "He is one of them," cried a man in the audience. "You're a liar," cried Keller. The latter became demonstrative, and was ejected from the church amid great excitement. Resolutions were adopted requesting the courts to refuse Keller a renewal of license. One old lady became so much excited that she rushed up to Kellar as he was leaving the church, and struck him in the face with her fist.

An eastbound train on the Santa Fe and California was just leaving Lorenzo station, which is fifty miles from Chicago, on Wednesday when an accident occurred. Attached to the rear of the train was the private car of J. E. Hart, mayor of Brookline, Mass., and a director of the California Central road. The party in the car consisted of Mr. Hart and his son, Henry Robert Hart; his niece, Miss Winslow; a porter, known only as Harry, and a cook. Just as the train was pulling out of the station an extra fast stock train, following, ran into the rear of the passenger train at a good speed, demolishing the private car and damaging the freight engine so that a large quantities of steam escaped, scalding those who had escaped from the effects of the crash. The killed were: Miss Winslow, Henry Hart, the porter and the cook. J. F. Hart and his wife were badly scalded.

The tugs Saugatuck and Cuyler, having on board United States Marshal Waters, of Grand Rapids, Sheriff McKenzie, of "Soo," and Sheriff Metevier and thirty deputies from Detroit, Mich., all heavily armed, left to capture the barges having Moiles Bros., mill aboard, and a desperate conflict between the opposing factions is feared. The barges are now lying behind Trout Island, in American waters. They are badly cut by ice and the captains are afraid to venture out into the lake with them. This is the mill which the owners were endeavoring to carry to Canada to avoid debts in Michigan.

AGAINST CIDER.

An interesting liquor case has just been decided at Mount Pleasant, Iowa. The defendants were tried on the ordinary liquor selling indictment. The witnesses had, as shown by the evidence, bought cider in the defendant's restaurant; the question was, whether or not cider is classed with intoxicating liquors. Judge Travers ruled that while cider is at first a non-intoxicant, it became intoxicating in the course of time.

THE IRISH MOVEMENT.

The municipal council of the Irish national league on Tuesday in New York, discussed the attitude recently assumed by Patrick Egan, recently appointed minister to Chili, and Alexander Sullivan, in asserting the existence of treachery among some Irishmen to the Irish national cause. Resolutions were adopted, requesting Charles Stewart Parnell to appoint a committee of ten, "whose standing and character shall be a guarantee of their impartiality and good faith," to make a thorough investigation of the charges.

HARRISON ARRESTED.

Russell Harrison, son of President Harrison, was arrested in New York on Thursday, on the charge of having published in his paper, the Montana Live Stock Exchange, an article taken from a Buffalo paper, accusing ex-Governor John Schuyler Crosby, of Montana, with having stolen jewels from a Washington lady.

Dr. L. M. Dunton, president of Claflin University, is visiting the machine shops and foundries in Charleston. He explained that he was on the lookout for some machinery and intimated that he had succeeded in finding what he wanted. "We intend," said he, "to go into a new business at Claflin, or, at least, to add a new feature to our curriculum. What we are trying to do is to increase the scope of the college in the direction of the mechanic arts—in fact, to convert it largely into an industrial school or college; and with that object we propose to erect a large building on the college campus. It occurred to me that the state farm which we operate has just the kind of clay that is best adapted for brick-making, and as we have a pretty large roll of students, I don't see any reason why we should not make our own bricks out of our own soil, and for our own building."

A DEADLY PIPE.

Robert Schideler and wife, of Manson, Iowa, were driving to town on Tuesday when a spark from Schideler's pipe ignited the clothing of his wife, and as the wind was blowing a stiff gale, she was enveloped in flames in an instant. Terror stricken, she jumped from the buggy on one side and her husband on the other. He did all in his power to quench the flames, but to no avail. The grass took fire around them and Mrs. Schideler was completely enveloped in a fiery shroud, and died before her husband's eyes.

FILLING THE OFFICES.

Close of the Special Session of the United States Senate.

Two Nominations Rejected and Eight Not Acted Upon.

The Senate's Work Summarized.

Of the 350 nominations sent to the Senate during the special session by President Harrison the following were rejected:

Murat Halstead to be Minister to Germany.

Isadore S. Loventhal to be Postmaster at Modesto, Cal.

The following remained unacted upon (and therefore died) at the end of the session:

William H. Whiteman to be Associate Justice of the Territory of New Mexico.

Edwin I. Kursheedt to be Marshal for the Eastern District of Lousiana.

Postmasters—Kittrell O. Halders at Minot, Dak.; Carl C. Crippen at Eustis, Fla.; Burt C. Drake at Gainesville, Fla.; Robert F. Bebout at Rushville, Ind.; George E. Nicholson at Ness City, Kan.; Samuel C. Moore at Findlay, Ohio.

President Harrison's nominations were contained in 284 messages. During the special session of the Senate at the beginning of President Cleveland's term he sent to the Capitol 418 messages. Eighteen of his nominations failed to receive confirmation, but there were no rejections. At the last session of Congress during Hayes's Administration the Senate failed to act on 196 of his nominations, and rejected three—an unequaled record.

She has a sweet, Madonna-like face, big dark eyes, and a soft, low voice. Mrs. Clymer is a widow, who was left a large fortune by her husband. She possesses exquisite taste in dress, and is, in fact, an ideal President.

STANLEY AND EMIN.

A Report That They are Marching Together to the East Coast.

Advices received at Brussels, Belgium, from Stanley Falls state that Arabs who have arrived there report that Henry M. Stanley and Emin Pasha were heard from in February. They were then marching toward Zanzibar, with several thousand men, women and children. They also had 6000 tusks of ivory. The Arabs who brought news of Stanley and Emin arrived at Stanley Falls in February. They claimed to have seen Stanley several months before that time.

This report, says the New York Post, seems to be a confirmation of the rumor, published recently, that Stanley was on his way to the East Coast, and it would also indicate that he had safely rejoined Emin according to the plan mentioned in the letter just published, and that the latter had determined finally to return to civilization with all the men, women and children attached to his command. This would apparently fulfil the main object of Stanley's expedition, although there is a political side to it yet to be explained.

THREE RAILWAY TRAGEDIES.

Twelve Persons Killed and Many Injured in the West.

A collision occurred on the Northern Pacific, near Helena, Montana, by which three passengers were killed and three wounded. The east bound passenger train leaving Helena ran into a double header freight train standing on the side track, wrecking three engines and piling them in a promiscuous mass on the track.

Of the killed only one was identified, Charles Wood, a fireman, whose home is in [illegible]. The injured were [illegible], L. North, mail agent, and Joseph [illegible]. The station agent is blamed for not turning the switch, knowing that the passenger train was due.

Alex. Wilson had the highly respectable white republican protective tariff league yelling "police" before the meeting was fairly organized.

Jno. G. Barbour, of this county, was one of the "faithful" at the Republican meeting at Birmingham last week. He was made vice-president and general manager for Chilton county of some part of the machinery.

A planter of Elberton, Ga., reported a few days ago that not less than 10,000 wild geese were feeding in his oat fields and that one of his little boys had found one of their nests with 200 eggs in it. This is almost a match for the Birmingham Age-Herald's first of April yarn.

After reading the leading editorial in the Age-Herald of last Friday any one would think that paper was aiding Lew. Parsons in organizing his White Republican Protective Tariff League in Alabama. The Birmingham papers are making much ado over Parsons pow-wow. While this paper favors protection to home industries, it wants none of the Republican kind, which means merely protection of the pockets of Republican office-holders and ballot buyers. A Republican party in Alabama without the negro contingent has humbug written all over its face. These highly respectable white republican protective tariff leaguers are after "pap" from the public crib.

The people of Tuskaloosa and of Northport, the Tuskaloosa papers and the Northport Breeze are all working earnestly for the Alabama Midland extension from Montgomery to Tuskaloosa. The Midland is the road for Tuskaloosa to work for to the exclusion of all other projects of like character. When she gets the Midland it would not be necessary to paw the air and "raise the dust" every season in efforts to induce other roads to come there. With Tuskaloosa's wonderful natural advantages one more road would build such a city there that other roads would be anxious to seek her limits.

Since writing the foregoing we find the following telegram in the daily press:

Tuskaloosa, April 15.—The committee of ten who were appointed to raise the $90,000 required by the Alabama Midland railroad to extend their road here reported to a meeting of citizens at the court house to-day that they had raised $98,000. Our citizens are jubilant.

The road if built will pass through our county, and it is thought that it will cross the E. T. V. & G. road at Maplesville or Stanton.

In the Age-Herald of Friday morning it was stated in a Dispatch from Washington that a "prominent Southern leader" had met a sharp rebuff from the President. It now turns out that this "prominent leader" so-called, was none other than our own Chairman Moseley.

It appears that Mr. Moseley called at the White House with some of his followers to again urge on the President the propriety of appointing him pie dispenser in general for Alabama.

When he had his say Mr. Harrison looked at him, and in that icy-cold manner, which is his most marked characteristic, said; "Mr. Moseley, you have been here very frequently and I know all about you. You need not put yourself to any inconvenince to call again upon the business which brought you here to-day. I would be in a very sorry condition, indeed, if I had to resort to you as the medium through which to dispense official positions in Alabama. Good morning."

This unexpected response from the President is said to have affected the alleged leader from Alabama very much like that chunk of old red sand stone alluded to by Bret Harte, affected the man with whom it came in collision. Mr. Moseley didn't exactly "curl upon the floor," but he smiled a very sickly smile indeed, and his interest in "the subsequent proceedings" is, no doubt very much blunted.

Cooper's Sayings.

Editor View.—Wishing your readers to know that we are not unmindful of all their interests and supposing they would like to know that we are doing well, I am prompted to say that we are in general good health, with peace and harmony abounding.

The farming interest is being pushed with unusual energy, observing the signal which is economy.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Wells are visiting relatives in Texas. We are wishing them a pleasant trip.

Politics are as dead down here as Dykes, and matrimony which is more pleasant has taken its place.

Mr. Jno. Bullard, formerly of Coosa, and Miss Mary McKinney were married yesterday evening at the residence of the bride's father, your scribe officiating. May they have a long and pleasant journey through life.

Success to the View and prosperity to its readers.

Jemison Locals.

We are glad to see Col. V. S. Murphey out on the streets of our village again after several months of sickness, and hope he will soon be restored to health.

Our handsome young friend, Mr. S. J. Luckett, has returned to Jemison, we hope to make it his home.

Mrs. S. J. Catts, of Tompkinsville, Fla., has been visiting relatives in Jemison.

Mrs. C. H. Smith, of Birmingham, has been visiting her old home.

Miss Dedie Maull, of Strasburg, and Miss Lula Wall, of Huntsville, gladdened our village by their sunny presence last Sunday.

Among the old persons of Chilton county deserving of mention is Mrs. Penny Motley, of Jemison. She was born in North Carolina in 1797, and is therefore in her 92 year. At the age of 8 years she moved to Ga., lived there till grown and married; then moved to Autauga Co., this state where she has raised a large family. She has been living with her daughter Mrs. J. P. Allen at Jemison for the past ten years.

She is feeble, but her health is good for one of her age; her appetite is fine; her mind is perfectly clear and her recollecton good Her eye-sight is failing.

Weather Crop Bulletin.

"There was a large percentage of sunshine during the past seven days and the temperature was about normal. On one or two nights the themometer fell to a degree near freezing and there was a light frost in low lands in north and middle Alabama.

"Rain fell on the 9th in the northern portions of the state, but in middle and southern Alabama observers report no precipitation during the seven days.

"The crop outlook continues favorable, and the land in the upper portions of the state is in good condition for cultivation. The observer at Union Springs (Rev. J. L. Moultree.) however reports that the ground is hard, cloddy and is too dry to permit the germ of the cotton seed to reach the surface. There has been no rain in that part of the state since the first of the month. The prospects for a fine yield of fruit are encouraging. The observer at New Market (Dr. Geo. D. Norris) says the wheat is the best known for several years, and should the weather continue favorable, large crops of grain, hay and fruits will be made.

Since this report was sent good rains have fallen through this section.—View.

An Act

To authorize Judges of Probate to pay over to minors certain funds and take their receipts for the same.

Section 1.—Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Alabama, That in all cases where the Judges of Probate are under the law custodians of funds belonging to minors, such judges may, in all such cases where the minor is of the age of eighteen years and of sound mind, pay such funds to such minors when the amount thereof does not exceed one hundred dollars, and the receipt of the minor shall be a full acquittance and discharge of the liabilities of the Judge, notwithstanding the minority of such parties to whom the funds are going.

Approved, February 20th, 1889.

O, What a Cough.

Will you heed the warning. The signal perhaps of the sure approach of that more terrible disease, Consumption Ask yourselves if you can afford, for the sake of saving 50 cents, to run the risk and do nothing for it. We know from experience that Shiloh's Cure will cure your cough. It never fails. This explains why more than a million bottles were sold the past year. It relieves croup and Whooping Cough at once. Mothers do not be without it. For lame back, side or chest, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by A. E. Bivings, Clanton.

An Act

To authorize the filing and recording of certain deeds of conveyance therein named in the offices of the Probate Courts of the State.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Alabama, That any deed or conveyance of any kind, estate or any interest therein, heretofore made and executed as required by law at the date of its execution, and which has not been filed and recorded within the time prescribed by law, may be at any time within two years after the passage of this act filed and recorded as required by law for other deeds of conveyance, and when so filed and recorded said deeds have the same force and effect in all things as they would legally have had if they had been filed and recorded within the time required by law at the time of the execution of such deeds, except as to bona fide creditors and purchasers without notice of the making and execution of such deed.

Approved February 21, 1889.

The Great Newspaper of the South.

The Age-Herald, in addition to covering the field most thoroughly with their bright and newsy daily, is getting out the Great Weekly of the South. It is a mammoth 12-page paper at only $1 a year, with a ticket for every subscriber to the largest gift distribution of over $8,000 in valuable and useful articles ever offered by a newspaper. It is a paper for the farm and fireside. Its Agricultural Department is full of practical information for the farmer, while its Household Department renders it a treasure to every housewife in the land. A special feature is also made of a department for Our Little Folks.

We will furnish the Weekly Age-Herald and our paper one year for $2 and give each subscriber a ticket to the gift distribution.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Miss Dalee Thornton, is on visit to Birmingham.

Mr. R. Ehrman is on a business trip to Cincinnati.

Mr. Jonathan Bice, of Strasburg, was in town Monday.

Mr. W. A. Collier is attending supreme court in Montgomery.

Rev. J. P. Sanders was in town Tuesday on important business.

Mr. O. A. Duke has gone on a business trip to the Northern part of the state.

Miss Myrtle Alvis, of Brierfield, is visiting her sister, Mrs. R. Ehrman in our city.

Messrs E. V. Jones & A. D. Bentley will be in Clanton April 25th, and 26th.

Justice A. C. Mims, of Kincheon, visited town Monday on legal business.

Mrs. Martin, of Union Springs, is visiting Mrs. M. C. McRee in Clanton.

Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Evans, of Randolph, visited relatives here the past week.

A fine rain fell in this section Sunday and Sunday night. It was much needed.

A traveling commedian gave a peformance at the Academy Wednesday night.

Mr. F. R. McCary, a leading citizen of Cooper's neighborhood was in Clanton Saturday.

Mr. Lee Holt has been in Columbiana for a few days attending court as a witness.

Mr. H. M. Ferguson, a good farmer from near Cooper's Station gave us a pleasant call last week.

All who want money, remember the dates and meet Messrs. Jones & Bentley, with your land deeds.

Mrs. W. A. Collier visited her daughter, Miss Inez, at the Judson Institute, Marion, the past week.

Mr. Foss and family, of Massachusetts, have become residents of our town and occupy the Adams place.

The Methodists hope to have their church seated in less than a month. They would be glad if some body would come forward and help them.

If any one is visiting your household send their names to the VIEW. A courtesy due strangers is to make their presence known to the community, that they may receive such attention as will give them a favorable impression of our town.

A Pleasing Sense of health and strength renewed, and of ease and comfort, follows the use of Syrup of Figs, as it acts in harmony with nature to effectually cleanse the system when costive or bilious. For sale in 50 cent and $1 bottles by all leading druggists. july 19

Spring Goods.

New dress goods now on sale at low prices for cash. Shoes for spring trade now in. Groceries all the year, the present is no exception. Everything guaranteed as represented. Fair dealing & fair prices is my plan to hold trade, and my sales will prove that the people are treated well. Give me a call.

Respectfully
W. L. SAMPEY.

Work has commenced on the Episcopal church building, and it will soon add to the importance of our town

It is about time for our champion marble players to select their "taws" and start the game. We will back the Clanton marble players against the State.

Mr. John W. Bray, of Birmingham, visited our city last week. He seemed much pleased with what he saw of our section, and spoke of investing here at an early day.

Claude McRee brings the VIEW an egg laid by one of his hens which is shaped like a small gourd. It is the most eggs-traordinary thing we have ever noticed from eggdom.

We hear of the burning of the residence of Mr. J. W. Maddox near Strasburg on Wednesday night last. Mr. Maddox lost every thing in the way of household furniture by the burning.

The saw mill of Mr. O. A. Duke with the planing mill, commissary and 500,000 feet of lumber were all destroyed by fire on last Thursday. No insurance and the total loss is thought to be near $20,000. Mr. Duke is already rebuilding.

For Sale at a Bargain.

The neat cottage residence of J. C. Lawrence is offered for sale at the low price of $500, all cash, or $600, one-third cash, balance in one and two years. A splendid opportunity to purchase a nice house cheap. Parties desiring to purchase can apply at this office.

The Wrought Iron Range Co. which has established Division head-quarters at Verbena with Mr. W. W. Ballew in charge, has an advertisment in the VIEW which will attract attention. Mr. Ballew is an affable, agreeable and accommodating gentleman, and will be pleased to fill orders for ranges from any quarter.

Married, at the residence of the bride's parents, in Montgomery, on the 16th inst., by Rev. T. DeWitte Burkhead, Mr. W. E. Fry, of Verbena, and Miss Mamie E. Bivings, of Montgomery. The ceremony took place in the early morning and immediately after the young couple left on a visit to relatives of the groom at Linnville, Tenn. The bride is pleasantly remembered by friends in Clanton who wish for her and hers much prosperity and happiness through life.

Card of Thanks.

ED. CHILTON VIEW: Dear Sir—Through your valued paper, I desire to return my sincere thanks to friends and employees for timely aid, in my late disaster. Also to hosts of friends elsewhere for expressions of kindness and sympathy. The ashes I consign to the breezes. The memories of brotherly thoughtfulness will remain with me to stimulate me to renewed efforts. Yours truly,

O. A. DUKE.

Clanton, Ala., April, 1889.

ED. VIEW:—In the program for the Teachers' Institute there is a mistake about my having received instructions from State Superintendent of Education not to pay teachers who do not attend the Institute. The State Superintendent never gave me such instructions; but I will not pay teachers who do not attend the Institute, and believe the State Superintendent will sustain me. Please make this correction and oblige, Yours truly,

R. E. R. HICKS.

Montevallo, Ala., April, '89.

The Committee at Work.

The committee is at work to advertise our county and its resources. It is composed of men who are not likely to do any humbug work. It is no very easy task set them and they do not expect to satisfy all with the work done. Each member of the committee is now at work on the subject assigned him, and the work will speak for itself when finished. There is need of co-operation on the part of the moneyed interests of the county, which we feel sure the committee will not fail to obtain.

Dr. William Gwin, late of Virginia, at one time a correspondent for a Tennessee paper, made the following striking illustration: "I have been in battles; I have heard the rattle of musketry; I have heard the roar of cannons; I have heard the expiring groans of the dying; I have heard every melancholy sound; but the most melancholy sound that ever greeted my ear, was the rattle of the scoop on the bottom of the flour barrel; accompanied by a still small voice, saying 'husband, the flour and meal are both out.'"

Programme for the Teachers Institute.

MR. EDITOR: The following is the program for the Teachers Institute, to be held in Clanton on the 26th and 27th of April:

The law requires the teachers to attend the Institutes.

Unless teachers comply with the law, they will not be paid. I believe I will be sustained in the non-payment of any teacher, who willfully refuses to attend the Institutes held in the county. The object of the Institutes is to make teachers more efficient in the school-room. No Teacher is required to take part except those named in the programme. Write at once to Prof. A. J. Scott at Clanton so that he can procure a room for you while attending the Institute. Let all the teachers come and be sure to be on time. Every body is invited.

Very Respectfully,
R. E. R. HICKS.
County Supt. of Education.

Carried Home.

Mr. A. J. Brooks, one of the leading merchants of Verbena, who had been in this city to undergo an operation for the purpose of removing some diseased bone from one of his legs, was able to be removed yesterday and left for his home on the South and North train last night.

Mr. Brooks was moved on a cot and was made as comfortable as possible in the baggage car. Mr. Brooks' trouble was the result of a wound received by him during the war. The operation for his relief was most successfully performed by Doctors Gaston and Michel.—Dispatch.

An Act

To fix the rate of taxation in this State.

Section I. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Alabama, That on all property liable to taxation in this State there shall be assessed and collected a tax of four and one half (4½) mills for the fiscal ending September 30th, 1890, and for each year thereafter, four mills.

Approved February 20th, 1889.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury, as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucus surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from regular physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, contains no mercury and is taken internally, and acts directly upon the blood and mucus surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co.

It Has Never Failed.

Botanic Blood Balm, (B. B. B.) has cured hundred of cases of Scrofula, Eczema and other contagious blood diseases, after other treatment had been tried and failed. You do yourself and family great injustice unless you give this excellent remedy a trial. Send to Blood Balm Co., Atlanta, Ga., for illustrated "Book of Wonders" filled with letters from persons cured by B. B. B.

MRS. M. J. ROSSMAN, Greensboro, Ga., writes: "I have a lady friend who has been entirely cured of SCROFULA of an ugly scrofulous breaking out of the skin, and the use of two bottles of B. B. B. effected an entire cure. I know of several cases of blood diseases cured speedily by the use of B. B. B.

E. G. TINSLEY writes: My mother and sister used B. B. B. for scrofula and ulcerated sore throat SORE THROAT and received more benefit from its use than all other remedies they ever used.

A. H. NICHOLS, 119 Gray St., Atlanta, Ga., writes: "My wife for several years has been suffering with what physicians term Eczema, affecting her whole body, limbs and scalp. It appeared that her whole skin would shed off in scales about once a week, leaving the surface red and tender, and sometimes cracked open. Her general health failed, and for a while it was thought she would die, as several doctors and numerous patent medicines failed to give any relief. ECZEMA My brother-in-law, Mr. J. B. Cummings, was selling the B.B.B and insisted that I should try it on my wife. I did so, and to our utter astonishment she commenced improving at once, and three bottles, costing only $3, effected an entire cure. It is wonderfully quick in action."

D. M. MCRAE, Waynesboro, Miss., writes: "My BOILS sister was aflicted with boils which sadly impaired her health, and she lost flesh and strength each day. One bottle of B. B. B. acted like magic and produced a complete cure."

PISO'S CURE FOR

TWENTY-FIVE CENTS

Piso's Cure for Consumption is also the best Cough Medicine.

If you have a Cough without disease of the Lungs, a few doses are all you need. But if you neglect this easy means of safety, the slight Cough may become a serious matter, and several bottles will be required.

CONSUMPTION

Piso's Remedy for Catarrh gives immediate relief. Catarrhal virus is soon expelled from the system, and the diseased action of the mucous membrane is replaced by healthy secretions.

The dose is small. One package contains a sufficient quantity for a long treatment.

CATARRH

A Cold in the Head is relieved by an application of Piso's remedy for Catarrh. The comfort to be got from it in this way is worth many times its cost.

Easy and pleasant to use.

JAPAN'S PRESS.

NOVEL FEATURES OF ORIENTAL NEWSPAPERS.

Columns of Japanese Papers Run From Right to Left—"Straw Editors"—A Japanese Composing Room.

It is only eighteen years since the first newspaper was published in Japan, says Frank G. Carpenter. Still, 61,000,000 copies of newspapers were sold in 1884, and the increase of 1879 was double that of 1876. At present Japan has 575 daily and weekly newspapers, and its dailies number ninety-seven. It publishes thirty-five law magazines and 111 scientific periodicals. It has thirty-five medical journals and an equal number of religious newspapers. Its people read eight different story papers, and 102 papers cater to the agricultural, commercial and industrial classes. It has its Punch or Puck, and this is filled with cartoons and witticisms taking off the public men of the Mikado Empire just as Puck and Judge do those of our Republic. All of these papers are published in Japanese. They are read by the natives of the country, and the work upon them is done entirely by native labor. They are the outgrowth of the new civilization, and they are the great educators of the people.

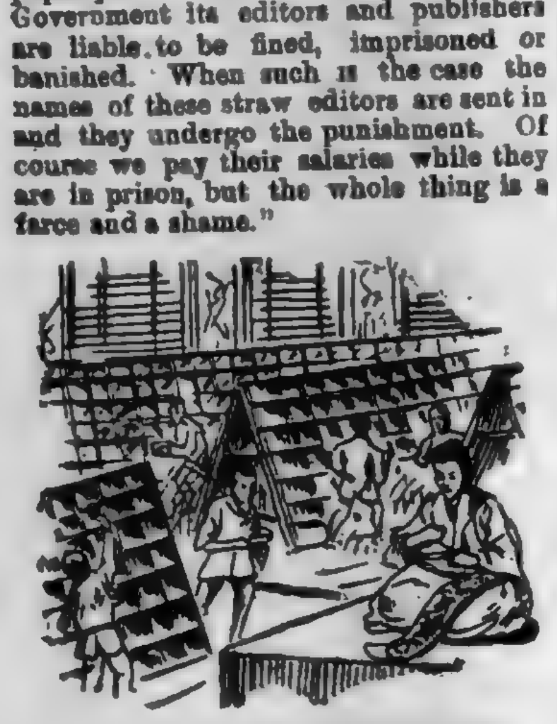
A Japanese newspaper looks strange to foreign eyes. If one could take about 1,000,000 tea box letters and put them in six-inch rows up and down four or eight pages about the size of this newspaper he might get some idea of the general appearance of the paper. If he could know that each of these letters represented a whole word and that half a dozen of them made a sentence, he might add to his conception. His picture however, would be far from a true one. The Japanese papers are the direct opposites of ours. The columns run from right to left across the page instead of up and down it, and the lines are perpendicular instead of horizontal. You begin at the top of a line to read instead of at the side, and when you have read about six inches of these ideographic characters you come to the column line and go back to the top and read down again. The columns are twice as wide as ours, and they do not seem to have the flaming headlines that prevail in American newspapers. The periods, instead of being dots, are circles as big around as a pea, and there are no such things as capitals. The Japanese newspaper office uses five thousand different characters, and these are a mixture of the Japanese and the Chinese.

A JAPANESE NEWSBOY.

The first part of a Japanese journal is made up of official notifications and official reports. Then come the contents of the paper, and directly after this the editorials. "This part," said one of the leading editors as he pointed to me the hieroglyphics composing it, "is the brains of the paper, and the press is a great maker of public opinion and a strong factor in all governmental matters in Japan."

"But where are the editors' names?" said I.

"The names of the real editors of a Japanese newspaper," was the reply, "are never published in the paper. Our nominal editors are men of straw, whom we employ for this purpose. They get from $20 to $30 a month as salaries, and they act as proofreaders or local reporters. We have, as you know, a rigid censorship of the press, and whenever a paper publishes anything offensive to the Government its editors and publishers are liable to be fined, imprisoned or banished. When such is the case the names of these straw editors are sent in and they undergo the punishment. Of course we pay their salaries while they are in prison, but the whole thing is a farce and a shame."



A SCENE IN THE COMPOSING ROOM.

The editors' names do not hence appear on the editorial page, and they are in the last column and last line of the newspaper. They stand at the end after the advertisements. Following the editorials come the telegrams and local news. These are mixed together and there are a number of columns of them. Then comes the foreign news and then correspondence and letters of travel.

It takes about 150 men to run the Nichi Nichi Shimbun office and the editorial rooms contain many low tables. The editor-in-chief, in Japanese dress, introduced me to a score and more of brown-skinned gentlemen in Japanese gowns, who stopped writing up and down sheets of rice paper with camel's hair brushes as I entered. Tea was brought in in little cups holding as much as you could put in the smallest egg-cup. A cigarette was offered me and a box of charcoal put beside me to light it. We chatted for some time through the editor, who spoke English, on the changes in newspaper work going on over the world. I found my remarks published in the newspaper the next morning, and I wish I could give your readers here a quotation from them. It all looks the same to me, however, and I would be as liable to clip a section of a love story as of my interview had I not my guide to help me. As we talked the reporters worked busily away in the next room, and I saw the exchange editor in a blue dressing-gown clipping and marking with his red ink and brush the articles intended for the chief editor's eye. On the same floor and adjacent to the editorial room I heard the tramp of many feet, and I was told the noise came from the composing-room and that it was made by the dozen boys who were gathering type for the compositors. I looked in. The type was arranged in long cases standing on the floor propped against each other at an angle of forty-five degrees in the shape of a tent. These cases were six feet high and from fifty to sixty feet long, and they were packed with type in compartments like those of an American press-room. The printers do not select the type as with us. The words of an article are gathered before they begin to put it together for the paper. The type or words, for each type represents a word, are brought in little boxes like cigar-boxes, arranged in the order in which it is to go to the paper and the compositor sets it up in his composing-stick. It thus takes much leg work to get up a Japanese newspaper, and these boys have to run from one end of the room to the other many times to get the different ones of the five thousand characters which go to make up the Japanese vocabulary of letters.

A JAPANESE ILLUSTRATION.

Compositors are paid from $10 to $30 a month, and it will be interesting here to give the salaries of the men employed on a Japanese newspaper. The editor-in-chief receives $150 a month, and the other men connected with the editorial room range from that down to $30 a month. Reporters receive from $15 to $20 a month, and foreign correspondents get about $50 a month.

The leading papers of Japan use illustrations only when the occasion demands it. They publish pictures of noted men as they become prominent, and when the late nominating conventions were held the American legation here was besieged with reporters who wanted photographs of Thurman and Cleveland and of Harrison and Morton. They found out that Mr. Dunn, one of the Secretaries of the Legation, was a cousin of Senator Thurman, and they wanted as full a report about him as would be required from a gossipy American correspondent. The red bandana handkerchief puzzled them, and their versions of Senator Thurman's snuff-taking were as varied as their character. I doubt not that new characters were invented to express their ideas, for there is no snuff in Japan, and the handkerchiefs the natives use are of paper. I have been interviewed by a number of the reporters, and my talks have furnished several columns of printed hieroglyphics and a section of a Japanese paper would make a very interesting American newspaper illustration.

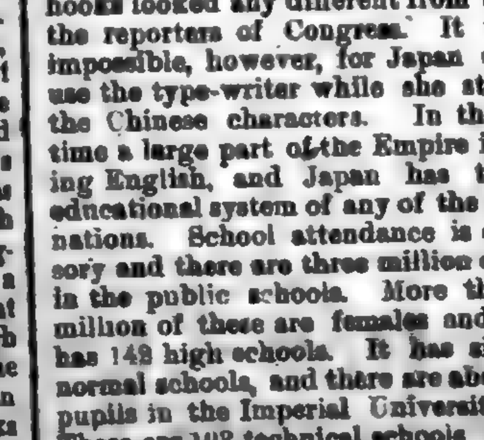
The cheaper papers of Japan run largely to wood-cuts and they publish great pictures of the most harrowing scenes. In one you may see a murder portrayed in which an almond-eyed girl is killed by an almond-eyed villain. In another is a love scene and in a third a scene of Japanese sorrow, and death is told in pen and ink that seems to weep. In all of these the Japanese dress and features are carried out and the illustration is on the whole about as good as that you find in American newspapers.

Japanese newspapers are cheap. The best dailies cost thirty cents a month or a cent and a half a copy. The papers do not make much money, still they have great influence. I was told by one of the men connected with the Government that the newspaper could make or overthrow a public man or minister in Japan, and public opinion seems to have as much weight here as it has in America. I find the newspaper men of Japan to be very bright men, and in fact there is no class of subjects which they do not discuss. Their editorial articles comprise finance, commerce, Christianity, and the thousand and one new subjects which are now interesting old Japan.

The papers are taken by all classes of people from the Mikado to the coolie, and the number of subscribers increases every day. Tokio has a press club which meets once a month and which frequently entertains foreign visitors.

There are three English papers published in Japan. These are all issued at Yokohama and their prices form quite a contrast with those of the Japanese newspapers. They cost twenty cents a copy, or from $18 to $25 a year, and the news in them is almost entirely Japanese and of other foreign countries rather than American.

There is a movement going on in Japan for the throwing away of Chinese characters and the adoption of the same alphabet that we use. There are two societies in Tokio in favor of some reform in this direction, and one of them wants to adopt the Japanese alphabet proper, which consists of forty-seven letters. There will probably be a change to one system or the other, and I have heard it predicted that English will eventually be the language of Japan.



A JAPANESE STENOGRAPHER.

I saw a shorthand writer in one of the offices here take down Japanese conversation, and I could not see that his pot hooks looked any different from those of the reporters of Congress. It will be impossible, however, for Japan ever to use the type-writer while she sticks to the Chinese characters. In the mean time a large part of the Empire is learning English, and Japan has the best educational system of any of the oriental nations. School attendance is compulsory and there are three million children in the public schools. More than one million of these are females and Japan has 149 high schools. It has sixty-five normal schools, and there are about 1800 pupils in the Imperial University here. There are 103 technical schools containing 8000 students, and 1853 schools are maintained by private funds. The future of Japan it is impossible to predict, save that with this system of education it can not but continue to advance.

WEST POINT cadets always attract attention and favorable comment from the public. A number of them, when in Washington, were thus described: "They were covered with buttons and so tightly laced and walked so straight that a ramrod looks puffy and humpbacked beside them."

The rich widows of Washington are Mrs. Craig Wadsworth, Mrs. Admiral Dahlgren, Mrs. Alexander Ray, Mrs. Meyers and Mrs. John Evans. Each of these ladies is worth more than a million.

It is said that there is, in an old Boston family, a carved oaken chest, which by will of its first owner descends only to the bride of the race who will fill it with house linen hemmed and embroidered wholly by her own fingers.

LONGEVITY.

Scientific men see no reason why the span of human life may not be extended to a round hundred years from the present limit of seventy to eighty years.

The age to which persons lived varies in Old Testament chronology.

From Adam's time to that of Methuselah and Noah, men are recorded as attaining to well nigh the age of 1,000 years. The Psalmist David, however, says: "The days of our age are threescore years and ten; and though men be so strong that they come to fourscore years, yet is their strength then but labor and sorrow; so soon passeth it away, and we are gone."

This wide margin of longevity, together with proper observance of mental, moral and physical laws, leads investigators to believe it is possible that human life might be made to increase in length of days to a full century, at least.

Moderation and regularity in eating, drinking and sleeping are conducive to longevity, and those who observe proper habits and use pure and efficacious remedies when sick, may accomplish immense labor with no apparent injury to themselves and without foreshortening their lives.

Hon. H. H. Warner, President of the Rochester, N. Y., Chamber of Commerce, and manufacturer of the celebrated Warner's Safe Cure, has devoted much time and research to this subject of longevity, and has arrived at the satisfactory conclusion that life may be prolonged and man's virile powers increased and preserved at the same time by rational and natural means. Thousands of persons are living to-day—enjoying the blessing of perfect health and vigor—who will testify to the almost magical efficacy of Warner's Safe Cure in restoring them to physical potency and to the normal type of constitution, after they had almost given up hope of life.

After middle age, many begin to lose their wonted vigor of body, and thereupon give way to inertness and useless repining. Yet all such have within reach that which both renews youth and contributes to the prolongation of life. Warner's marvelous Safe Cures are in every drug store, and are now regarded as standard specifics throughout the civilized world.

The strong desire to attain old age—meantime retaining the virile powers of body and mind—is necessarily connected with the respect paid to aged persons, for people would scarcely desire to be old, were the aged neglected or regarded with mere sufferance. That is a high civilization in which age is made a source of distinction. Of all marks of respect, that to age is most willingly paid, because every one who does homage to age may himself, eventually become an object of such homage.

Succored by Australian Cannibals.

The first expedition that crossed the Australian continent was under the leadership of my old friend Burke, says a correspondent of the Commercial Advertiser, with whom the name of Wills, his second in command, is inseparably connected. It went out under the guidance of the Royal Society of Victoria, and at the cost of the Victorian government. Burke formed his last depot at Cooper's Creek and left it in charge of his third officer, a German. He and Wills, with two others, Reid and King, then started for the coast of Carpentaria. They met with no trouble from the natives until they approached their destination, where the northern tribes became dangerous. But they gained their object and returned. Reid died on the way. The horses were killed and eaten, and when the three men reached Cooper's Creek they found that the German had deserted his post. They were too weak to go further. They lived for two weeks on provisions that had been left under a tree, and then lay down to die. At this juncture a tribe of natives came along. They had never seen a white man before, but recognizing the needs of Burke and his companions they provided them with food, fish that they caught near by, seeds, roots and herbs, upon which alone their own subsistence depended. They staid with Burke as long as the supply lasted, and left only when their own safety rendered it necessary. We may call such people savages if we will, but if as much nobility of character were displayed in every-day life among so-called civilized races I opine that the world would run much easier for many of us.

BARKEEPER: "Look here, you, I say, stop working that lunch counter." Tramp (reproachfully): "I ain't working; its a pleasure."

No Chemicals.

IN THESE DAYS when food adulteration is so common, it is a comfort to find an article for the table that is thoroughly reliable. Walter Baker & Co.'s breakfast cocoa is eminent in this limited class. No chemicals are used in its manufacture and it is absolutely pure. It forms moreover a delicious and healthful drink, as refreshing and more nutritious than tea or coffee, and free from the injurious effects that those beverages sometimes produce. And it is very cheap withal. The house of Walter Baker & Co. has maintained for more than 100 years a great and honored repute by the excellence and purity of its manufactures.

A Hundred Tons of Money.

It hardly seems possible that the money paid in one month for a ten-cent article, could, if pennies were used in payment, weigh one hundred tons. Yet one of our bright school boys has figured that this is true of Diamond Dyes. To judge from the stocks of our dealers in dye stuffs, Diamond Dyes own the field of package dyes, and are a complete success. Of course they have imitators. "Nothing is a success until imitated." But no one wants to risk a counterfeit when the genuine can be obtained at the same price. Three new colors have lately been added to the list of Diamond Dyes: Fast Stocking Black, Turkey Red for Cotton and Brown for Cotton. The manufacturers, Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt., will send colored samples of these new dyes, with book of directions, to any address, free of charge. These additions seem to have made the line so complete that any shade can be matched with some color of Diamond Dyes. The beautiful sample book of shaded colors, lately sent to all dealers in dyes, will delight the eye of any lady. "It's easy to dye with Diamond Dyes," is so absolutely true that home dyeing is no longer a difficult and disagreeable task. Almanacs, with their hints as to proper times for different work, tells us that now is the time for Spring dyeing. This, together with the thought of that hundred tons of money, leads us to ask what school boy can figure how many thousands of ladies are now saying that this is the time to use Diamond Dyes.

Catarrh Cured.

A clergyman, after years of suffering from that loathsome disease, Catarrh, and vainly trying every known remedy, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Prof. J. A. Lawrence, 88 Warren St., N. Y., will receive the recipe free of charge.

Inherited Blood Poison.

How many people there are whose distress from sores, aches, pains and eruptive tendencies are due to inherited blood poison. Bad blood passes from parent to child, and it therefore is the duty of husband and wife to keep their blood pure. This is easily accomplished by a timely use of B. B. B. (Botanic Blood Balm). Send to Blood Balm Co., Atlanta, for book of most convincing proof.

James Hill, Atlanta, Ga., writes: "My two sons were afflicted with blood poison, which doctors said was hereditary. They both broke out in sores and eruptions which B. B. B. promptly controlled and finally cured completely."

Mrs. S. M. Williams, Sandy, Texas, writes: "My three poor afflicted children, who inherited blood poison, have improved rapidly after a use of B. B. B. It is a Godsend."

J. R. Wilson, Glen Alpine Station, N. C., Feb. 13, 1888, writes: "Bone and blood poison forced me to have my leg amputated, and on the stump there came a large ulcer, which grew worse every day until doctors gave me up to die. I only weighed 120 pounds when I began to take B. B. B., and 12 bottles increased my weight to 180 pounds and made me sound and well. I never knew what good health was before."

Should Change.

George—"Eh? You got engaged last night? Gus, my old friend, tell me how you did it."

Gus—"Really, I hardly know myself. Couldn't help it. Just like falling down stairs. I was on the edge of a proposal, she gave me a push, and there I was—engaged."

"Well, I haven't had any such experience. Every time I try to start, my knees knock together, and my teeth chatter, and my tongue cleaves to the roof of my mouth. I've tried a dozen times to pop the question to Miss De Pink and slumped every time."

"And did she let you slump?"

"Yes."

"You are courting the wrong girl."

A great many people feel themselves gradually failing. They don't know just what is the matter, but they suffer from a combination of indescribable aches and pains, which each month seem to grow worse. The only sure remedy known that will counteract this feeling and restore perfect health is Brown's Iron Bitters. By rapid assimilation it purifies the blood, drives out disease, gives health and strength to every portion reached by the circulatory system, renews wasted tissues and restores robust health and strength.

John Quincy Adams made only four removals during his term in the Presidency.

Consumption, Wasting Diseases,

And General Debility. Doctors disagree as to the relative value of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites; the one supplying strength and flesh, the other giving nerve power, and acting as a tonic to the digestive and entire system. But in SCOTT'S EMULSION of Cod Liver Oil, with Hypophosphites the two are combined, and the effect is wonderful. Thousands who have derived no permanent benefit from other preparations have been cured by this. Scott's Emulsion is perfectly palatable and is easily digested by those who cannot tolerate plain Cod Liver Oil.

CUPID'S HARNESS.

Most women naturally look forward to matrimony as their proper sphere in life, but they should constantly bear in mind that a fair, rosy face, bright eyes, and a healthy, well-developed form, are the best passports to a happy marriage. All those wasting disorders, weaknesses, and functional irregularities peculiar to their sex, destroy beauty and attractiveness and make life miserable. An unfailing specific for these maladies is to be found in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrappers, and faithfully carried out for many years. $1.00 per Bottle, or Six Bottles for $5.00.

Fatality of the Fidelity Bank Failure.

It would seem as though a kind of grim fate hung over everybody connected in any way with the unfortunate Fidelity bank of Cincinnati, either with its failure a couple of years ago or the subsequent proceedinys affecting it. It was something like what has been called "Guiteau's curse," that is supposed by some to impend over the personages participating in the trial of the President's assassin, though in the case of the Fidelity bank no one appears to have strewn any curses around promiscuously. In the first place, Benjamin E. Hopkins, the president of the bank, who was sentenced to seven years imprisonment and recently pardoned, died a few days after his release. E. L. Harper, the vice-president, was given a ten years' sentence and went insane. Amzi Baldwin, the cashier, committed suicide during the trial. Edward Hicks, a clerk in the bank, died shortly after the trial. C. A. Hinch, another clerk, broke his leg during the trial. James Siefert, the bank janitor, who carried the books of the institution to and from the court house each day during the trial, ran directly in front of a moving locomotive one day and was badly hurt. Joseph Harrison, the office boy of the bank, was accidentally shot in the eye during the trial. The mother of J. K. Yowell, a clerk, died during the trial. C. R. Eves the secret service officer who did considerable work in the conviction of the bank officers, has died since the trial. Edwin Watson, a lawyer sent out by the Attorney-General to take part in the proceedings, dropped dead in his hotel in Cincinnati during the trial. The father of United States District Attorney Burnett died the night after the trial, as did also the wife of F. N. Hays, the bank expert. The wife of E. W. Kittridge, counsel for the bank receivers, died during the trial, and the wife of Judge Sage, who presided, was taken so seriously ill during the proceedings that the trial had to be postponed ten days. Josie Holmes, who figured conspicuously in the bank affairs, was let off without sentence, and is now learning to be a type-writer.—Washington Star.

ALABAMA.

There is rejoicing at Birmingham among the white Republican Protective Tariff League, over the announcement that R. L. Houston had been appointed postmaster. Houston is about twenty-five years old, and is a prominent young business man.

GEORGIA.

Henry W. Grady was chosen president of the Board of Directors of the Confederate Home at Atlanta.

Glenn McCord, of Atlanta, who was a witness in the case against Eddleman for murder, and through whose testimony the prisoner was freed, was convicted on Thursday of perjury.

Capt. Wilder, of the steamship City of San Antonio, arrived at Brunswick, and reports seeing a three-masted schooner dismasted and waterlogged about forty miles northeast of Frying Pan Shoals.

The first fruits of the work of detectives recently appointed by the Atlanta authorities, is the arrest of several colored boys and the recovery of over 50 fine overcoats. Soloshin, a pawnbroker, who is charged with being a receiver, is under arrest as well. Some of the new detectives are said to be colored men.

In Houston superior court, Henrietta and Kate Allen, colored, were tried jointly for an attempt to murder by poisoning. The former was convicted and sentenced for five years. The jury made a mistrial in the case of the latter. The poisoning was by putting arsenic in coffee, at the residence of S. F. Dasher, and two persons, Mr. Dasher, brother and an employe on the place, came near losing their lives.

The colored population of Augusta is stirred up about Rev. J. W. Dungee, of the Union Baptist church who brought to Augusta Mrs. H. E. Allen, colored, of Oberlin, O., a music teacher, to organize a music class among the colored people of Augusta. In his home he received her, and there she remained until about three weeks ago, when she preferred charges before the deacons against Rev. Dungee. Rev. J. W. Dungee came to Augusta about two years ago, and has proved himself a zealous worker for his church and congregation. He is ambitious for the advancement of his race, but is said to display at times in religious matters a spirit of intolerance.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The funeral of Mrs. Teodore B. Lyman, wife of the Protestant Episcopal bishop were held at Raleigh on Monday. Her body was taken to Baltimore, Md., for burial.

Very heavy rains fell Monday, and came in time to prevent more damage by the forest fires around Raleigh, which had proved the most disastrous on record. It is estimated that an area of one hundred miles has been burned over. The losses of private property are large, while some of the finest turpentine lands are ruined for years. The rain proved of great value to the crops, and was needed in all parts of the state.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

The long and bitter contest between the medical school and the medical college for the control of the Charleston hospital was settled by the City Council on Tuesday. The Council, by a vote of 18 to 9, decided to renew the contract with the medical college until March, 1892.

TENNESSEE.

The Southern Stove Manufacturers Association held a meeting in Chattanooga on Wednesday. Prices were raised on the line of cheap cooking stoves. On all other lines remain about the same.

The Chattanooga City Council supplemented Baron Erlanger's and the Queen & Crescent Route gift of $9,000 for a public hospital at Chattanooga by an appropriation of $10,000 for the same purpose.

VIRGINIA.

One of the most horrible accidents that ever occurred in Brocton county happened Wednesday. Perry Wiere, a well-known citizen, was felling a tree, when it broke across a stump, demolishing his house and killing his wife and three children.

THE PROMISED LAND.

Capt. Haynes, commanding the United States cavalry at Arkansas City, Kansas, on Thursday, received instructions from the War Department to permit entries to the Cherokee strip; the South bridge across the Arkansas river, the most direct route in the strip, being just three miles from the border. The road is narrow, with a hedge on one side and a wire fence on the other. The rain has made the mud hub deep. Before dark this three miles of road between the bridge and the strip was blocked with wagons and was impassable either way. Many families slept on the wagons. There was hesitancy about the start. "Why should we wait any longer?" called out a Kansas City man, who was present as a spectator. "A few minutes makes no difference. Follow me," and drove across the line upon the reservation. A tremendous shout went up from the boomers, and they went forward and over the line. The shout was taken up all along the line, and the entire cavalcade moved forward. A. Williams, from Chautauqua county, Kansas, with his wife and five children, was the first settler to follow the carriage of the Kansas City man. Soon one thousand white covered wagons were in motion. The caravan had traveled one mile into the Cherokee strip when a sergeant from Capt. Hanes galloped across the plain. His approach was a signal for consternation among the settlers, and fear that to start a few moments ahead of time would cause the millitary to turn the boomers back. Turning to the man who had assumed authority for the early start, the settlers demanded that he intercede. He explained to the sergeant that he bore orders from Capt. Hayes to give the boomers the word to proceed. A shout greeted the order and the long file of wagons along the Ponca trail again moved. From an elevation five solid miles of wagons could be seen, and as the caravan wound over the undulating prairie, it presented a sight probably never to be seen again. Every face beamed with expectant pleasure, and there was not the slightest disorder. Perched on a cracker box in the first of the ten wagons from Kingman, Kas., Dan Sikes flung an American flag to the breeze. As far as it could be seen, it was hailed with patriotic shouts. For three hours the wagon crossed the strip line and moved slowly toward the promised land. On the outside of almost every wagon, strapped to the side, were plows, household goods and farming implements. Extra horses and bunches of cattle followed the wagons, often driven by women and children. One farmer had built a house from the bed of his wagon. It was shingled and a stove pipe leading from the modern cook stove made a complete apartment. It is reported that one hundred of the tough element started at midnight for the border to sell whiskey and cigars to those who had any money left. Plunder will be their next move. United States Commissioner Bensell and Capt. Hayes allowed two men to construct bridges at Salt creek and Chillicoco creek, and for their compensation they charge the boomers twenty-five cents to cross. The first serious affray among the boomers occurred about ten miles north of Kiowa. Two boomers claimed a certain quarter section, and a man named George Kramer undertook to put the other, Charlie Heidke, off the land. Both men drew revolvers, and Kramer was shot and instantly killed. Heidke was shot through the groin and may die. Oklahoma Harry Hill and ten of the oldest boomers in Kansas left for the territory from Wichita, and Hill has not since been heard from. The last heard of him was from Purcel. He left that village Sunday evening, saying that he would ride over to Oklahoma city. Monday noon his dog was found shot through the head. A reward of $500 has been offered for his discovery, and this will be greatly increased. President Harrison might, in case of serious disturbance, declare martial law over the territory; but this could not be done in advance of a breach of peace, and the machinery of the government would, it is feared, be too slow in meeting the great emergency that may arise. The only army regulation on the subject provides for interference by the troops in an emergency only in case of interruption to the carriage of mail, or assaults upon United States property, but under a somewhat strained construction it may form a reason assigned for the use of troops to prevent or restrain rioting or bloodshed in the territory.

Ex-Governor Robinson, of Massachusetts, has declined to serve as one of the commissioners to negotiate with the Cherokee Indians for the cession of their lands in the Indian territory to the United States.

Mrs. Febiger, wife of Rear Admiral Febiger, was injured Sunday evening by being thrown from her carriage on F street, died Wednesday without having regained consciousness since she was hurt.

From 100 to 150 fourth-class postmasters are now being appointed daily. Of these about one-third are to fill existing vacancies. Another third are appointed in the places of postmasters removed for cause and the other third succeed postmasters who have served about four years.

The National Academy of Sciences held a meeting Wednesday morning, and the following officers were elected: President, O. C. Marsh, of New Haven, Conn., re-elected president for the term of six years, and Prof. F. P. Langley, of the Smithsonian Institution, vice-president for a similar term.

The charge d'affaires ad interim of Corea, in a note to the Department of State, says that the newspaper accounts of the famine in Corea have been greatly exaggerated. It appears that, owing to the scarcity of rice in the southern districts, the import duties were removed from all food products, and cargoes of rice were purchased in Japan for distribution among the sufferers by the express direction of his majesty the king.

James Tanner, the new commissioner of pensions, has made a decision which will place 20,000 new colored pensioners on the rolls. It was brought about by a petition from a negro mother. She and her son had been slaves owned by the same master. The son escaped, enlisted in the Federal army and was killed. After the War the mother claimed a pension because her son had been killed in the War. The sum expended in the payment of these pensions will in the long run be utilized in building up the South.

The President made the following appointments: Robert P. Porter, of New York, to be superintendent of census; William H. Calkins, of Washington Territory, to be associate justice of the supreme court of the territory of Washington; John B. Donnelly, of Louisiana, to be marshal of the United States for the Eastern district of Louisiana. Robert P. Porter, the new superintendent of the census, is an Englishman by birth, but has lived in this country for many years, and is a naturalized citizen.

The colored people of the District celebrated Emancipation Day in orthodox fashion, on Tuesday by a parade in the afternoon and public meetings in the evening. The parade was an unusually creditable affair. The paraders were well dressed and orderly, kept in good line and altogether showed a decided improvement over the exhibitions of the colored marchers in previous Emancipation parades. The chief marshal was a clergyman, Rev. Robert Johnson, and his managment was fine. The paraders, as the passed the White House, were reviewed by the President and all the members of his cabinet except Secretaries Blaine and Tracy.

The President made the following appointments Tuesday: William P. Hepburn, of Iowa, to be Solicitor of the Treasury. The commissions of three postmasters, nominated by Mr. Cleveland and confirmed by the Senate, were signed by President Harrison, and forwarded to them. One was that of Leroy L. Brinkley, Edenton, N. C. The following postoffice inspectors on mail depredations have been removed: James E. Alexander, Atlanta, Ga.; James H. Griffin, Atlanta, Ga., and Romus F. Stuart, Chicago. Francis M. Goar, of Mississippi, and George W. Deatherage, of St. Louis, Mo., postoffice inspectors on mail depredations, have resigned.

A package containing $15,000 in gold, mysteriously disappeared from the office of the Northern Pacific Express company in Brainard, Minn., on Thursday.

Vice Admiral Tchikkatcheff, of the Russian navy, has submitted to the czar a report on the condition of the navy. In it he urges the immediate construction of a number of cruisers.

At West Farms, a farming hamlet, lying midway between Westfield and Montgomery, and five miles from Westfield Centre, Mass., Joseph King a wealthy and well-known citizen, 78 years of age, was shot and killed by Edgar King, his eldest son, and the house fired and burned.

A gentleman who has been stopping at the Hotel Richelieu in Chicago, Ill., and was registered as Sidney Walters, committed suicide Thursday, in his room by taking morphine. He was an Englishman, and a newspaper man of considerable prominence in London. He has been engaged in newspaper work in Philadelphia, Pittsburg and Chicago.

A car was started on the West Seventh street line in St. Paul, Minn., guarded by four patrol wagons filled with policemen, and ten mounted officers. The procession started off amidst hoots and derisive cheers from a large crowd which had assembled. Forty-one cowboys from ranches near Garden City, Kansas, left Kansas City for Minneapolis, to take the places of the striking street car men of that city.

A mail car on the Lake Shore road, which left Chicago, Ill., on Thursday night, was robbed before it had gotten out of the city limits. The thief secured a pouch containing about 100 pieces of registered mail for Cleveland, Ohio, and was rifling the contents in an empty box car when detected by a watchman. As the watchman looked into the car the man jumped out through a door on the opposite side and escaped. He had opened about a dozen registered letters and succeeded in getting away with their contents.

A disastrous wreck occurred at Corapolis, Pa., on the Pittsburg & Lake Frie Railway, Thursday. As the express was speeding along at a thirty-five miles an hour rate the locomotive jumped the track while passing a switch, dragging the baggage, mail, smoker and three coaches after it, the whole train except the sleeper, being thrown over the bank, turning twice in the descent. Mail Agent Blackmore and a number of passengers sustained slight injuries, but no one was seriously hurt. The baggage car caught fire almost as soon as the train left the rails, but the flames were quickly extinguished by water from a ditch.

THEY ARE DAISIES.

The most noted of the women boomers, Oklahoma way, is Nellie Bruce, the daughter of an old boomer. She caught the Oklahoma fever from her father and left a Kansas district school, in which she was teaching, to join him. He had built a neat little frame building in Crutch county, near Oklahoma City, to receive her; but the day before her arrival the Indian scouts discovered and burned it. The old man met her with tears in his eyes and related his misfortune. With true western grit the girl immediately set to work to build a dugout, well concealed in the woods. Bruce was driven out of Oklahoma, but she was not found and remained for months in her home, surrounded by her chickens. Pretty and dashing, she was the idol of the boomers, and death would be the portion of the man who treated her with disrespect. Before Lieut. Carson's last raid Nellie fled, and, returning to Kansas, gathered around her quite a party of schoolmates—mostly schoolmarms. She intends to lead them into Oklahoma. She has a claim near her own picked out for each, and they will thus form quite a community. Another interesting woman, Nannitta Daisy, arrived on the ground Tuesday. Her home is in Louisville, Ky., where she was employed upon daily papers as special correspondent. She was an applicant for state librarian in Kentucky, but was beaten by only one vote. Chagrined at this defeat, she tried Washington, and became well-known there for her wit and eccentricity. Securing the recommendation of the Kentucky delegation and several senators, she was given charge of a government school in the territory. There she became interested in Oklahoma and wrote descriptive letters of the country for the eastern press. On one of the finest claims in the North Canadian valley waves a flag bearing the following: "This is Nannitta Daisy's claim; look out!" "Will you risk living there by yourself?" was asked her. "Will I?" she replied, and she laid on the table before her a brace of handsome ivory-handled revolvers and two gold [illegible]

A veteran soldiers' colony left Wichita, Kansas, on Tuesday, for Oklahoma. Seven hundred covered wagons were in line, all showing inscriptions in keeping with the occasion and the journey. Over 2,000 boomers were in the wagons.

Three bales of cotton were sold to the highest bidders on the cotton exchange in New York for the benefit of the National Confederate Soldiers' Home at Austin, Tex. The cotton came from Galveston. It averaged 13½ cents a pound.

Dr. Samuel W. Gross, one of the most eminent practitioners, of Philadelphia, Pa., died on Tuesday, aged fifty-two years. The deceased was a son of the late Prof. Samuel D. Gross, and succeeded his father in the chair of surgery in Jefferson college.

A portion of the works of the Schaghticoke Powder Co., near Troy, N. Y., was blown up Wednesday night by an explosion of 300 pounds of material in the mixing vat. Charles Rose was killed and Marvin Bennoway received injuries which will be fatal.

The London Standard's Vienna correspondent says: "Sugar again rose on Wednesday. The Prague and Austrian trade journals declare that the rise is due to scarcity and the prospect of an international convention abolishing bounties, but it is believed that the chief cause is the existence of an international sugar trust on the American model."

A blast fired Wednesday at the Masonic Temple excavation, in the heart of Duluth, Minn., revealed a vein of copper bearing rock of exceeding richness. The vein was at first thought to extend only a short distance and to contain only a few pounds of rock that would assay 65 per cent. of copper, but was found later that it is much more extensive, and it is considered a rich and valuable find.

At Butler, Pa., James Fields was fatally shot by his wife. Mrs. Fields was reading a book and her husband ordered her to come to bed. She refused to do so, when he got up and struck her. She went to the bureau drawer and took out a revolver, telling him if he hit her again she would shoot him. He then struck her in the face, when she fired the revolver, inflicting a fatal wound.

A general strike is imminent in the Jefferson county, Pennsylvania, coal regions. The authorities at Adrian mines have offered their employes 35 cents instead of 40 cents, the present rate. The miners have declined the reduction, and if an attempt is made to force it upon them, as is extremely probable, all of the other companies will make similar reductions, and the result will be a general strike, involving several thousands of miners.

The Beet Sugar Co., was incorporated Wednesday at San Francisco, Cal., with a capital of $5,000,000, with Louis Schloss, A. L. Cutts, F. Ehrmann, Claus Spreckels and John D. Spreckels as directors, the last two holding half of the stock. The object is to erect large sugar refineries at various points on the coast in addition to one already established at Watsonville, California, in expectation of refining 50,000 or 60,000 tons of sugar a year.

A BRUTAL POLICEMAN.

Prof. Harrison has been committed to Londonderry (Ireland) jail for trial at the court of sessions on the charge of assisting besieged tenants at Gweedore. While Prof. Harrison was being conveyed to jail he was heartily cheered by the populace. The sergeant who was in charge of the policemen who arrested Prof. Harrison, ordered his men to "beat the devil out of them," and Fathers [illegible], Boyle, [illegible], O'Brien and [illegible], and a reporter of the London [illegible]

SUMMARY MEASURES.

Mayor Grant's secretary received a certified copy of Judge Wallace's order dissolving the injunction procured by the Western Union Telegraph Co., against the mayor and board of electrical control in New York City. The order was sent on Tuesday, to the department of public works. One of the inspectors was on hand with a corps of axmen, expecting the war signal. Before eleven o'clock the poles at Fourteenth street and Union Square were being cut down. Hundreds of people quickly gathered to witness the novel sight of men cutting down telegraph poles. Two gangs, one on each side of the street, attacked the poles. Another company of strong-armed woodchoppers made an attack on the poles on Sixth Avenue. They commenced on both sides of the avenue at Twenty-Third street, and leveled to the ground all poles on the avenue as far as Fifty-eighth street. The mayor sent to the commissioner of public works a letter notifying him of the poles and wires that were to come down. Broadway was fairly well lit up with gas, but it was pale. The only relief to the absolute gloom of Madison and Union squares, were the lights in the surrounding streets. Not a flicker lit the darkness within the parks. It was a strange scene and the talk of the town. It was an object of interest, which drew many spectators to the spot to see the transformation.

GOT FOOLED.

A bold and nearly successful attempt was made at noon Tuesday to rob the State bank in Minneapolis, Minn. Two men went into the bank when only two employes were present. One covered the employes with a revolver, while the other vaulted over the railing and thrust about $8,000 on the teller's table into a valise. At this moment, a depositor entered, and this forced the uncovering of the assistant cashier, who rushed to the safe to get his revolver. The robber threw the valise to his accomplice, who dashed into the president's room by mistake. He then jumped through a window and fled. Meanwhile, the other man had also escaped. There was a wild rush, in which three or four policemen joined, and finally the two robbers were caught and lodged in jail.

WANTS PEACE.

Prince Bismarck, of Germany, has issued an order in which he defines the responsibilities of commanders of warships with respect to the request of consuls abroad. The chancellor directs the commanders to examine for themselves legal and political grounds for such a request, unless the consul produces special authority from the German foreign office. As a reason for his action, Prince Bismarck refers to the recent events in Samoa, where, he says, the unauthorized request resulted in great loss of life and injury to German interests, and the danger was thereby incurred of Germany becoming embroiled with a friendly nation, with no conclusive reason existing for the intervention of armed forces.

LOCAL OPTION.

The Davis local option bill passed the Delaware House on Tuesday by a party vote of 14 to 6. It divides the state into four districts—the city of Wilmington being one; Kent, Sussex and Rural Newcastle counties respectively the other three. A local option election may be ordered on the petition of one-tenth of the voters, the result of such an election being unchangeable in the regular way for three years. The bill cannot pass the Senate.

As a grand Trunk freight train was crossing the Canadian Pacific track at Brampton, Ontario, a freight train on the latter road dashed into it, cutting its way through and never stopping. Not a wheel of the Canadian Pacific train left the track. The engineer and fireman jumped and escaped uninjured. The brakeman ran forward, setting the brakes, and, on reaching the engine, brought the train to a stand. The train had then run two and a half miles past the scene of the accident. No one was hurt, but considerable damage to property was done.

GLADSTONE'S MAN AHEAD.

An election was held in Rochester, England on Tuesday, to fill the parliamentary seat made vacant by the resignation of Col. Hughes-Hallett. The balloting resulted in favor of Mr. Huggessen, the Gladstonian candidate, who polled 1,655 votes against 1,580 votes for Mr. Davies, the liberal unionist candidate.

APRIL CROPS REPORTS.

The Condition of Winter Grain and Farm Animals.

The crop report of the Department of Agriculture for April relates to the condition of winter grain and of farm animals as they go out of winter quarters. There was little winter protection, except for a short time in mid-winter, in the latitude of heavy winter snows; consequently the more northern breadths are somewhat brown in color, and patches in wet soils are winter killed. Yet the temperature has been so mild, with so few sudden extremes, that the present condition is very good. The plants are generally well rooted, and have been growing, over a large part of the area, through the winter. The general average condition is 94, nearly the same as the April condition of the crop of 1886, which fell at harvest to 87.8; that of 1888, 82, and that of the previous year, 88.1. The April condition of the large crop of 1884 was 96.4, going up to 98 at harvest.

The rye crop is also in good condition. The general average is [illegible].

The mild winter has been favorable to farm animals, which are generally in high condition.
